A brief illustration of how the carcass of a whale is handled when the flesh is to be used for food, will be found in "Reel Life No. 63." Here we see the dead whale hauled onto the dock where it is cut into pieces. We learn also that whale steak sells in some of the Pacific coast cities for 12 or 12½ cents a pound.

"The Life of a Moth" (Educational-Ditmars).

Raymond L. Ditmars with his remarkable ability to demonstrate interesting points in animal life has this time told us a great deal about the life of a moth. He has illustrated in this film the difference between the moth and the butterfly, especially with respect to its mode of coming into existence. We also learn that the moth has feathered antennae while the butterfly has feelers of a different type. Wonderful closeup studies of moths of different kinds taken from fifteen minutes to an hour apart are also included. The studies of the tropical moth showing its cocoon hung to a branch of a tree in such a manner that the typhoons cannot harm it is a remarkable sight. We learn that nature has further provided for the safety of the little caterpillar within the cocoon by leaving an aperture at the top from which it may emerge when ready, and a smaller aperture in the bottom of the cocoon so that any water which may have gotten into it may escape again. The scenes showing the cocoons of moths hanging to snow-laden trees in the dead of winter serve as an illustration of their ability to withstand the cold. Here the caterpillar develops within a double jacket from which he emerges in the early spring. Some of the beautiful full-fledged specimens shown are the Atlas moth of India, which measures 11 inches, the Cynthia moth of the United States, and the American Luna moth.

The Educational Films Corporation of America is fortunate in having in its possession a film of this quality on a subject so difficult of presentation, and the clarity of illustration and interesting manner in which it has been pictured are a tribute to Mr. Ditmars' clever handling of such matters.

"A Trip to the Moon"

ONE OF the most interesting of the Mo-Toy Comedies which are being released by the Peter Pan Film Corporation is that entitled "A Trip to the Moon." Children especially will be pleased with it and will no doubt have perfect faith in its authenticity.

Jacko, a toy monkey, and his friend likewise a "toy" person, take unwarranted liberties with an aeroplane which in a resentful mood carries them far beyond the pale of earth, into the region of the moon and stars, finally leaving them with a jolt in the heart of moonland. Here they still retain their wonted boldness, and in so doing find many interesting things. Finally what looks like a volcano explodes and they suddenly find themselves on their own back-door step again.

At the last meeting of the Executive Board of the National Council of Women, on motion of Janet Simons Harris, president of the Council of Jewish Women, who is a representative in the Members' Council of the Clean Picture and Play League of America, the Executive Board adopted a resolution endorsing the movement for clean pictures and appointed a committee of three to investigate the subject and to report their findings at the annual convention at Washington on December 6th. Mrs. Harris declined the chairmanship but consented to serve on the committee, which consists of Mrs. Frances E. Burns, Grand Commander of the Ladies of the Maccabees, chairman; Mrs. Janet Simons Harris, President Council of Jewish Women, and Mrs. Alonzo Miller, President of the College Women's Association. This committee represents the 7,000,000 members embraced in the Council of Women of the United States.

Vermont, which was reported in the last issue of the Bulletin of the Affiliated Committee for Better Films as seeking a star on the map of the affiliated committees, now has one. It is located at Montpelier. This city is one of seven communities having Better Film committees which sought affiliation in the month of June. The others were York, Neb.; Lafayette, Ind.; Savannah, Ga.; La Grande, Ore.; Owensboro, Ky.; West Haven, Conn.

In order to create a greater interest in the community spirit a number of citizens of West Hoboken headed by Father Conrad of St. Joseph's church, and with the co-operation of Mayor Eckert, arranged for a civic and patriotic week, which began Monday, July 16, in the Passion Play theater at Central avenue.

During the week the Lincoln Cycle was exhibited, and was in fact the chief feature of the festival. Each day was dedicated to a different activity in connection with the present international situation, and prominent public men and women addressed the audience. Each evening a float symbolic of the situation which confronts the country, and embodying "The Spirit of '76," ws drawn through the city preceded by a trumpeter sounding "The Call to Arms."

A few more films which have been used successfully in selected programs and are recommended in the July Bulletin of the Affiliated Committees for Better Films are: "Southern Justice," Bluebird; "A Small Town Girl," Fox; "The Duchess of Doubt," Metro; "Annie-For-Spite," Mutual; "Freckles," Paramount; "An Amateur Orphan," Pathe, and "Bawbs of the Blue Ridge," Triangle.

CHANGES IN MUTUAL BRANCH OFFICES.

Fred G. Sliter, formerly salesman at the Mutual Albany branch, has been appointed manager of that office to succeed W. F. Golderman, who resigned, effective July 7.

G. W. Whitney, salesman at the Denver branch, has been appointed to succeed Manager Coughlin at the Butte subbranch. Wilbur G. Seib, booker at Salt Lake branch, has been appointed a traveling salesman out of that office.

The 46th street, New York, office of the Mutual has been moved temporarily to the 23d street office. The quarters occupied by the 46th street branch are undergoing alterations, upon the completion of which they will be occupied by a consolidation of the 23d and 46th street branches.

Amy Leah Dennis

AMY LEAH DENNIS, aged 16 years, has been chosen leading lady for Lew Fields in a Selig feature play, production of which is to be started immediately under direction of J. A. Richmond. Amy Leah Dennis made an immediate hit in the Selig comedies now being released in K-E-S-E service. Mr. Fields saw her work, admired her wonderful enthusiasm, and requested that she be chosen to support him in the Selig play. It is predicted that Miss Dennis will win added laurels for herself in the forthcoming production.

Amy Leah Dennis.

Miss Dennis was known to the home folks in eastern Pennslyvania as "a gosh-darned entertainin' gal." At the meeting of the Ladies' Art Embroidery Club she would recite "Sheridan's Ride," and "It was the Schooner Nesperus." Later on the church socials starred her, and the eighth grade school programs on Friday afternoons were never complete without Amy Leah's recitations. Her "Little Orphan Annie" has been termed the best thing ever heard in our school. It was natural that Amy Leah take a course in a school of expression. What more natural than the fact that she graduated to the stage, and appeared in stock companies and in New York productions? What more natural than that Amy Leah with her "pep" and her wonderful expression, and with the added incentive that the camera took to her like a duck takes to water—what more logical than that she enter the movies via the Selig Polyscope Company?

And now, at the age of sixteen, Amy Leah Dennis becomes leading lady for Lew Fields in an elaborate and costly film play. And Amy Leah Dennis deserves the honor at that. She works had, and applies her talents. And the home folks are not surprised. A picture post card from Ezra Allmonz, village postmaster, has so stated.

EUGENE O'BRIEN MARY PICKFORD'S NEW LEADING MAN.

Mary Pickford's leading man in her newest Artcraft picture, "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," is Eugene O'Brien, the popular young actor whose wide stage and screen experiences and handsome appearance makes him an ideal selection for this honor. On the speaking stage Mr. O'Brien appeared with such well known favorites as Elsie Janis, Ethel Barrymore, Margaret Illington, Fritzi Scheff and others of equal standing in the theatrical profession. In motion pictures his most notable portrayals were those evidenced in Famous Players productions in which he created countrywide attention for his exceptional work. The new Pickford-Artcraft picture discloses him in the well known character of Adam Ladd, Rebecca's benefactor.

ONLY CLEAR PLAYS FOR PARALTA.

Robert T. Kane, vice president of Paralta Plays, Inc., has outlined the literary material that will be accorded careful consideration by Bessie Barriscale and J. Warren Kerrigan for the productions of their respective companies. He pointed out that while a staff of writers is jointly employed by both organizations, each is ready to encourage every author in the hope of receiving available stories.

"One thing we will not tolerate," declared Mr. Kane, "is the unclean story. We want nothing that borders on the risque, regardless of how prolific its advertising possibilities may be. It is the intention of both Miss Barriscale and Mr. Kerrigan to be presented only in narratives that any one may sit through and enjoy.

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard

IN my opinion (shared with many others) "A Tale of Two Cities" is a screen classic and good for reissue generations hence. It is beyond criticism and reflects credit on William Fox for producing it; on Director Frank Lloyd, who wrote the scenario, and on the entire cast. One feels quite sure that in a Fox production we will see mobs well handled. Here, too, we get a splendid adaptation of a famous book which my literary friends declare to be Dickens' masterpiece. William Farnum, while too old for the part, nevertheless made us forget all that through sheer personality and naturalness. I do not think, as critics do, that there is too much footage. All depends on how a picture clutches you and holds attention. To my mind Josef Swickard stood out strong—next to the star, and Farnum gives us his best screen work thus far. No dramatization of any of the Dickens books is so strong as this, with the added advantage of having a big outdoors to visualize. A woman near at hand said she felt that the baby who was run over must have been a dead one sure, and I wonder how that was done! A man had the audacity to say "guess they doped the kid."

* * *

Through a slip of the types I was made to say that "The Jaguar's Claws" featured "immortality." Nay, nay, reader—quite the reverse—"immorality," a "bird of another color."

* * *

Good for William Brady to give June Elvidge more prominence, for in "The Price of Pride" she more than makes good, fulfilling her promise in "The Crimson Dove." Here we get Carlyle Blackwell earning his salary all right, playing double and well, too. The plot was full of meat of the right sort concerning two generations, the principals lining up well at the close. Frank Mills is some actor with his poise and handsome features. Some of the young things around me got a little impatient waiting for the kids to grow up, depriving them of a look at Blackwell until the play was well on toward the third reel. The house laughed long over the working out of the school pranks and fudge episode. The melodramatic incidents were not far-fetched. The title editor must have had a day off, for we read about "development," a too common error. On the same program at the Park we had "The Greatest Power" with quite the best work of Ethel Barrymore and in an up to date picture as to theme. One man in the cast whose name has escaped me is the counterpart of President Wilson, especially about the eyes. I have not yet seen P. H. Westphal, whom Essanay has secured for "The Man Who Was Afraid," but I venture to say he has nothing on the Metro man. Edwin Carewe deserves much for the patriotic touches he is giving us here when the G. A. R. veteran points to his badge and says to the pacifist: "You cannot arbitrate Liberty and Democracy." Then when Miss Barrymore calls attention to Betsy Ross and Julia Ward Howe we get the two in scenes which stir the house to applause. Some of the titles were rocky. Frank Currier was listed "Courier."

* * *

It was good again to see Myrtle Stedman and playing with "Wally" Reid under the Morosco banner. Somehow we felt that they might have been given a better play to work out with and less wild and woolly stuff and dance hall orgies. There was suggestiveness, too, in the first reel following the marriage and this jarred considerably. We were glad, as the play turned out, that the bride was able to stave off hubby. "The World Apart" as a title did not "fit the crime" either physically or as a figure of speech.

* * *

Over here we regret deeply the death of Walter Hitchcock, who made himself a favorite when with the Metro company with Ethel Barrymore or Emily Stevens; also with Betty Nansen, Kitty Gordon, and elsewhere in other companies. His was a compelling personality carrying much dignity and ease of manner. Many of us recall his work on the speaking stage in support of Margaret Anglin, especially his work with Anna Nilsson in "The Moral Code" will not soon be forgotten. He was a native of Maine and came to this state fifteen years or so ago and began his stage experience with the old Criterion Club of the Hub.

* * *

I expect we will enjoy Gail Kane in "The Unafraid," which Mutual has purchased from Mrs. L. Case Russell, who did a few stories for Mme. Petrova, though Mrs. Russell writes me from her summer home at Green Lake, New York, that they were so changed as to be hardly recognizable. Gail Kane is quite a favorite in the Hub, and many here wish she had been secured for her original part in "Seven Keys to Baldpate," soon to be released by Artcraft with the incomparable Georgie Cohan doing the hero, with dainty Anna Nilsson playing opposite.

* * *

Commend me to the series (not "serial"—Heaven forbid) of pictures called "Do Children Count?" Well, I should say they did, as put before us so enticingly by Mary McAlister, that dear child in "On Trial" and by the Essanay company, which never fails us in point of merit. I missed the first one, but yesterday saw "The Wonderful Event," with John Cossar as the father. We are told that he is the oldest actor in point of service in that company. The play has new situations, seemingly impossible for so young a child, like carrying a plump baby from a bench in the park to the street, then to a trolley car, and more walk to her home. She is absolutely natural and unconscious of the proximity of the camera, and we all like this sort of a play. I wouldn't miss the others and hope you readers will pass the word along.

* * *

[illegible] Burton Holmes when he works his speedo camera as the other night in a picture of the Orient and Occident. On returning to God's country one quiet Sunday morning he whisks us up Broadway in rapid transit fashion to the edification of the fans, who have often heard of rapid Broadway at midnight, but here we get it "the morning after." We owe a debt to Holmes for showing us the many foreign countries for such a small sum and his titles reflect his sense of humor.

* * *

"Unconquered," with Fannie Ward and super-support, was convincing, disclosing, too, her versatility. What a cast with Jack Dean ("Mrs. Fannie Ward," as they speak of him in California), Hobart Bosworth, Tully Marshall playing a hideous role; Mabel Van Buren and Jane Wolfe—some cast! Bosworth did an equally good piece of work in "Freckles," but I cannot think of that play, well done as it was, without a picture of the awful snakes. Wonder what Fannie Ward has up her sleeve.

* * *

Score one for the Metros to sign Edith Storey, one of the most intelligent of screen actresses; "nice to get along with," I heard one day at the Vitagraph studio. I congratulate Richard A. Rowland on his sagacity.

* * *

"Wolf Lowry" held the house in absolute silence at the Exeter, for we all love to watch "Will" Hart. I saw "The Barrier" recently and find it perfect in detail, and while similar in denouement to "The Bar Sinister" is nevertheless different in the working out. There is nothing new to be said about Edgar and Mitchell Lewis except that their names spell finish in detail. "Wild Winship's Widow" had a hand when seen here the other day and no wonder. Dorothy Dalton won us all in "The Weaker Sex," another Triangle success which took well everywhere.

* * *

It is good to know that Charlie Hoyt's comedies are filmed for posterity, as they are clean, full of ginger and usually point a good moral, though unconsciously. The Seligs deserve our thanks. How we of the last generation of playgoers used to laugh over "Temperance Town," "A Brass Monkey" and all the others. When Hoyt was a member of the New Hampshire legislature he hired a special train, took his company, scenery and friends to Concord for a performance, and it was a red letter day for the Solons there and fun to watch them. Hoyt was a journalist with a keen sense of humor and never wrote a dull line.

Anything Bryant Washburn does is worth while in the opinion of many fans, and so it was expected that we would like "Skinner's Double" as well as others do all over the country. His name alone will stand. What a treat we will get with "Caste," featuring Peggy Hyland and Sir John Hare. Some liked "The Undying Flame," which certainly had scenery to burn and a reincarnation idea well worked out. Mme. Petrova seemed to have more action in this her first picture under the Paramounts. Some of the scenes were notable and the atmosphere well preserved. It is a play to set one thinking seriously and is more or less distinctive all through. Mahlon Hamilton, when put into his living tomb, caused one person to exclaim: "Horrors! what a fate." I find that the pulse of the public is for lighter themes and shorter stories, which retain the punch and red blood.

Compiled by the Statistical Department.

WHITNEY, Claire. Born in New York City. American parentage. Five feet four inches tall and weighs 130 pounds. Light complexion, blonde hair and blue eyes. Specializes in ingenue leads. Miss Whitney made her stage debut in 1910, playing in stock in Holyoke, Mass., Wilmington, Del., and with other companies, and was for nine months in vaudeville in a dramatic sketch by Edgar Allen Wolff. She made her picture debut in August, 1913, in Ben Bolt. She was with the Solax for a year or more. She was the first player engaged and also the first player to be put under contract by the William Fox company, and in spite of her few years is the dean of that acting corps. She has played opposite William Farnum in The Nigger, opposite William Breese in The Walls of Jericho and opposite Robert Edeson in The Girl I Left Behind Me. Does she like "all outdoor sports?" Apparently not. She collects Oriental antiques.

Claire Whitney.

PHILLIPS, Dorothy. Born in Baltimore, Md. American parentage. Is five feet three and one-half inches tall and weighs 126 pounds. Medium complexion, golden brown hair and dark grey eyes Miss Phillips made her stage debut in 1909 and has played in Mary Jane's Pa, Everywoman, Pilate's Daughter and other productions; has played stock engagements and in vaudeville. In June, 1911, she made her debut in The Rosary, a one-reel Essanay subject. This was about the time that Francis X. Bushman, made his vaudeville plunge and Miss Phillips played opposites to him in a number of roles about that time. Later she changed over to Universal, The Man Who Lost and Won being her first picture She is now a Bluebird star and gets her mail at Universal City. Some of her best leads have been in Hell Morgan's Girl, The Price of Silence, The Girl in the Checkered Coat, and A Doll's House.

RAE, ZOE (Zoe Rae Palmiter Bech). Born in Edgewater, Chicago, Ill., July 13, 1910. French parentage. Three feet, 10 inches tall and weighs 60 pounds. Light complexion, blonde hair, blue eyes. Little Miss Rae is not a stage kiddie but started directly in pictures. She has had considerable experience in the past three years, for she made her debut in March, 1914, and since then has played in something more than one hundred plays; in many of which she was either starred or featured. She was with the Biograph stock for a year, has played with Selig, and for the past year and a half has been one of the Universal luminaries. It's not easy to pick the notable parts she has played, but she has been starred in many Red Feather and Bluebird five-reelers including Glorianna, Naked Hearts and others, and numerous two and three-reel features, among them Thru Baby's Voice, The Human Cactus, and The Desperado.

Zoe Rae.

GRIFFIN, Gerald. Born in Hanley, England. Irish parentage. Is five feet, seven inches tall and weighs 180 pounds. Fair complexion, white hair, blue eyes. Mr. Griffin made his stage debut in 1877 and it was not until February, 1916, that he essayed pictures, making his debut in the Gaumont production Feathertop. He has also played in the Metro productions. On the stage he played for forty years in legitimate and vaudeville productions, supporting many famous stars and himself starring for three years in Other People's Money. His fad in chief is travel and he has crossed the ocean some fifty times, visiting every European capital. He was playing in Hartelpool, England, when that place was bombarded by the German fleet December 12, 1914. He has several cottages at Lake Maranacock, Winthrop, Maine, and is a famous fisherman. He dislikes ingenues.

He is at present with Rolfe-Metro, but previous connections have been with the Empire-Mutual, Famous Players and the Film d'Art, of Paris, the pioneer of all artistic productions. He made his picture debut in America in January of this year in Outcast, an Empire-Mutual. Other good parts have been Artanezzo in Le Scandale, Ralph Gaylor, with Mae Murray in At First Sight and Karl Berger in The Rose of the Alley. He has done his bit, being honorably discharged from King Albert's army following injuries in the Battle of Maliaes in 1914. Likes athletics.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

The Reason Why.

RECENTLY a Maine exhibitor stated in this paper that the Exhibitors of his state were not making money, but were in the position of men working for the film makers for a salary not always large and of no assured permanence. It listened well, but as we read it we could raise our head and look across the street at one of these slaves of the domineering manufacturers, and we could have put on our hat to walk a block to look at the other two the town boasts of. If we were a film manufacturer and had such a bunch of employees, we think we would fire the lot. There are some live wires in the State of Maine, but there are not many, and most of the exhibitors, even in the cities, make not the slightest effort to get any advantage from advertising or any other form of hustle. Right here in a town of 12,000, with an amusement population of more than that, there is less enterprise shown than you can find in some far western towns of one fifth the number of possible patrons. It is just about three years ago that we first started coming to Waterville, Maine. In those three years vital changes have occurred in the business. The self-sustaining element of picture has been lost. There is need for intensive advertising, and yet, with slight exceptions, there has been no change made in methods of management, or rather lack of management. Last winter we hailed with joy the advent of a blanket program covering the houses, but we shouted too soon. The enterprise died aborning. One change we did make some time ago while we were writing Advertising for Exhibitors up here, we persuaded C. B. Kelleher that he should say something more than "City Opera House. Moving Pictures Today" in a two-threes. We coaxed him to announce his film titles, and he has been doing it ever since, but in a placid and wholly unemotional way. Instead of the staring "Moving Pictures" he now uses this rather better advertisement. This is better, but not at all good. There is but one daily in the town. There are three houses, the City Opera House, the Silver and the Royal. The Royal seems to have closed. A week's file of the Waterville Sentinel shows that the Silver advertised twice and the Opera House every day. The Silver does make some slight effort to get a little variety in its advertising. It will drop in a cut now and then, and break the monotony of the across-space make up that the Opera House has been using ever since we have been coming up here. But it does not date its days as Mr. Kelleher does, and the two advertisements shown on the right constitute the newspaper advertising for a week, just as the three examples shown for the Opera House give all the changes for that week.

No wonder that Maine Exhibitors do not make money! How can they expect to? The time is past when people almost tried to break into the picture shows. Some little advertising effort is required to draw people to a house, and the sum total of eight advertisements in one week is the single catchline, "Is Marriage Woman's Highest Aim?" It is disgraceful. And it is no excuse to plead, as Mr. Kelleher once did, that he only advertises for the sake of the reading notice. That is no excuse for throwing away six inches of space.

Waterville has a population of 12,000. It would have more, but for the reason that the small towns like to keep their own identity. Just across the river is a huge paper mill, now making cartridge paper for the DuPont Company. It has a large pay roll, and is working full time. But, because most of the taxes are assessed against the paper mill, the place is Winslow and not Waterville. To the north is a smaller town of Fairfield, which sometimes has a picture show. Most of the trade could be coaxed down to Waterville since the larger town is the shopping point. A trolley runs to Fairfield, and another, to the west, to Oakland, which depends upon Waterville for its entertainment. To the south another trolley runs through Winslow down to Augusta, tapping one town with a large mill. Those within the twenty cent fare limit shop in Waterville in preference to the Capital. Waterville itself has a college, an academy, large car shops and a big cotton mill busy with war contracts. The situation is ideal for a live management. It would yield a fair return to indifferent management.

The Opera House is in the town hall, just off the main street. It is a second floor theater, but people are used to going there, for the place is also used for many town activities. In front of the little park on which the city hall fronts is an illuminated sign merely giving the name of the house. Between the hall and the corner is a bill board stand on which is pasted the paper for the coming attractions. Most people probably see this if they happen to come downtown. Most of them do come down. Three blocks away is a hotel better than the average, so much better that the traveling men plan to stay over two nights and work the other towns from the morning train. Probably if they asked the clerk where there was a show they would be told, but there is no advertising in the hotel itself, nor have we seen any Opera House bill [illegible]

The Silver is at the lower end of the shopping district. It is a remade carriage factory, but it has been nicely remade. They have a stand of paper on the main street between the Opera House and "uptown" to catch the people coming down, as not many are apt to come as far down as the Silver. Apparently they work a sliding scale for night shows, for they have a sign that reads "Two shows this evening," which is sometimes posted after the matinee.

The Royal, when we arrived, was running the oldest sort of stuff. This is the house we spoke of some time since as having a poor entrance further complicated by a candy butcher. They also hide behind a popcorn machine that takes up most of the rest of the space. They do not advertise in the papers and apparently used only two bill boards in addition in front of the house. Last week's menu included a duped Chaplin and some Great Northerns of very ancient vintage. Evidently they gave up the ghost this week, as the house has been closed. It could not possibly live in competition with the Paramount program of the Opera House and the Fox and Selznick offerings at the Silver. The Silver will have "A Daughter of the Gods" soon. The Royal lacks capacity, cleanliness and order.

It is reported that a new house will be built this summer on a most advantageous site, but there are no signs of building activity yet.

Now Waterville is not a bit worse than most of the Maine towns. It is no worse than a majority of the New England towns. It is no worse than a majortiy of the houses in the ten-thousand population towns of the Middle Atlantic group. It is precisely because it is such an average place that it supplies so excellent a text. What is true of Waterville is true of a large portion of the country east of the Mississippi River. Men got into the business when it was good. They do not know how to get out of it now that it is poor, and they have not the slightest idea of how to make it good. They have no knowledge of advertising; no real managerial sense. When they first took hold the mere fact that you showed pictures was sufficient. People wanted to see pictures. If you had a theater then, you had a bank account. If you have a theater now, you are lucky if you have some of the bank account left. If you have a bank account, you have to work for it just as the farmer or the merchant has to work for his money. The farmer plants seed, nourishes it with fertilizer, and gets a big crop. The exhibitor doesn't. Just a little further along is the Aroostook Valley, one of the great potato growing spots in the United States. They raise bumper crops with hard work, plenty of fertilizer and good seed. It pays them. Were it not for the Maine seed there would be fewer big potato farms in Florida, for potatoes degenerate in the south, and at least each third crop must come from more sturdy seed. But the Maine exhibitors do not apply to their own business what is common knowledge in other lines of work. They do not cultivate their property. They need good seed, or in other words good film. They need good soil, which means comfortable theaters, and they need to fertilize with advertising to force the growth.

For a time the Silver used a house program, but apparently not for long, but they seem to do little or no special advertising, and it does run advertising films. If you'll look at the bottom of the smaller of the two Silver advertisements shown, you will see that they have the Larkin Reels, "showing Niagara Falls and the manufacturing of products" of the Larkin Company, and the defenseless patron has to look at them, but gets no look at the check, which should be paid. And while you are looking at the advertisement again please note that the Opera House has a few "reserve" seats. At twenty cents per they should be able to put a "d" on the end of that reserve, but it would take a search of the files to find out for how long this typographic error has continued.

The Sentinel's prices are far from large. They seem to be able to give good displays if they are provided with copy and told they must make good. But they are not going to sit up nights planning advertising for the theaters when all they get is straight across lines. They give a reader with each advertisement, but the readers are as dead as the advertising. This Silver reader is typical:

> Joan Sawyer makes her debut as a dramatic artist in the latest William Fox release, "Love's Law." The noted dancer plays the part of a girl who forsakes a career which is certain to bring fame and fortune to rejoin her Gypsy lover in the wilderness. Stuart Holmes, noted Fox villain, plays his first sympathetic role, that of Andre, the Gypsy.
> Miss Sawyer has won fame as a dancer and an actress. The Larkin Reels will also form a part of the program, showing the manufacture of Larkin products, and a reel showing the famous Niagara Falls. > Friday and Saturday, Dickens' "Tale of Two Cities," with Wm. Farnum.—Advertisement.

This is about the average stuff. You have to be a hardened fan to feel the appeal of that sort of stuff. You cannot thrill at the thought of the play so baldly described, and "Miss Sawyer has won fame as a dancer and an actress" does not remotely begin to tell of her picturesque career. There is no ginger to the announcement, no snap, vim, pep, or whatever you want to call it. The house has a certain space given it. It fills that space, and then Kell has the nerve to explain that he doesn't do much in the advertising space because he puts in the ad to get the reader, and does nothing more in the reader.

We do not believe that either house ever tried the Farmer's Matinee. Probably they never heard of Mr. Chaney's idea of tagging the farm vehicles on a Saturday. They seem to be ignorant of the value of post cards, and the house organ started by the Silver was not kept up. There is not a shred of paper up for the Kellermann film two weeks ahead of showing, though to put up the paper now would catch some of the farmers who would come back and leave the women folk home on the day of showing.

Any farmer knows that fertilizer will bring better crops, but that he must have the right sort of fertilizer and put it on intelligently. The Exhibitors do not realize that they, too, must have the proper fertilizer and use it as intelligently. To say that business is so bad that they are virtually working for small and uncertain salaries is to admit that the Maine Exhibitors do not know the business in which they are engaged. And in saying this the Maine exhibitors are merely more frank than exhibitors in other parts of the country. If they knew how to advertise, and if they got the proper films to advertise, they could make business, but they must plow and harrow and sow and cultivate precisely as their farmer patrons do.

Advertising is not merely the printing of certain words in the paper and the posting of certain lithographs. The advertising words must be words best calculated to make the greatest number of patrons desire to see the film to which the publicity is given. The posters must be put where the greatest number of possible patrons can see them.

All possible forms of advertising must be employed. Mailing cards for the country patrons are valuable, and the telephone book gives a positive mailing list on which to build. Hotel frames cost little and bring much in the larger hotels. It should be possible to arrange to have the current program put in the mail box of every arriving guest. Store frames, of the sort frequently reproduced here, will bring good results at the cost of a few tickets, a float costs less than a bill board, and in an average town can cover the ground more thoroughly. When these devices and others are tried, then if business is still bad it can be said that business really is bad, but until then it is more apt to be bad management than bad business, for it takes management to build business these days, and it will take more and more good management as the times progress and we feel more severely the stress of war. Prices should be kept down, films should be chosen for their lightness and hopefulness, and they should be of a sort that the better classes of intelligent patrons can approve, since these will be driven to the cheaper forms of amusement if they find them good.

And, mind you, Waterville is not a bit different from other towns in Maine, and Maine and Maryland are in much the same box. We mention Maine particularly, merely because we happen to be on the ground at the time one of the league officials says business is bad, and we are explaining why the business is bad. There is no excuse for an intelligent man to say business is bad. Business is what he makes it, and the worse conditions in general are, the better is the film business apt to become, because these are the times when men demand cheap amusement, but it must be amusement and not how Larkin's soaps are made.

Postcard Calendar.

The Colonial, Bluefields, is using a postcard calendar with red dates overprinting the black announcement as shown in the cut. Of course the reproduction shows the dates too black, as red photographs black, but with a transparent ink the red stands out and still permits the type to show through. Where this or any other calendar form is used, it is well to keep the form standing if you use it regularly. Then the rules stand ready cut and there is not so large a composition cost next time. If you can find a set of calendar logotypes that will fit your space, or if you can make your space fit the logotypes, you can dispense with the rule work entirely. The logotypes are cast squares with the numbers from one to 31 and the rule. Put into the form they give the rule effect without rutting and matching, and are self justifying, being all the same square. The months, days of the week and enough numerals to run for several years are included in the font, which should pay for its cost in reduced bills inside of a month.

One of the Rules.

In one of the circular letters sent out by the Famous Players Star Feature Film Service (why is it that most of the Paramount exchanges have such horribly long titles?), E. E. Flynn puts a great picture advertising truth into a few words when he says:

> The CHILDREN are the biggest advertisers to the GROWNUPS. Isn't it the CHILD who practically made MARY PICKFORD and MARGUERITE CLARK in the dramas; they appealed—the CHILD talked its parents to death about the stars, and the outcome is; that on the nights these stars are exhibited both CHILDREN and GROWNUPS fill the theater to capacity; because the line of entertainment is strong and appealing to both classes.

There is not an exhibitor in the business who can honestly say that this is not true. He knows that it is, if he has sense enough to know his business. The kiddies made Marguerite Clark, and they made their parents see and like her. The child does not go by the name of a star. The child does not care what dramatic critics think. They like whom they like, and when they like a player it is time to book that player. And the kiddies do not go home and rave at the dinner table about sex plays and nasty problems. They like the clean and the wholesome, and for a steady diet so does the average adult, and the man or woman who does not is not worth worrying about. Mr. Flynn is booming Arbuckle, but he is doing more than that. He is booming clean films, and his argument is good for every theater in every town in the United States. We do not mean by this that all plays should be cut down to the level of the child. We do mean that if you have decent, wholesome plays the kiddies will be your best press agents.

Brushing Up Business.

The Lucas Theater Supply Co., of Atlanta, Ga., is sending out hat brushes to its patrons; six inch brushes with five rows of black bristle and mahogany finish handle lettered in gold. It is good enough for any man's desk, and each time it is used it will remind him of the place to get his supplies, we use "remind," because if there is any man in the Lucas territory who has not seen more than one Lucas novelty he is hopelessly blind. There are thousands of novelty advertisements offered by the trade, but the great idea is to get something that the recipient will value and retain. The hat brush comes under this head. A cheaper looking brush would have gone to the waste basket or the usher, but Harry Lucas does not have to be ashamed of the brush he picked out for his gift, and most of them will stay on the main desk. It is good advertising.

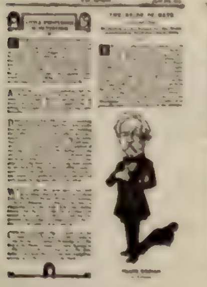
Cut Out.

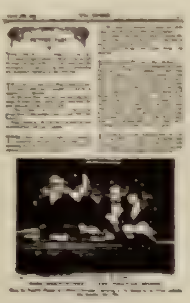
Lately we commented upon a sting advertisement in a New York stock program. A rival company undertook to reprint the paragraph to send broadcast. Fortunately it hurt no business, and the advertisement has been dropped. The program company did not know that the advertisement worked harm or we do not imagine they would have run it, for they believe in the square deal. The offending advertiser withdrew the announcement because the crop of come-ons was dying out, so that the Star programs have a clean bill of health. But watch your own program no matter where you may be. For a long time one house program, soliciting its own advertisements, used a "manhood restored" advertisement in its pages and probably lost business. These things are bad enough in the daily papers. The original caution was not particularly directed at any one concern. That program merely suggested the general need of caution.

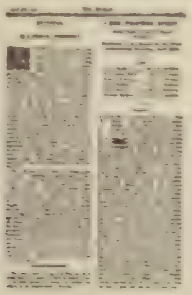
From N. Z.

Writing from the Strand, Auckland, New Zealand, Phil Hayward the manager, sends some interesting examples of his recent work. A couple of years ago he sent in some specimens from the Lyric, but now he is running a house costing £21,000, and adds: "We run one program each week, changing Saturday. As you will see by the printing, we are running Triangle features and doing an excellent business with them. In addition to the enclosed house organ and circulars we do the usual newspaper advertising and front-of-the-house display. I might mention that we find your journal of great value in preparing dope." The house organ is a six page railroad, pages slightly under 6 by 9 inches, printed in different colors, though blue seems to be a favorite. The back is largely cuts, the sample reproduced here being practically all cuts.

Some of the issues have smaller cuts and more text but all of the back pages have cuts every issue. One front page for "The Microscope Mystery" shares the space between Constance Talmadge and "the microbe actors," a novel phase that will do much to divert attention to the oddity of the subject. The inside layout also carries cuts, but runs more to type. Here the choice of type and column width permits much to be said about the coming subject, while leaving plenty of space for the miscellaneous material that makes the issue worth while. The body type is a small eight that looks almost like a six, and yet is fully legible. Not a little of the reading matter is taken from this paper, but it all applies to the house. There is no foolish padding matter. For the Billie Burke run a set of postcards was issued, apparently locally printed. There is also the Billie Burke Fox Trot, composed by the Strand's organist, J. W. Carleton. This is printed from a cut made from the manuscript but the latter is legibly written and may be read as easily as though it were stamped in. A line across the bottom announces that a new chapter of "Gloria's Romance" is shown each week at the Strand, and on the back is a "Compliments of the Strand Picture House," but the issue is not so heavily loaded with advertising that people will refuse to keep it on their music racks. Too much advertising would have spoiled the advertisement, but Mr. Hayward knows that too so he held it down to a minimum. It's a fine gift, this knowing when not to advertise too heavily. Special printing is gotten out for special features as for example, Douglas Fairbanks. In addition there is a pretentious house program. Of course only the real live wires take the trouble to send in their stuff from half way round the world but these live wires are surprisingly live wire. From all we hear Australia seems to be about the paradise of the picture. They work with really good taste to present the pictures with the best setting.







Got in on the Loan.

C. W. Martin, of the Temple, McCook, Neb., sends in a Triangle program with the back page devoted to the announcement that he will devote the entire proceeds of a certain week to the purchase of Liberty Bonds. His prelude runs:

> In order that everyone in McCook may have a chance to show their patriotism and "do their bit" (no matter how small) toward subscribing to the "Liberty Loan" the Temple theater management will use the entire gross receipts received during the week of June 11 to 16, inclusive, in the purchase of "Liberty Loan" bonds.

It is too late to get in on the Liberty issue, but there will very probably be later issues when the same scheme may be worked, so make a note of the idea.

Going Off.

We are just a little disappointed in the Elmwood, Buffalo. The best they could say for "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" was, "A clossal photoplay spectacle filmed at the bottom of the sea." They do too well ordinarily to drop on a big thing like this.

Now It's Eugene.

We all know George Editor Carpenter, but it is G. Editor no more. His middle initial stands for Eugene, and Eugene it will be henceforth, for he has given up the editing of Real Reels, the house organ of the Notable Features Co., of Salt Lake City, to [illegible] of the Paramount-Empress. Mr. Carpenter has been doing double duty for a couple of years now, but the theatrical venture demands more and more of his time, and so he has passed the old blue pencil and the [illegible] over to [illegible] Place, of the Salt Lake Tribune, and he will devote his entire time to management. [illegible]

> [illegible] also a war prison camp for Germans and other undesirable aliens. There are 8,000 men to be there by the end of [illegible] spend their money around the rum shops, they do not need to buy clothes or meals; the only thing I can see for them to do is to visit the motion picture theaters [illegible]. I happened to catch the paymaster growling, and suggested to him that I supply the pay envelopes for him free of charge. I sent him 10,000 this morning— sample enclosed.

The envelopes are manila stock, 3½ by 6 inches, printed in red. They are large enough to hold an entire month's salary and then some, but they give plenty of space for the house advertisement, and they are large enough to handle. The small pay envelopes are all right for a limited salary roll, but they will not "stack" nicely for large pays, and the size will be appreciated by the official, who will be more apt to use them if they are handy. There are lots of little things that will work along the same lines in the next few months. Look out for your own chances. Even if you have only a single local company, you can have a group picture made and a slide from this, and then sell prints to such as may desire them at cost, but with the house imprint on the front. You can work this nicely by lettering an old piece of kodak film and sticking that to the glass negative. That's just one idea. There are many others.

Noisy.

The Standard Film Corporation, St. Louis, says, "Show us a man who will properly advertise, and we're both looking at a successful showman." We presume they have a looking glass in the office and can line up in front of it. A recent advertisement is a modest little thing in red and orange and black that is as quiet as the Western Front on a busy day. But if the color scheme is noisy the argument is there, and well propounded, but they make one mistake. They say that the only difference between a program picture and a State Rights is the title. Some State Rights pictures act as though they knew they were not coming back again and didn't care what happened to the house, while the program wants to use the house for further business.

The Elmwood, Too.

The Elmwood, Buffalo, enclosed a Red Cross throwaway with each program sent out Red Cross week.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Our Place.

> It seems to me that the day of the general writer is over. We have apparently come to a position not unlike that in the theater, where the bulk of the plays are written by a mere handful of writers, while the others vainly spend their time and efforts trying to break in on this intangible yet none the less existent "trust." There does not seem to be much hope for the free lance.

This is interesting, but we do not believe that the facts will bear our correspondent out. To begin with, the photoplay is not drama. It is more story than drama, and it is handled more as stories than as dramas. But unfortunately it is too often confounded with drama in the minds of the makers as well as the public, and until it is realized that photoplay is not drama we shall have poor photoplays and wrong methods.

Comparatively few persons can write good dramas. For one thing the medium is limited. The story must be capable of being told and told interestingly in a limited number of scenes. The idea must be sufficient to hold the interest for an entire evening, and if a drama fails to score the entire investment is a loss. For this reason, among others, but principally for this reason, dramatic producers prefer to deal with those authors of known merit whose past performances argue at least the probability of success. Even then there are numerous instances of dramas by the best known authors either falling flat or obtaining a run solely through the drawing powers of the star or because the management prefers to stand the loss to avoid confessing failure.

On the other hand, the magazine publisher does not stand or fall upon the merits or demerits of a certain single issue of his publication. He establishes his reputation upon the continued production of fiction or special articles of a certain average grade. If the average is kept up the occasional lapse passes unnoticed; indeed, it is seldom that an entire magazine pleases all patrons, but there is enough found of interest to cause the purchaser to feel himself repaid for his investment.

It is the same way with photoplays. Some productions may be less successful than others, but a manufacturer is judged by the average of his product and not by the individual offerings, save in the case of such pictures as Joan the Woman and The Honor System, which are handled and offered as drama productions, and which must stand or fall on their own merits in the production houses.

To put it in another way, the man who spends two dollars to be entertained feels that he has the right to demand that he shall receive this entertainment, where the same man, paying twenty cents for a magazine, feels that he has been repaid if two-thirds or even half the contents pleases him.

It is by no means unusual to find the dramatist of the moment writing himself out. If he writes in excess of his creative ability he, too, soon exhausts his mental vitality and either stops writing or no longer finds producers willing to accept his work. In precisely the same way the staff writer, grinding out material, makes an uninteresting magazine, and while most magazines have a few favored authors who almost amount to staff men, those magazines are best and sell in greater numbers which offer a wide variety of material and so suit the most widely varying tastes. There never yet was a magazine that successfully endured the burden of the staff writer. Only a constant change of writers will give variety and lift to a magazine's pages. Only variety in stories will give good photoplays, and it was for this reason that there was less fault-finding back in the one-reel days, when from three to five stories formed the program, and some of them were bound to appeal to any patron. If a five-reeler is bad it is bad with the same badness through five dreary reels. If five one-reelers are poor they at least offer varying styles of mediocrity, and you have four periods of hope when the new reels start.

Don't worry about the dramatic authors being a close corporation. Some day producers will realize that photoplay is not drama but pictured story and things will grow better.

Plots Galore.

Gustav Schraplau, a westerner, sends a clipping from an Arizona paper and says he would be interested in comment on the same. We take it that he wants to get a hint for his own practice. This is the first column of a story of a lynching. He has marked one passage; that in which the murderer-ravisher attempts to pray and breaks down. The ringleader of the masked mob remarks: "Gentlemen, we will all bare our heads and say the Lord's Prayer in unison. He is entitled to that."

Here alone is a wealth of plot material. For instance there is the mob about to launch a soul into eternity praying for its victim. There is the victim unable to lift his own petition to the Throne of Grace, either through an inability to pray or because of his realization of his shortcomings. Here are two striking themes, either of which is material for story. There is material in the opening paragraph which runs "Kneeling upon the hard ground of the desert, with the light of an electric torch playing a gleaming circle upon him, Starr Daley attempted yesterday morning at four o'clock to say his last prayers. He was within a few feet of where he had murdered James Gibson and within eyesight was the locality in which he had criminally assaulted the murdered man's wife."

Here lie the dramatic features of the story, and these are the parts Mr. Schraplau has marked, but other and possibly better openings are found in the remainder of the story. An intense five-reeler could be made from the victim's statement. "I am not to blame," he declares, "it is the result of having a mother who worked in a brothel." Here is something far more real than a lynching. It could not be handled as badly as the paragraph reads, but it opens the way to a score of stories in which the sins of the father are paid by the succeeding generations.

On another angle, there is suggestion in this section. "After a few minutes someone asked if there was a doctor in the crowd. A white masked figure stepped forward and stated that he was a doctor. He felt the pulse of the unconscious man and stated that he would be dead in a few moments."

Here is an even greater, because less offensive, opening. Suppose that this doctor were, in reality, the father of the man lynched. Suppose that he made the statement he did to hurry the dispersal of the crowd, that he might revive the victim. Here would be the start, and not the finish of the story. Suppose, instead, that he was the father of the victim, but that the mother was the wife of another man, whom the physician had seduced, the child suffering a pre-natal accession of the usual passions. Suppose that in that moment the physician realized that he, and none other, was the real murderer of his own son. Would not that be a far greater story than the mere recording of a lynching for the crime of lust?

Take a new angle. The physician is not the father of the man, but he loved the man's mother (it being understood that the mother was a woman worthy of that love). To confess himself a physician is to reveal himself as a member of the mob to the sheriff who vainly seeks to learn the identity of the others. To minister to the victim he reveals himself, knowing that punishment will follow.

Nothing in the story mentions the mother, other than the casual reference to her occupation, but the imaginative minds can, from that mere mention evolve a number of gripping dramas of the seamy side, and by inversion, making the mother a woman without sin get infinitely better stories and in greater profusion.

And note that throughout the stronger stories are the ones that have the least to do with the lynching and its reasons, but they take more skill to write, which is why we suffer from so many unclean tales—they are easier to write.

Scene Plots.

You don't need scene plots with synopses, but some day you'll have to write continuities again. The common practice has been to jot down the scene numbers as each scene was written, but the other day we found a better wrinkle than that. As we wrote we jotted down each set and location the first time it was used. When the script was done we set an automatic numbering machine at number one and looked at scene one of the script. It was a garden, so we stamped that figure on the garden on the scene plot and went on to the next. When we were done we had an absolutely correct list of scene numbers with no trouble and no delay. All we had to do was clean copy and add it to the rest of the script. A numbering machine is a mighty handy thing, and the best is about the cheapest, costing around four dollars.

New Version.

Try and if you don't succeed, fix it up and try again.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editer.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half [illegible]. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use [illegible]. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of [illegible]. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

I Should Hope So.

Evanston, Ill., propounds the following:

> Would a correct lighting intensity be obtained on the screen by the following: 36 foot throw, 6x8 picture and an arc drawing 35 amperes? Any suggestions will be appreciated.

Well Brother Grinelle, there are quite a number of things you haven't mentioned. For instance are you going to use A. C. or D. C.? Is your lens system to be lined up by the Kansas City method (may be it is right and may be it [illegible] scientific principles [illegible] to 15% of your light which [illegible] to 50% of your [illegible] efficient lens system you would get plenty of illumination on a 6x8 foot picture with 35 amperes D. C., even with an ordinary canvas screen. With a modern properly [illegible] reflective screen you ought to [illegible] to get a very good picture with 35 amperes D. C. On a non-reflective screen and a fair picture with 35 amperes A. C.

You see Friend Grinelle [illegible] a thing of this kind that I can [illegible] ordinary conditions of efficiency in operation you would get a good result either with A. C. or D. C. The carbon setting and the kind of carbons used has much to do with it. The proper spacing of the condensing lenses with [illegible] lamphouse from the aperture, the diameter of the projection lens, the distance of the revolving shutter from the objective lens and the intelligence with which it is [illegible] important factors in a matter of [illegible] be understood by the [illegible] with a given amperage.

Proof of Value.

Claude E. Linstruth, Carthage, New York.—If your honorable self and Brother H. W. Sanders will permit me to get in a word edgewise, I will say that in my answer to question 166, I am quoted as saying: "To test the test lamp, touch the lamp wires to 110 volt side of the rheostat." This should read, the 110 volt side of the economizer, and the [illegible] makes my statement correct. When [illegible] to know whether I said rheostat or economizer, as I have been using Hallburg economizers here for [illegible] peculiar that you would ask for a test to be made with a rheostat. I assumed you knew I had an economizer, as I had mentioned that fact in several preceding answers. Brother Sanders' reply to this question in issue of June 23 is [illegible] I [illegible] mine. Regardless of the C. P. of the test lamp, Brother Sanders has set forth the fact as we want [illegible] proof of the great value of our department in correcting our own errors.

Brother Linstruth, if you could but see the correspondence that reaches the department in normal times, you would understand how utterly impossible it is or would be for me to remember details of the apparatus used by individual correspondents. It just simply can't be did. If you will write me after a while, say a month after I get back from New York, I will try to look the matter up for you, but it will be quite a job, because my secretary has discharged herself, having accumulated to herself sufficient wealth to provide for the necessities of life for the balance of what she believes will be her days, and that's going to make it mighty inconvenient for your humble servant for some time to come, as she, and she only, knew the details of the filing of correspondence. For the next few months I will probably have to call in the Burns Detective Agency when I want to dig up any particular matter out of the files.

Error on My Part.

> I suppose, Brother Richardson, that you are looking forward to the end of your trip, and will be glad to see 1733 W 9th Street once more. Outside of the strenuosity of the work, however, it must be a really splendid trip, and one that you will long remember.
>
> But to get down to business, the purpose of this letter is to call your attention to the recent article by Nicholas Sabo. How in the name of Gehenna did that article ever get by the censor—particularly the paragraph in which he says "The purpose of the condensor is to collect as many rays as possible from the light source, and to bring those rays to a point in the center of the projection lens, ie., to bring the image of the crater to [illegible]
>
> [illegible] And a[illegible] three years of hard work [illegible] particular piece of false teaching! F[illegible] overlooked that simple law [illegible] size of image and object [illegible] the center of the lens, [illegible] of the condenser and [illegible] 24 inches from the con[illegible] a diameter equal to 24 divided by 4 [illegible] And this wo[illegible] the most perfectly cor[illegible] are correct for pro[illegible] distinctly out of date when [illegible] pictures. Their uncor[illegible] affect in undoing some of the work which we have already accomplished.

> I had fully intended laying off on this optical dope, and thus not give you any further matters to bother with while you were on the road. But our good friend Nicholas Sabo's article, June 16 issue, got my goat beyond all further en[illegible]
>
> Brother Sabo writes an article on optics which is well arranged and illustrated, but does he merely propose to claim that the source of illumination, the crater, can be properly regarded as a pin point. If so, and he evidently does, all his deductions as to the condenser action, as applied to moving picture projector, are and can be of no value. You certainly said in your letter that it was the evident fallacy of such an assumption which induced you to start the first light ray experiment. I can understand how, naturally, friend Sabo's reasoning has led him to the conclusion he has arrived at, if he starts with a pin point source of light. More than four years ago I constructed a small experimental projector (illustrated in April 22, 1916) which used only from five to eight amperes A. C., which gave a crater or light source hardly more than 1/20 of an inch in diameter when the carbons were properly trimmed. With this condition of almost a point light source to start with, very naturally I hit upon the same scheme of causing the actual image of the crater to come to a focus a short distance before the objective. This, in several respects, gave results very much to be desired; but when it comes to dealing with craters [illegible] it is something else again. Accrediting to friend Sabo all the good intentions in the world, he should, I believe, consider the effect of the extension of the light source seriously before proceeding further along his present line of reasoning. In figure 7, July 16 issue, he places the aperture between points F and F, but all the latest tables of Griffiths (agreed to in this respect by many, issue December 16, 1916), decided in favor of an aperture position varying from F to F. There must be reason. Furthermore, Sabo's aperture position is practically the same as infamous "White Spot," discussed in August 19, 1916, issue, which was O. K. for white light, but dangerously near to the blue ghost; also it was no good for X and Y values.

I don't feel like apologizing for having allowed Brother Sabo to make this slip. It was simply a proposition that I have only got one brain and that none too good. I can't do half a dozen things [illegible] and do them all in the best possible way. This particular affair came in just before I left New York and, coming from a man who designed a really splendid projection lens—a lens which I found by experiment, gave largely increased results on the screen, I didn't give it the careful reading it should have had. I was literally submerged in work trying to get ready to leave New York, and that got past me by my error.

I however questioned Brother Martin's statement that even with a pin point source of light the point of focus should theoretically be any place else than at the film, though of course under that condition only a small point of the film could be illuminated, which amounts to saying that you couldn't project an aperture having area with a pin point source. This however is only a guess. Maybe I am wrong. Anyhow I doubt any considerable amount of good coming from a discussion of a purely theoretical question of that kind.

Incidentally I have been testing out Brother Griffiths's chart, March 17 issue, and I find that almost invariably, with modern amperage, it works out fine. I find, however, that with very low amperage it doesn't seem to fill the bill, and I believe that he is in error, to some extent at least, when the current value falls below 25. Possibly I am wrong, as the experiments were of necessity made somewhat hurriedly, but that is the way it looked to me. I don't like to discuss the optical question when I am on the road, because I haven't the necessary data with me; moreover I haven't any copies of the Moving Picture World, hence cannot check up references made by correspondents to things which have been published.

New Arc Controller.

While in San Francisco I carefully examined into the merits of the new arc controller now ready to be placed on the market, and in fact already being marketed by Messrs. Elbert & Hugel, San Francisco. The new controller is remarkable for its simplicity. Practically all the working parts are shown clearly in figures 1, 2 and 3. Fig. 4 merely showing the coil which energizes an armature attached to lever A, Fig. 2. Fig. 1 is the interior of the controller. These parts run in a bath of oil. Grooved pulley A, Fig. 1, is revolved by a belt, which may be attached to any revolving part of the projector mechanism. It does not in the least matter how fast or how slow pulley A revolves. This wheel revolves a friction disc B, the shaft of which impinges upon lever A, Fig. 2. Friction disc C, Fig. 1, drives worm gear D, Fig. 1, which, in turn, drives gear wheel and shaft E, Fig. 1. The same being attached, as shown, to flexible shaft A, Fig. 3. The action is as follows: The belt shown in Fig. 3 drives the controller wheel A, Fig. 1, as shown. The magnet shown in Fig. 4, located in the lower portion of the machine, works against the spring in Fig. 2, the latter being set at such tension as will crowd disc wheel B against disc wheel C, Fig. 1, when the magnetic flux in the aforesaid coil is at the strength it exerts when the arc is at the desired working length. Now when the arc gets slightly longer, thus increasing the arc resistance and thus slightly decreasing the amperage, the coil spring overcomes the action of the magnet and brings disc wheels B and C together, which has the effect of revolving shaft E, and since shaft E is directly connected to the lamp control through flexible shaft A, Fig. 3, the lamp control is slightly revolved, thus feeding the carbons together, reducing the arc voltage, increasing the amperage of the arc, which in turn increases the power of the magnet so that it overcomes the strength of the coil spring, and separates the disc wheels. While all this sounds a little complicated, it really is decidedly simple, and according to the testimony of operators using them on the Pacific coast, the thing works perfectly. The mechanism has the advantage, moreover, of being to all intents and purposes fool proof. After a careful examination of the machine, and watching its operation, I am prepared to give it the endorsement of this department, and to recommend it to the serious consideration of theater managers. The price is $40.

Thinking Deeply.

O. C. Hurt, President, Local Union No. 62, I. A. T. S. E., Colorado Springs, Colorado, in the course of a letter pertaining to other matters says:

> We are still thinking pretty hard and deeply over your lecture and believe me we have had some heated arguments, too. The only thing we regret in connection with your visit is that we could not have you with us longer. Now Brother Richardson, if there is anything the boys of 62 can do for you, or if we can ever be of service in any way, don't hesitate to let us know.

This is a sample of many letters from local union officials and members which will be placed in my files and treasured because of the fact that they show that my efforts have been of benefit—that all the expenditure of energy, and of money, has not been in vain. This trip has been a tremendous trying one, and when I finally reached my own home town, where I was to have had the first real rest I have had in three months and a half, after more than 16,000 miles of looping the loop, I was very nearly to the end of my mental and physical endurance. I don't believe I could have stood up for another week under the strain. But I have been cheered on by many such letters as this, and their reading has helped wonderfully. The friendships I have formed and the acquaintances I have made during the past three months and a half, will constitute one of my pleasant memories when the twilight of life shall come. I have taken more than 400 photographs, and have in my possession about 550 feet of film which has been taken at various points, so that in the coming years I can sit by my fireside and with the aid of memory and pictures can repeat my visit to the more than ninety cities I will have covered when the skyline of Manhattan again comes into view.

Passed Up Phoenix.

> I notice quite a lengthy article regarding your trip to California, particularly at Santa Ana. Having just come from there to take up my position here, I was something more than interested concerning your comments regarding the different theaters in Santa Ana; also, very much interested in the photographs shown. It is a matter of deep regret that I could not be there to help entertain you. Who am I? Well, I am the some old Cooper, who owned and operated theaters in Western Colorado (Montrose and Telluride) where your children once lived, and I guess that is introduction enough. I mention this because it is a long time, in fact years, since you have received a letter from me. I am sorry that you had to pass up Phoenix, Arizona, for we certainly would have shown you a good time had you stopped off in this city. By the way, I had charge of the construction of the Temple theater in Santa Ana, the one you spoke so highly of in your article. The operating room was my own design, constructed after what I thought was the best ideas. Of course, it has been changed considerably since I left. When I was there, there was but one switchboard, on the wall at the back of the machine, which handled everything in the house that it was necessary for the operator to control. I had the fire shutters so arranged that no matter what happened, or where it happened, the shutters would instantly fall, and close the room like a jug. I also had an indicator which warned me when my film was about run out both by a light and bell, but have learned that most of these things have since been removed. I came to Phoenix in February, and took charge of the Columbia theater for the Phoenix Amusement Company, which house is doing a tremendous business. We play only big productions, and are now showing "The Barrier," to standing room only. I am also assistant manager for their chain of theaters. George A. Mauk, proprietor of the Phoenix Amusement Company, is certainly a live wire, and one of the best fellows in the world to work for. He is in Los Angeles, (went June 6) and I have just received a wire saying that he has booked all the Selznick pictures.

I don't know that Cooper intended this letter to be published, but it is interesting reading, therefore I am taking a chance. The Phoenix Amusement Company owns the Amuzu, a 450 seat theater, in Phoenix, the Columbia, a 1,000 seat Phoenix theater, the Iris (400 seats), and the Juarez (550 seats), both at Ray, Arizona, the Isis (350 seats) at Florence, Arizona, and the National (550 seats) and the Rex (550 seats), both at Hayden, Arizona. I well remember meeting Brother Cooper in Montrose, Colorado, four years ago, and am glad to know he has succeeded. Sorry your city was not included, but that was the fault of Phoenix. In order to make that city I would have been obliged to make a side trip, at considerable personal inconvenience and expenditure of time. My view of the matter was, that if neither the Phoenix union or Phoenix exhibitors cared enough about to ask me to stop, it wasn't up to me to do all of that. Had they made the request, I would probably have given Phoenix a day. You see, boys, I was willing to do my part, but it wasn't exactly up to me to ask you for the privilege of taking a whole lot of trouble and incurring a whole lot of extra expense, and—there you are.

Luminous Paint.

Frank B. Howe, Los Angeles, California, sends sample of a luminous paint he has prepared, together with the following letter:

> I have delayed expressing my appreciation of the address you delivered in Los Angeles, because I was particularly interested in what you had to say regarding clocks. We were, at that time, experimenting with a substance which we thought might be used in that connection. I am now able to, and am submitting a sample of the paint we have prepared. Permit me, however, first to thank you, for the lecture you gave us here in Los Angeles. I take note that results are already distinctly visible to the naked eye.
> Under separate cover I am sending you a card painted with a new luminous paint. It has occurred to me that if theater clock dials could have their numbers painted with this substance, and if the hands of the clocks were also painted with it, it would entirely do away with the necessity for any light in connection with the clock. This paint has the quality of absorbing light. If you will leave the card I am sending in the daylight for a day, and then take it into an absolutely dark room, after a moment of accustoming the eye to the darkness you will see the way the thing works. If the clock hands and figures are painted with this substance, on account of the lack of daylight in the theater, it would be necessary to leave the artificial light over the clock, but it would only be necessary to leave it on for an hour before the show, during which time the paint will have absorbed sufficient light to last throughout the rest of the day. The only objection I have ever heard advanced as against the practical value of this paint is that from a great distance the letters are not distinctly readable. As to that, I can only say that they are readable from a greater distance than are the ordinary numbers used on theater clocks, and that it is only the relative position of the hands with relation to the numerals that is seen, except by those in the front row. We are putting this paint on the market at 35 cents for enough for one clock.

Merely looking at the single sample you have sent is not sufficient, Brother Howe. It would be necessary for you to send half a dozen sample bottles to names I will supply you. You are perfectly correct in assuming that the audience doesn't need to read the figures. As a matter of fact the figures might almost as well be absent from a clock, though the average person doesn't realize that fact. We judge time by the relative position of the hands only except where we want to know the time to the exact minute. I will be very glad to recommend this proposition to theater managers, provided actual experiment proves that the paint fills the bill. I imagine the worst features would be that the operator, manager or janitor would be careless, and forget to turn on the light before the show, or forget to turn it off afterwards, but that of course would be no fault of the paint.

Getting Results.

Brother McBride, of Santa Ana, writes:

> I take the liberty of correcting you in your remarks, June 2 issue, regarding your visit here in Santa Ana. You say the Princess operator was not at the banquet. You are in error. He was there. It was Claud Fowler of the West End theater, who was absent, and his manager was hunting a new operator the morning after your address. He didn't care what it was going to cost. He wanted a real operator, and now has one in the person of C. Nelson, who belongs to the Houston local and was working in Anaheim when you were here. He has made a general clean-up in the operating room, and is getting results. In my opinion the rubbing you handed everyone that night did us a world of good.
> P. S. I cleaned out my lamphouses.

Well, Brother McBride, that is exactly what I came to Santa Ana for—to try and do you some good. I am more than glad to know that the purpose of my visit was accomplished. I am awfully sorry to learn of the accident which happened to the moving picture films you took, but it isn't any use to squawk over spilt milk. I am sorry for friend Fowler, but he has no one to blame but himself. The operator who had not enterprise enough to be present at an affair of that kind deserves all he got, and deserves it richly. Even if friend Fowler thought I couldn't tell him anything worth while, it nevertheless was up to him to be there, because he could not know positively that he would reap no benefit, and the man who couldn't spend a couple of hours in listening to something which might be of benefit to him in his business, especially when that particular thing had never occurred before and might never occur again, automatically proclaims himself to be lacking in enterprise, and the man who is lacking in enterprise most emphatically is not a top-notcher in his business. I have pleasant memories of my visit to Santa Ana, and shall long treasure the mental photograph of those wonderful orange and lemon-laden trees, which seemed to fill the whole landscape. I know I shall have the co-operation of the Santa Ana men in the future—that we will be able to work together, through the projection department, for the advancement of the profession of projection.

Film Cements.

L. E. Sweet, Fort Wayne, Ind., sends in film cement formulas which are presented herewith without comment, as the editor has had no chance to test them out and asks the following information:

> Would you kindly give me formula for making a film cement you can use without having to scrape off the emulsion? I have several formulas but none of that kind.

No Brother, I can't give you that kind of a formula and what is more I wouldn't do it if I could except with the warning that this department does not approve of splices made that way. There is ample and competent evidence that whereas a splice which appears to be very strong and efficient can be made with that kind of cement, still after a short time it loosens and gives way.

No. 1.

No. 2.

Equal parts Amyl Acetate and Acetone.

No. 3.

No. 4.

Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

Up to the time of the formation of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers the vast amount of technical work which has been done independently by firms and by individuals had no nucleus about which it might crystallize and emerge as a recognizable entity from the chaos of its conflicting elements.

Recognizing the urgent need for a body composed of members whose standing in the world of motion pictures would have prestige and weight with the rank and file in the settlement of many perplexing problems in the industry, C. Francis Jenkins, whose work as an inventor of motion picture apparatus in the pioneer days preeminently fitted him for leadership in bringing together the different specialists from the various branches of the industry, called a meeting early in 1916 at Washington, D. C., to which most of the prominent workers in the technical field of cinematography were invited. As a result of this meeting the Society of Motion Picture Engineers was formed.

The objects of the Society are: The advancement in the theory and practice of motion picture engineering and the allied arts and sciences, the standardization of the mechanisms and practices employed therein, and the maintenance of a high professional standing among its members.

An Active Member is one who is actually engaged in designing, developing or manufacturing materials, mechanisms or processes used in this or allied arts; and an Associate Member is one who, though not eligible to membership in the active class, is interested directly in the art.

Any person of good character may be a member in any or all classes to which he is eligible.

Prospective members shall be proposed in writing by at least two members in good standing, and may be elected only by the unanimous vote of the Board of Governors.

The entrance fee (for both Active and Associate Members) is twenty-five dollars ($25.00). The annual dues for Active Members is ten dollars ($10.00), payable in advance on July 1 of each year. The annual dues for Associate Members is five dollars ($5.00), payable in advance on July 1 of each year.

All receipts are expended directly to promote the objects of the Society and the interests of its members. There are no salaries or emoluments of any kind.

All applications for membership or transfers in class shall be made on blank forms provided for the purpose, and shall be accompanied by the required fee.

By the time this article appears in print the Society will have held its meeting at Chicago, July 16, 17, 18, during the Seventh Annual Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

Among the members are such men as Henry W. Hubbard, Secretary of the U. S. National Bureau of Standards, Donald J. Bell of the Bell & Howell Camera Co., E. M. Porter and Francis B. Cannock of the Precision Machine Co., Carl E. Akeley of the American Museum of Natural History, F. H. Richardson of the Moving Picture World, W. B. Westcott of the Technicolor Film Corp'n, Prof. H. Kellner of Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., Barton A. Proctor of Mass. Institute of Technology, Max Mayer of the Wohl Studio Light Co., C. A. Willat, founder of the Willat Studios, and many others of equal prominence.

The papers and proceedings of the society are of immense value to all technical workers in the industry. They are published and distributed free of charge to the members.

In accord with its beneficient policy the society desires upon its membership rolls the names of those in the industry who will be of benefit and be benefited by such an organization.

Believing that most of the readers of this article are eligible for membership the editor of this department as an active member of the society will willingly send a membership application blank and booklet describing the aims and object of the society to anyone eligible for membership; or applications may be made direct to the president, C. Francis Jenkins, 712 Eleventh St., N. W., Washington, D. C.

Even though you may be but a humble, ambitious worker in the field is all the more reason that you should join the society and do your bit to help in the work that the society is doing.

Photographers for U. S. Army.

The following letter has been received by the department in regard to photgraphers for the U. S. Army. While this circular relates particularly to still photographers, the Army and Navy both are in need of competent motion picture photographers:

> Address reply to Signal Officer, Eastern Department, 39 Whitehall St., New York City.
>
> HEADQUARTERS EASTERN DEPARTMENT,
> Office of the Signal Officer,
> Army Building, 39 Whitehall St.,
> New York City. 1917.
>
> FROM: Signal Officer, Eastern Department.
> TO:
> SUBJECT: Photographers.
>
> 1. The Signal Enlisted Reserve Corps of the United States Army is desirous of obtaining a number of experienced field photographers for the photography of military operations.
>
> 2. Those who have used view and film cameras are particularly desired as well as developers and assistants.
>
> 3. The opportunities for active field service are excellent and the photographic detachments will be with the headquarters of the various divisions and field armies. The work is most interesting and those enlisted for photgraphic work are rated Sergeants 1st Class, Sergeants, Corporals and Privates 1st Class, according to proficiency. Pay and rank correspond to the Regular Army, and clothing, subsistence, medical attention and quarters are furnished gratis.
>
> 4. Communicate with this office if you are interested in this work of vital importance and arrangements will be made for your examination and enlistment.
>
> CARL F. HARTMANN, Lieut. Col., Signal Corps.
> By D. C. Mason, Capt., Signal Corps, U. S. R.

Although the status of motion picture photographers is not at this writing definitely decided, it is likely that those of satisfactory ability will have a rank and pay equal to that of a lieutenant in the Regular Army. Physical examinations for applicants of proven ability will probably not be quite as severe as for other branches of the service. Further information concerning the enlistment of cinematographers may be obtained from Kendall Banning, Committee on Public Information, Washington, D. C.

Free Lance Market.

In addition to the topical news people there are smaller markets for negative that come up from time to time.

The Lyman H. Howe Films Co., Inc., 1202 Godfrey Bldg., 729 Seventh avenue, New York City, will buy films of exceptional quality in photography and human interest. They want only subjects that are educational, travel, natural history, aeronautics, scenic, naval and military, trick and cartoon, artistic and scientific film novelties, etc., but no dramatic films. Unlike the news weeklies the Howe Company does not necesarily insist that negatives be exclusive and some times pay for the privilege of a certain number of prints, after which the negative is returned to the owner.

Katherine F. Carter, Inc., Chandler Bldg., New York, will purchase educational and scenic negatives of unusual interest.

should adjourn while the committee goes before the other members to bring before them the welfare of this organization."

"I would suggest that the committee talk more about welfare than about candidates?" said Mr. Eager. "I am in favor of arbitration. I would like to have such a committee go to meet a similar committee appointed by the dissenters, that these two committees shall reach some sort of understanding by which this organization can meet again as one body for the common welfare of the whole."

Mr. Momand called attention to the retirement of the three candidates opposing Mr. Ochs, and inquired if the present incumbent would do the same. There were cries of "No, No!"

"I am in favor of the committee," said the president. "I think it is the right thing to do. What can we lose by it?"

The motion prevailed. On the committee were appointed Messrs. Eager of Nebraska, Fisher of Washington, Brown of Idaho, Clarke of Mississippi and Levy of Illinois. The session was then adjourned until 3 o'clock.

Wednesday Afternoon's Session.

The League convened Wednesday afternoon at 4 o'clock. Present as guests were many members of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, headed by President William A. Brady. Among those noted were Samuel Goldfish, Jules Brulatour, Watterson R. Rothacker, H. H. Bruenner, Richard A. Rowland, J. Robert Rubin, Walter W. Irwin, Adolph Zukor, Arthur James, Will Smith, Marcus Loew, Joe Brandt, William Sherrill, C. R. Seelye, J. A. Berst, J. H. Hallberg, J. D. Williams and Tom North.

President Brady was the first speaker. He was in his best vein, which by those who know him will be translated to mean he brought along his most pugnacious face and lightest and hardest hitting gloves.

"I had rather expected that after what happened an hour or so ago that I would have met here assembled all of the factions of the Exhibitors' League," began Mr. Brady slowly. "I see that one of the factions is not here and I am sorry, because I feel that a failure to readjust your differences will prevent your reaching a position where you will have a chance to become something more than a lot of men who have been chased from pillar to post about the country by a bunch of long-haired notoriety seekers who are trying to prove that the motion picture men of the United States are not good citizens and are not to be depended upon. It is being a unit, being one for all and all for one, it is standing together that will alter this condition.

"I see a lot of men in this room, all young, and smart, and clever, much younger than I am. I am one of the first of the deans of the show business in America. I have been in the show business for thirty-five years, a man who, even if he says it himself, can be classed as one of the showmen of the United States. I say to you young people, 'Just forget it.' I understand from the men who elected me that I am the representative of the motion picture industry, and I am proud to be that representative, but I am not proud to feel that for some reason or another we haven't got 100 per cent behind me.

"I am not here to preach politics, not for or against Lee Ochs. I have come in contact with him in twelve months many times, and I never knew one time when he was not 100 per cent. I haven't got any goods on Lee Ochs and I don't know any time in twelve months that he didn't play with his cards on the table as a four-square, honest, upright man.

"So with these words I want you to understand whether you are with me or against me. I hold for one thing.

"I am not a candidate for re-election. I am too tired. I don't want to blow my own trumpet, but I am here to be heckled, to answer any questions of any man in this room who has got any criticism to make about the conduct of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, which I represent. I have heard it said I am here to ruin the Exhibitors' League. Don't you believe it! I am here to help the Exhibitors' League.

"I don't claim to represent the screen of America. I was told yesterday some man here had said I represented the screen of America. I ask that man to rise. (No response.) I'll tell you. I happen to be one of the original Woodrow Wilson men. I happened to be a citizen of the State of New Jersey when Mr. Wilson was president of Princeton, before he became so much in public notice. It was because he knew me, knew me to be at the head of the association, and perhaps believed me to be an honest man, that he named me to mobilize the industry.

"I am only asked to mobilize it. I don't want any offices; I don't want to go to Washington. I want to name the representative men of the industry to co-operate in the greatest case of national emergency we have known in a hundred years. I want to give this struggling infant a great national proposition."

Mr. Brady read the President's letter asking him to organize the trade for the war. "This was written to your business," he went on, "by the present representative of the United States. I am only your representative. I am not trying to represent the screen of America.

"God Almighty, I wish you people had been with us people in Washington last Wednesday and seen the reception we got from one department after another. The Secretary of the Interior told us that the one industry in the whole United States whose co-operation was most wanted was the industry of the men now seated in this room. Doing what? Trying to pull down the structure that has been built up. You men get together. I demand that you get together. I have got the job as the president of the industry and I stand as the representative of your President and demand that you get together, make the motion picture industry of the next twelve months represent 100 per cent., and you will never be dragged into the legislatures and driven from pillar to post. That is all. Every man must make good in this national emergency and the motion picture business will be established as a responsible business in the United States for the rest of our existence.

Boston Delegates on Way to Chicago.

"Suppose six months ago some one had told you this would happen—that the Government was going to call upon you in preference to the newspapers? I am delegated to try to form a great national organization of exhibitors, technical men, actors, producers, directors, of every man, woman and child connected with the business, so that you will stand for what you want to stand and grasp the opportunity that has been put up to you."

Mr. Brady again appealed to the delegates to compose their differences. "I am not playing politics," he insisted. "The man who says I am is a liar. I am not a candidate for reelection, and I don't want it.

"You exhibitors think that the producers are your enemies. They are not. They are your friends. I was told some one said the reason I could not speak here was because I was in favor of the deposit system. I don't know what the hell the deposit system is! (Laughter.)

"Try to get together. Don't let the National Association eat you up. You would be boobs. It is not impossible that two great organizations should hold general conventions, should develop, should contribute their money to one general fund; no reason why the National Association should be run for the last twelve months without exhibitors, with one exception, putting up a cent.

"We have spent three or four thousand dollars for the exhibitors to attend the meetings of the association. Screen of America? For God's sake, pay something for the support of the screen. That all this fighting in these forty-eight states in the Union we have done, and I go on record and dare anyone to deny it. The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has saved this industry over three million dollars in the last twelve months, and none of the money that I could find except in one instance came from men who really profited by the legislation.

"All I say is this: If you respect yourselves, if you take yourselves seriously, get together. If you will you have a big, fine opportunity. Let us have a great big real association in the United States. Your worthy president thought when I sent a big bunch of telegrams I was trying to put something over. I was not. I was doing what the President of the United States wanted me to do. I was just trying to make the Exhibitors' League 100 per cent."

Other speakers were Walter W. Irwin, Adolph Zukor, C. R. Seelye, J. Robert Rubin, who brought word of conciliatory negotiations being under way; William L. Sherrill, Marcus Loew, who intimated that soon he might be called upon to let his business run itself and go to Washington for the Government; Samuel Goldfish, Joe Brandt, J. H. Hallberg and William M. Blair of the Four-Minute Bureau.

There was a long discussion on the music tax. Mr. Goldsmith, of New York, who has examined the question from the legal side, reported that if the tax suggested by the composers' association should be put into effect it would cost picture theater owners between one and two million dollars a year. The rate was $30 for a 300-seat house, $45 for $600 seats, $60 for 800 seats, and $300 for 2,100 seats. The recommendation of the committee was that the payment of the tax be opposed and that Congress be appealed to for relief. The entire matter was left to the incoming executive committee.

Mr. Eager announced the committee on arbitration was ready to report. He had just come from the Morrison Hotel, where the dissatisfied delegates were in session. He said there were more of them than there were in the hall at that time. Upon hearing which remark a delegate from the Northwest, Mr. Chamberlain, lost no time in moving that the reporters be excluded.

Wednesday Evening's Session.

Prior to the opening of the Wednesday evening session the arriving delegates were entertained by a variation of the Boston Boosters' slogans. The New Yorkers began singing "We want to go to Boston to the Movie Exposish."

When the meeting opened Mr. Jeup moved that in the event of any controversy arising between the two factions it be referred to the aribtration committee and not fought out on the floor. It was carried.

The president announced the arrival of President Brady, of the National Association, and a party of guests. The association's chief was introduced as presiding officer and was welcomed by the delegates with cheers and the singing of "For he's a jolly good fellow" and the Bostonians' "harmony" song.

Mr. Brady introduced the Rev. Dr. Christian F. Reisner, of Grace Church, New York City, a neighbor of the National's president and a stanch friend of many years standing of the motion picture. Dr. Reisner spoke entertainingly—for everybody but the stenographer—for a quarter of an hour. Like rain he sprinkled statistics at the rate of three hundred words a minute. Other speakers were Mr. Blair, Mr. Woods and Evan Evans, of the Government's public speaking bureaus, and J. J. O'Connor, of the central division of the Red Cross.

"I hope what you have heard in the last few minutes arouses you to the importance of the motion picture," said Mr. Brady. "I say now, boys, get together. You haven't scratched the dirt in your business; you don't know how far you are going. I say to you American men and women I am ashamed of you if you don't get together. Drop your petty jealousies and be real men." (Cheers.)

On formal motion Mr. Brady was invited to remain for the evening's deliberations.

"I am going to say this convention will not be complete unless I make a speech," said Mr. Rembusch. "I have always made one speech at every convention. I am one of the founders of this League, and it is one of the things you have to suffer. I will make it four minutes." Mr. Rembusch reviewed the early days of the League, talked of the democratic nature of the meetings, how all exhibitors were welcome and then complained of the five policemen he found on the door on the opening day.

"Gentlemen, I am going to move right now," said Mr. Rembusch, "that this convention give a place to any exhibitor without voice, a place to any bona fide exhibitor, that he may listen to the deliberations of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America." (Cheers.)

Report of the Committee of Ten.

This is probably as good a place as any to insert the agreement of the joint committee of ten, under which the two factions resumed work. It was introduced in executive session and adopted unanimously. It is as follows:

"Chicago, July 18, 1917.

"We, your joint committee on arbitration, beg leave to submit the following report and recommendations:

"First—That the best interests of the motion picture industry will be served by one national organization composed of exhibitors of the United States.

"Second—We are of the opinion that the differences between the delegates can be adjusted fairly and amicably to the satisfaction of all factions by proper discussion in a generally convened assembly.

"Third—That in the deliberations of the convention the fullest privileges shall be granted to all persons in the discussion of all matters under consideration, and that the same rights be accorded to the consideration of a minority report of a committee as is accorded to the report of the majority.

"Fourth—We recommend that all of the present known candidates for election to any office in this organization retire as candidates for the respective offices, and that the convention proceed to the election of officers with a view of securing the greatest amount of harmony and efficiency possible.

"Fifth—We recommend that all delegates attend the meeting at the Coliseum at 7:30 p. m. this evening, and at this time and place the delegates by regular parliamentary proceedings adjust all differences.

"Any grievances coming on the floor should be referred to a joint committee of two to act as an arbitration committee."

Mr. Eager, for the arbitration committee, said it had been agreed that exhibitors who are members of the League and exhibitors who have left with the secretary applications for membership could attend the sessions, but would not be permitted to participate in the proceedings. They also would be required to sit apart from the delegates.

Mr. Brandt, speaking for the finance committee, said the books of the secretary and treasurer were in the hands of an expert and that the report of his committee could not be ready until the day following.

Mr. Heaney, of Illinois, objected to the presence of some Illinois exhibitors at the back of the hall. M. A. Choynski was said to be the object of his disapproval. The incident was the first rumble of a storm to break later.

While Mr. Hopp was reading the report of the committee on by-laws, which amounted practically to a rewriting of the book, the presence of the Illinois visitors was again complained of. It was contended that the secretary had a check for $10 to cover the initiation of four men. Mr. Pettijohn claimed the men had a right under that to remain and Mr. Eager agreed with him. Mr. Levy protested that the four men were expelled by the Illinois state organization, and must be formally reinstated before they would be entitled to remain.

There was marked excitement when the tall form of Choyinski appeared in the center aisle. Choyinski walked rapidly toward the front of the hall, demanding to be heard.

"Throw him out!" came from all over the house. The aisle was filled immediately and members pushed the intruder toward the door. There was every indication of a red-hot scrap. Even the policemen at the door looked more cheerful.

Mr. Eager obtained the floor, and there were many who wanted it. "There is a right way to correct every wrong," he said. "In my early days I was taught this maxim: 'There is a remedy for every wrong.' Our committee, the conference committee, was not informed of the fact that men who would make application would try to slip into this convention. As a man who voted in the affirmative for this report I am going to move a reconsideration of the action of this body on that report and then I am going to move that we make an exception in the case of men who have been expelled by any organization and that they shall not be permitted on this floor."

The delegates were on their feet and cheering.

Mr. Pettijohn announced that the men had left the floor and the motion was not put. The cause of the trouble were Choynski, Louis Frank, Henry Schoenstadt and Adolph Powell.

"Mr. President, ask the Boston delegates to give us their 'harmony' song," said Mr. Rembusch.

Everybody laughed and peace once more reigned.

The majority report of the committee on by-laws was accepted and the minority report, which applied to but two sections, was laid on the table.

The president's report was then read. It was a document of nearly 3,000 words, about a third of which was devoted to his official activities and the remainder to talking about the Trade Review and incidentally to paying his respects to the Moving Picture World and the Motion Picture News. In his financial report he said he began his year with an actual deficit of $51.07. The receipts for the year, including $5,000 from the 1916 exposition, were $6,733.55. The expenses of the executive committee and organizer were $2,715.73. Salaries and railroad fares totaled $4,812.75. The president announced his expenses as railroad fares, $150; printing, $176.50; stenographer, $136.50; telegrams, $26.25; a total of $552.25.

The nomination of officers was declared to be in order. To comply with the constitutional requirement that the election take place on the third day, and as it was certain the election could not be completed before midnight, it was decided to set the clock back for three hours. B. S. Aronson, of North Carolina; J. T. Collins, of New Jersey, and Ray Andrews, of Indiana, were named as tellers.

When Illinois was reached in the roll-call Joe Hopp announced that Illinois yielded to New York. Louis Levine, of Brooklyn, placed Lee A. Ochs, of New York, in nomination for president. Mr. Levine did not confine himself to the usual diplomatic phraseology of nominators. Even his friends were getting uneasy. When he said that if we must have rivalry let us have clean rivalry Mr. Eager interrupted.

"I object, Mr. President, to any nominating speeches casting aspersions on any delegates on this floor." (Applause.)

Dr. Hespe, of New Jersey, seconded the nomination. It was his first appearance on the floor since his attack on the protestants in the morning session which precipitated the incident with Jake Wells

There was deep silence in the hall when as the last slate was called it was disclosed there was to be no other nomination.

Percy Wells and Mr. Pettijohn both appealed to the president to withdraw his name from nomination, calling attention to the clause in the arbitration agreement.

All eyes were turned on Mr. Eager as he was recognized by the chair. He began by reciprocating on behalf of himself the kindly sentiments expressed by Mr. Wells for the administration members of the arbitration committee. He pointed out that Mr. Wells had made the same suggestions before the committee that he had just outlined—i. e., that all candidates retire absolutely from the field.

"This government was founded as a democracy," said Mr. Eager. "I believe in the rule of the people. I long ago took the stand that has been taken by my fellow-townsman, Mr. Bryan. Power comes from the people up rather than from the government down. This rule should come from the delegates themselves and not be handed down by any committee, no matter how much power has been given to its members at the time of their appointment

"The resolution was originally written that the present candidate should not be considered a candidate. That was stricken out and the resolution was made to read that the president should retire as a candidate. In other words, that the president of this association should not use the power of his office or be an active candidate.

"Not once since I have been in the city of Chicago has Mr. Ochs said 'office' to me; so if he has used his office or his prerogative or any other effort to regain his nomination it has not been with me. It has been with others. Each of you know whether he has violated any right or proprieties of his office. If he has solicited you he has not solicited me.

"I am a firm believer in majority rule. If I had any idea in my mind that there was not a large majority of delegates actually, actively, earnestly in favor of Mr. Ochs I would stand here and oppose his re-election as I am now contending for the principle of majority rule.

"Mr. Ochs means nothing to me. I tell you I never met him before I came to Chicago. I am not even a reader of his paper, but I have learned since I came to this convention to respect his abilities as an organizer. He has handed you back your organization a much better organization than he received it.

"I believe that this organization is to be congratulated on having Mr. Ochs at its head. I want to say this much more. I believe there are among the opposition to Mr. Ochs as good men as there are here in his support.

"For many years it was my privilege to fight with the minority. We never had votes enough to elect any one to office, but we were always right. Time has proved we were right. They have gone to work and given us federal reserve banks. They don't call it farm legislation. They call it democracy. So I say here today I don't mind criticism if it be in the interests of all."

Cheers followed cheers for Eager. He had arrived at the top, easily the first man in the convention. The situation was not unlike that twenty-one years before in the same city following the "Cross of Gold" speech of Eager's fellow-townsman. The tinder was placed and a spark in the shape of an audible suggestion that he be named for president probably would have elected the Nebraskan. The fact that it was not forthcoming was proof of the spontaneity and the sincerity of his remarks. It developed afterward he had previously declined to be considered as a candidate.

"Mr. President, are you going to accept this nomination?" asked Jake Wells.

"I am not on trial," responded the chair.

Mr. Wells repeated his interrogation.

"If it is the will of the convention," was the answer.

Without any further remarks a goodly number of delegates passed out of the hall, and the split was on.

The tellers proceeded with the calling of the roll, which showed 178 votes out of a total of 237 recorded for Mr. Ochs.

Mr. Ochs' Speech of Acceptance.

"Delegates, this is nothing new. This is a joke—these bolting fellows," said Mr. Ochs in reply to a question as to whether he would accept. "They mean nothing to our young lives at all. It is a cinch.

"I will tell you what I am going to do. Am I going to accept it? I would like to see anybody stop me. (Cries and cheers.) You have seen Leo Ochs work hard. I have worked so hard that I am tired—my wife has fought with me to stop it, said that all I talked about when I get home is the League. I admit, not for any personal reasons of my own, that I have worked hard, but I am going to work harder, a whole lot harder. (Cheers and applause.)

"Do you know why?

"I will tell you. I will give these States that bolted sixty days to come back into this League. If they don't I will bet thousands of dollars that I will have more exhibitors in those States in my League than they ever had. (Cheers and applause.)

"They are not playing with a baby. I can trim any one of them.

"When I set out to do something I do it. This is nothing but a fight of exhibitors. This has been the dirtiest and rottenest fight of the Exhibitors and the Motion Picture News which paid their candidates. Please, I did not tell any member of this convention that Varner collected his traveling expenses from three firms in New York—one a producer concern, one a distributing concern, and a trade paper concern.

"What would happen if the president of your League collected money from film corporations? What would you think of that? Listen! Just give me a little time. If I don't trim that bunch, I am through. (Laughter and applause.)

"I want to say that two States have stuck in with just a couple of members, Indiana with two, Oklahoma with three and Michigan with one. As far as Oklahoma is concerned, that State is the last State I thought would go against me. I won't bring up the past, but if anybody has been with Oklahoma the President and Secretary know that I am and always have been with Oklahoma and I always will be, as long as you are good boys.

"Listen! I just wish I was in action already. When it comes to exhibitors' propositions I think I know those babies well. I want to say to you that the exhibitors who have been loyal to me have certainly been loyal, but as loyal as they have been I will show my appreciation by doubling it to them, and I want to say to you States that are new in this League that I myself personally will do anything in the world for you to help build your organization and make it what it should be, and if I can't do it alone you have got the Exhibitors' Trade Review to do it for you. (Applause.)

"When I think of these trade papers—a baby eight months old, we started on a shoe string—we got promises from the League for support financially and nothing doing. In eight months we got a full grown man and the biggest one in the industry.

"And don't forget, I predict this: Before the year is over I am going to pull something else for you, and believe me it is something good, and when I pull it those babies of bolters will get theirs. Take it from me, all I want you to do is to give me a bunch of good officers and if I don't start things going soon I am all in.

"I don't know how to begin to thank you, but rest assured I will do the right thing for you. I want to make a statement. Next year I will not be a candidate for the presidency. I will not be, because I don't think it is necessary. I am going to come to the next convention wherever it is going to be, and if I don't give you the biggest convention you ever had you can take me and dump me in the Charles River and say 'fare thee well.'"

As Mr. Ochs resumed his seat Mr. Pettijohn rose. There was deep silence as he began speaking. The stillness was oppressive as he finished. Somehow his conclusion had not been so laudatory of Mr. Ochs as his opening had promised to be. He had indulged in a brand of irony somewhat new to film conventions.

"My brother delegate from Indiana, Mr. Rae Andrews, and myself are very tired, and we desire to go to our hotel for a much needed rest," said Mr. Pettijohn. "When we retire we ask that our leaving be not misunderstood. (Applause.)

"Indiana has tried to be fair in this convention and we have striven hard to avoid a split.

"Before leaving it is my personal desire to pay my respects to our new president. (Great applause.) I want to congratulate our newly elected president for the dignified manner in which he has presided over this convention (applause), and I want especially to compliment him upon the dignified speech he has just delivered. I want more especially to compliment him upon his dignified choice of language and especially his epigram in which he referred to my fellow-delegates from Indiana as 'those babies.' I am certain that most of his remarks about us are justified, else he would not have made them.

"I am still here as a delegate to this convention and I believe that it is as much my privilege to fly around the electric chandeliers of this hall and kiss myself on the back of my neck as it was the privilege of the preceding speaker.

"And so in retiring let it be understood that I have taken this opportunity to pay my sincere respects to our President for the ensuing year.

"Mr. President and gentlemen, Indiana bids you good-night."

Officers Elected and Committees Appointed.

The delegates then proceeded to the election of the remainder of the officers. Here is the complete result:

Thomas, Nebraska; fourth vice-president, F. J. Fisher, Washington; executive secretary, William Brandt, New York; financial secretary, William J. Sweeney, Illinois; treasurer, Ernest H. Horstmann, Massachusetts.

Boston Next Year's Convention City.

Detroit had in the earlier days of the convention been a contender for the honor of being the next convention and exposition city, but the thorough organization of the Massachusetts boys under the chairmanship of Sam Grant soon took the wind out of the sails of the Wolverines. When the matter came to an issue it was Boston all the way.

President Brady, of the National Association, dropped into the convention hall at 2 o'clock and declared his dissatisfaction with the failure of the delegates to hold together. The situation was explained to him and his indignation was partly lowered.

Taken by and large, the 1917 convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America was some show. It was a man's size party.

MARGERY WILSON'S FIRST STARRING VEHICLE.

Triangle Director Tom Heffron and company, headed by Margery Wilson and Charles Gunn, have departed for Felten, California, where they will film the exterior scenes for the first Triangle play starring Miss Wilson. The piece hinges about a story of Kentucky feuds and moonshine plots and was written expressly for Miss Wilson by Monte Katterjohn immediately after she had signed a three-year contract with Triangle to play star roles exclusively. Charles Gunn will be seen in the leading male part, that of a quaint old Kentucky schoolmaster.

THIRD OLIVE THOMAS PLAY.

Lynn Reynolds, a recent addition to the Triangle Culver City studio directorial force, this week is preparing the script for his first Triangle play, from his own story, which will star Olive Thomas. It will be Miss Thomas' third starring vehicle. Miss Thomas will be supported by George Chesbro, while George Hernandez has an important character part. The locale of the story is in Arizona and New York City, and Director Reynolds is planning to take his company to the desert to get the true Arizona atmosphere.

Exhibitors Form New Association

The American, With Jake Wells as President and Charles Pettijohn as General Manager, Organized at Chicago.

THE American Exhibitors' Association has been incorporated under the laws of Indiana. The new organization is the outgrowth of the meetings held at the Morrison Hotel, Chicago, by the eighty-five delegates who claimed they were not getting a square deal at the hands of the president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America during the first two days of the convention in the Coliseum, Chicago, last week. While on Wednesday evening it had been believed the differences between the two factions had been composed, the refusal of President Ochs to decline the nomination after it had been formally tendered him by the convention was followed by the abrupt departure from the hall of the leaders of the dissatisfied faction.

Those who left the Coliseum proceeded to the Morrison, where was organized the American Exhibitors' Association. The following day these officers were elected: President, Jake Wells, of Virginia; vice-president, Guy Wonders, of Maryland; treasurer, William Fait, Jr., New York; general manager, Charles Pettijohn, Indiana. It is definitely announced that offices will be opened in New York in a couple of weeks. Detroit was decided on as the next convention city, the date to be determined later.

Mr. Pettijohn had not walked out with his associates, but had remained until after his rejoinder to the acceptance speech of President Ochs. There was a belief on the part of the friends of the League president that Mr. Pettijohn was to remain with the League, but the idea was pretty thoroughly smashed after he had finished his short address. His cryptic and good humored if ironic phrases left little hope.

The dissatisfied delegates met at the Morrison on Tuesday evening and decided to remain away from the convention hall the following morning pending a report from a committee of five which they named to present their case to the convention. The committee was composed of Jake Wells, W. J. Slimm, of Ohio; A. B. Momand, of Oklahoma; Mr. Pettijohn and Percy W. Wells, of North Carolina. The work of that committee before the convention is described in the story of the League's doings on other pages of this issue.

At the Morrison the delegates were holding continuous sessions throughout the day, awaiting the result of the conference which had begun shortly after noon, when the League had named Messrs. Eager, Fisher, Brown, Levy and Clarke to meet the Morrison committee. Frank J. Rembusch of Indiana was in the chair and Sam Bullock acted as secretary.

Fred Herrington, national organizer of the League during the past year, presented his report at the morning meeting. Mr. Mosher, of Buffalo, described conditions in his city. Other speakers were Mr. Varner, of North Carolina, who had been an active candidate for the presidency of the League, but who in the attempt to reach a conciliation had withdrawn from the contest; Mr. Willey, of Kansas; M. A. Choynski, of Illinois, one of those who had been expelled by the Illinois League, and who later attempted to speak at the League meeting, but was compelled to retire; Harry M. Crandall, of Washington, D. C., and Guy Wonders, of Maryland.

At 2 o'clock appeared the committee of the League and asked for a conference, which was granted. J. E. Sherwood, of Wisconsin, was in the chair during the afternoon session. The grievance of the expelled Chicago members was heard, the matter being presented by Mssrs. Schoenstadt and Powell. A delegation was received from the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry offering its services in harmonizing the difficulty. This was composed of President William A. Brady, Adolph Zukor and Samuel Goldfish.

Later the joint committee presented the report of their conclusions, which will be found in the proceedings of the convention elsewhere in this journal and it was decided to attend the evening session of the League.

The writer on Friday looked up Mr. Rembusch, who has been active in the formation of the new association. Mr. Rembusch represented one of the four states in the first convention of the League and has attended each subsequent one. His interest in the organization has always been of the keenest; he has been one of its most active members. He was one of the three whose candidacies were discontinued as a result of the joint conferences between the Morrison group and the League.

"Briefly, the new organization is being built upon these principles," said Mr. Rembusch in answer to an inquiry. "It shall be an organization of motion picture owners, and unless you can show you are a bona fide exhibitor you will not be allowed to remain a member. Some of the delegates at this convention were not exhibitors. There will be fewer delegates at conventions, and each assembly will be more representative.

"A charter will be issued to every state in the Union, as a state, and furthermore, a charter will be issued to cities that have a very large population, which charter will give it equal voting power with any state. For example, New York City will have a charter of its own, while the remainder of New York State, which, of course, has a lesser population, also will have a charter of its own. The principal reason for this is that in the past the largest cities have been able to control the delegation of their entire state through the fact that they could get together much more easily against the small exhibitor.

"As an illustration, a down-state New York exhibitor said to me that the exhibitors in his community wanted to so run their organization that on matters in which New York City was concerned they could affiliate and that on matters that concerned them solely they would have absolute autonomy.

"In charge of our office in New York will be a permanent general manager. Every exhibitor in the United States is requested to join our organization, and will be welcomed, whether he belongs to the League or not. Mr. Brady of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has kindly invited the new organization to join his association. We intend to establish in the minds of all men in the industry, including those on trade journals, the fact that we are a national exhibitors' organization.

"In the beginning the idea of the founders was to base conventions more on the order of a Chautauqua of the motion picture industry. We were going to have prominent speakers and the larger men in the industry were to address exhibitors on topics pertaining to the business. The movement was entirely one of uplift, for clean pictures, in spite of adverse legislation. It was said furthermore, and we established a precedent we have always followed out, that an exhibitor could come to that convention and hear every word of the deliberations, but if a man was interested in the exchange or manufacturing business he could have no voice or part in the deliberations.

"This year we came to Chicago, and instead of finding our regular doorkeepers appointed by the credentials committee, we were greeted by policemen, and if you had not a delegate's or alternate's badge you could not get into the room.

"When I protested I was told that it was to be an executive meeting, and therefore at this particular session no one unless a delegate or alternate could get into the room. Prior to the convention all the trade journals invited the exhibitors of the country to come to Chicago, assuring them they would be welcome to hear the deliberations. There were to be special places for them, as there always had been where they could find out what was going on. I know that there were many exhibitors from Indiana who were refused admittance, and they censured me personally.

"Mr. Ochs presided over the convention in such a manner that he was able to control things as he desired. There were some states that had enormous delegations. For example, one state had twenty-seven delegates, twenty-seven votes, that had never done anything prominent in the organization. A state to have large voting power would necessarily under the bylaws have a bona fide membership of nearly seven hundred. We wired that state and found they had only seventy-five members in good standing in the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and therefore would be entitled to only eight votes.

"In other words, we found we were in a packed convention, packed by Ochs delegates, who were determined to insist upon the re-election of Ochs. We found furthermore that many of these delegates pledged to Ochs were stockholders in the Trade Review, a publication that Mr. Ochs founded with the sanction of the League and is promoting it by calling it their official organ. Our contention is that no man should be allowed to control an organization when by so doing he is given the opportunity to further a business scheme in which he is personally interested. One man who was at that convention had $10,000 stock in the Trade Review. We have absolutely nothing against the Trade Review as a trade journal. We believe all the trade papers should be free and unhampered and in the field on their own merits, that if the League should have a trade paper then the League ought to own the entire paper.

"We further feel that Ochs delegates were composed of men who were stockholders in a trade paper or else were new men who had come to the convention without knowing or realizing fully the importance of the convention, with the view that it was entirely a proposition to promote the trade journals and not a League for the best interests of the exhibitors.

"After two days assembling, the men who appreciated the situation, the men who have long been in organization work, began to express their dissatisfaction and held a meeting of protest on Tuesday night at the Morrison Hotel. We decided we would not bolt, but that we would remain away from the convention and appoint a committee of five to wait on the convention with a proposal coming from delegates from twenty-three states as a protest against the tactics employed up to that time and were scheduled to be employed until the convention should be three days old and it could proceed to elect Mr. Ochs on the regular third day.

"You have probably told your readers how the two committees were appointed by the two factions. They were to go into conference and arbitrate, to make specific suggestions of procedure. It was agreed upon, and the protesting faction insisted that whatever that committee of ten decided on would be final.

"The committee reported that it had been the unanimous verdict that all candidates for president who had been announced so far would retire and a new national president from the floor other than those men would be nominated and elected.

"When Mr. Ochs insisted on remaining a candidate the protesting delegates quietly retired and went to the Morrison. You know the rest." G. B.

Illinois League Entertains at Banquet

Five Hundred Exhibitors and Film Men and Their Friends Are Guests of the Exposition Managers.

THE Illinois League was host to visiting exhibitors and film men at a large banquet held in the ballroom of the Hotel Morrison, Chicago, on the evening of Thursday, July 20. Fully 500 were present. It was late when the diners sat down, nearly midnight as a matter of fact. In the gathering were many film men from New York. It was after 1 o'clock when Joe Hopp, the toastmaster, called upon the first speaker, President Ochs.

There was applause when the president announced that the exposition then being held by the exhibitors at the Coliseum would be the most successful one ever held by any state. For the achievement he praised Ludwig Schindler, the exposition manager.

The speaker thanked those who had stood with him during his administration. "It was entirely unnecessary," he went on, referring to those who had left the League, "that these gentlemen should have taken the attitude that they did. It was only fair to all of us that they abide by the decision of the majority. I ask them, if they be in the room (there were many of the opposing faction present), to think and think well before they decide entirely to bolt." There was applause when the speaker said the receipts of the exposition would be double those of last year.

As Mr. Ochs concluded he was presented—and it was declared the gift was for Mrs. Ochs as well as for himself—with a large silver tea service. In thanking the givers the president said the gift would go far to square him with his partner in the ownership when he came in late from League meetings.

Maclay Hoyne, state's attorney, declared he was not the man who put censorship in the "movies." "Neither am I going to defend any one who has that very unpleasant task," he added. "I have troubles of my own."

State Senator Manning was introduced by Mr. Hopp as a particular friend of the motion picture men and industry and one who recently had been a friend indeed in Springfield when censorship was threatened.

Mr. Manning deprecated the efforts he had made in Springfield. "I don't think I had a big job in convincing the men there that we needed no censorship in this state," he said, "and I don't think it would be difficult to prove it to you. I think censorship is not only un-American, but that it is absolutely against the liberty of the individual. An industry which is so well patronized throughout the whole United States certainly needs encouragement rather than repression, which censorship would bring it."

Other speakers were Ludwig Schindler, W. Stephen Bush —whose topic was "Loyalty"—and F. E. Eager, of Lincoln, Neb., the latter of whom, though by common consent he had been the leading man in the convention, had been seated during the banquet in a remote corner of the room.

"Mr. Toastmaster, ladies and gentlemen," said Mr. Eager, "I came a long way here to bring you greetings and to tell you that we in Nebraska are beginning to realize that the moving picture business is a great industry." Mr. Eager spoke of the growth of the motion picture from small beginnings, and in comparison referred to the hard days of the steamboat in its inception, of the telephone, and cited how the submarine had in its essentials realized the dream of the wildest imagination as indicated by "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea."

The toastmaster then presented to the diners the various players who had been present at the exposition.

National Association Meeting

Holds Short Session in Chicago and Adjourns to New York.

THE National Association of the M. P. I. met in annual convention at Princess theater in Chicago at 11 a. m. Wednesday, July 18; President W. A. Brady in the chair. There were about thirty representatives of the industry in attendance. Reports of the several committees were made by the chairmen of each and the nominations of the members chosen for the board of directors from the different branches were elected unanimously by vote of the convention, as follows: William A. Brady, World Film Corporation; D. W. Griffith, D. W. Griffith Enterprises; William L. Sherrill, Frohman Amusement Corporation; Carl Laemmle, Universal Manufacturing Company; Adolph Zukor, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; J. A. Berst, Pathe Exchange; Arthur S. Friend, Paramount Pictures Corporation; Walter W. Irwin, Vitagraph-V-L-S-E; P. A. Powers, Universal Manufacturing Company; Richard A. Rowland, Metro Pictures Corporation; Donald J. Bell, Bell & Howell Company; J. E. Brulatour, Eastman Films; J. H. Hallberg, United Theater Equipment Corporation; Walter J. Moore, H. C. Miner Company; J. F. Skerrett, Nicholas Power Company; Paul Gulick, Universal; Arthur James, Metro; William A. Johnston, Moving Picture News; Joseph F. Lee, States rights buyer; Thomas G. Wiley. An increase in the board of directors was not voted on, this matter being deferred for further discussion.

At this point a committee from the "bolters" from the National Exhibitors' League appeared before the National Association of the M. P. I. and asked for a hearing, which was granted by the chairman. After Mr. Rembusch, of Indiana, and Jake Wells, of Virginia, had stated their reasons for withdrawing from the National Exhibitors' League, it was moved that a committee of arbitration from N. A. M. P. I. be appointed to appear before the convention of the exhibitors at the Coliseum to aid in the restoration of harmony. This motion was unaimously carried and the first session of the N. A. M. P. I. adjourned to meet on Thursday morning at 10 o'clock. A quorum not being present at Thursday's session the president adjourned it, sine die, to reconvene in New York City.

Convention Sidelights.

There is something significant about the mixture of harmony, Tammany and beans—furnished by the delegates from Boston and other places bordering on the Sound. We knew something was going to happen. They made a big noise, a lot of fun, these self-same "Booming boosters for Boston," and they carried home the bacon.

* * *

The National Association of the M. P. I. was to convene at the Princess theater in Chicago on Thursday morning, the 19th. We found the place, but no meeting. It repaired to New York, where it will deliberate more deliberately at some future date.

* * *

At the banquet Thursday night we counted between three and four hundred noses and then some.

* * *

During the banquet the president-elect was presented with a tea service in acknowledgment of services rendered. Sombody said: "I hope it is suggestive of a tempest in a tea-pot and everybody will get together again."

* * *

The Chicago exposition was a pronounced success, more largely attended and more profitable than last year. Those in charge deserve great credit for the way in which they handled it. Boston will have to go some to beat the "Windy City." We understand Fred Hartman will design the Boston affair and aid the "Hub" put it over. Experience is a great teacher and Boston never fails to make good.

AMERICAN PHOTOPLAYER WANTS TO KNOW.

An effort is being made by the Robert Morton Company (branch of the American Photo Player Company) to learn what the exhibitor wants to know about the Robert Morton Symphonic Orchestra. To this end the Robert Morton Company has sent to exhibitors generally an invitation requesting them to apply for more data on the subject of the instrument in question and offering to send an expert without cost to the applicant, from whom the exhibitor may obtain all the information he desires.

"Jack and the Beanstalk" Opening

Initial Fox Kiddie Feature to Appear at Globe Theater Beginning July 30.

WILLIAM FOX'S much-heralded "Jack and the Beanstalk," directed by C. M. and S. A. Franklin, will make its appearance on Broadway, at the Globe Theater, beginning Monday evening, July 30th. There will be two showings a day, matinee and evening, excepting on holidays and Sundays, when it will be continuous from 1 to 11 o'clock. All seats will be reserved—matinees, 25 cents to 50 cents; evenings, 25 cents to $1.

"Jack and the Beanstalk" is a ten-reel special, the first of the famous "Fox Kiddie Features," and will be released on the "Standard Pictures" programme on August 26th. The other releases of the Kiddie series, now announced, are "Babes in the Woods," "Treasure Island" and "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," with others to follow.

In this connection it is interesting to note that the Lee Kids—Jane and Katherine—have made such a wonderful showing and have proved so popular on the Fox programme in "Two Little Imps," that they will be booked hereafter as "Standard Pictures" and listed with the "Fox Kiddie Features."

In "Jack and the Beanstalk" are wonderful child performers that will be a revelation to the picture-going public. The juvenile "Jack" of giant-killing fame is really marvelous in his acting, and the little five-year-old tot who plays the Princess Regina is already acclaimed as the junior Marlowe of the films. Then there is a villain—a fierce, mustachio-twirling kiddie—that will take the people by storm. To this talented aggregation, with the assistance of several hundred other tots, it is announced, the Lee Kids will be added.

William Fox carries the people back to the "Once Upon a Time Period" in "Jack and the Beanstalk." Everybody knows the story. Mr. Fox has modernized it somewhat, giving it an even more delightful tinge. The other "Fox Kiddie Features" to follow will come in regular order, not too close to satiate the public. Beautiful tales by writers, whose works have filled the hearts of children with joy, will be presented by Mr. Fox. Children's pictures for children by children, and for their grown-up cousins and their aunts, is the newest Fox slogan.

CONSTANCE TALMADGE IN "THE LESSON."

Constance Talmadge will make her formal bow as a moving picture star in her own right at the Broadway theater, following the run of "The Lone Wolf." Her first picture since she joined the Lewis J. Selznick forces, "The Lesson," has been completed and is now waiting for "The Lone Wolf" run to end.

Motion Picture Engineers Meet

The Society Held Two-Day Convention in Hotel Sherman and Established Valuable Rules and Recommendations on Standardization

THE convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers was held in the West Room of the Sherman Hotel, Chicago, Monday and Tuesday, July 16 and 17. C. Francis Jenkins, president of the organization, occupied the chair during the sessions.

The first day was devoted to the reading of papers and to discussions on the subject of standardization, and at the Tuesday sessions the following recommendations for the establishment of such standards were formulated and approved:

Film Speed: A film movement of sixty feet per minute through motion picture machines shall be considered a standard speed.

Frame Line: The dividing line between pictures on a motion picture film shall be exactly midway between the marginal perforations.

Projection Angle: The maximum permissible angle in motion picture projection shall not exceed twelve degrees (12°) from a perpendicular to the screen surface.

Projection Lens Foci: The focus of motion picture projection lenses shall increase in ¼-inch steps to 8 inches, and from 8 to 9 inches in ½-inch steps.

Projection Lens Mounting: Picture projection lenses shall be so mounted that the light from the picture aperture shall have an uninterrupted full path to the rear component of the lens.

Standard Picture Film shall be 1⅜ inches in width and carry a picture for each four perforations, the vertical position of the picture being longitudinal of the film.

Lantern Slide Mat Opening: A standard opening for a lantern slide mat for use in conjunction with motion pictures shall be 3 inches wide by 2¼ inches high.

Thumbmark: The thumbmark spot on a lantern slide shall be located in the lower left-hand corner next the reader when the slide is held so as to be read against a light.

During the Monday afternoon session the letter from Secretary Elliott, of the N. A. M. P. I., requesting the Society to affiliate with that organization, was courteously declined, with the explanation that it was the belief of the Society that its aims as a technical body could be better and more ably served as an independent body, free from affiliation of any kind.

President Jenkins announced that he had received an invitation from the U. S. Government to formulate specifications for a Government camera to be employed in the trenches. In the brief time given him the president stated that he had called upon Member Donald J. Bell for assistance, and that he had prepared specifications and presented them to the Government in the name of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

The Society unanimously approved and thanked President Jenkins and Mr. Bell for their generous action.

The convention was concluded late Tuesday afternoon by the reading of a paper on photoplay-house construction prepared by Edward Bernard Kinsila, theater specialist and author of Modern Theater Construction, recently published by the Moving Picture World. The text of this address will be found in next week's issue.

The members of the Society received an invitation from Donald J. Bell to visit the works of Bell and Howell on Wednesday morning, and also one from W. R. Rothacker to visit his plant and studio.

The next regular meeting of the Society will be held Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, October 8, 9 and 10, in New York.

The following were present at the Chicago meeting: Max Mayer, M. J. Wohl Co., Brooklyn, N. Y.; A. F. Victor, Victor Anamatograph Co., Davenport, Ia.; Herman Kellner, Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., Rochester, N. Y.; Watterson R. Rothacker, president Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co., Chicago; Will C. Smith, Nicholas Power Co., New York; E. B. Kinsila, theater and studio architect and specialist, New York; Robert P. Burrows, National Lamp Works, Cleveland; A. C. Roebuck, Enterprise Optical Co., Chicago; W. M. States, Edison Lamp Co., Harrison, N. J.; M. H. Linvingston, Livingston Flm Co., Peoria, Ill.; C. Francis Jenkins, Graphoscope Co., Washington, D. C.; E. Kendall Gillett, Motion Picture News, New York; Don. J. Bell, Bell & Howell, Chicago; Francis B. Cannock, Precision Machine Co., New York; Wm. C. Kunzmann, National Carbon Co., Cleveland; Harvey N. Wible, Westinghouse Electric Co., East Pittsburgh, and H. A. Campe, of the same concern.

"LES MISERABLES" AT ORCHESTRA HALL.

Second Wonderful Success in Chicago After an Interval of Four Years.

THE presentation of Pathe's "Les Miserables" at Orchestra Hall, which opened Sunday, July 15, is proving a remarkable success. Passing down Michigan avenue, one is attracted by the long line stretching far south on the sidewalk every evening. Tom North is certainly showing his ability in the line of handling big film attractions.

Many prominent French residents were present on opening night, among them being M. A. Barthelemy, French Consul; H. Job, Vice-Consul; V. Llona, Dr. Vermereu, Dr. C. A. Heinech and L. Bastien.

Every daily in the city has given memorable mention to the cast of "Les Miserables," and to the excellence of the acting, direction and photography. It is evidently destined for a long run.

KLEINE SALESMAN CALLED TO THE ARMY.

Ben W. Kanter, New Jersey representative for George Kleine's organization, K-E-S-E, traveling out of the Greater New York City branch, was among the first to be called to the army as the result of the drawing of lots. Mr. Kanter will be no stranger to military life as he has three creditable years to his record as a member of the Coast Artillery and has been noted as a close student of military life. There is little doubt that Mr. Kanter will quickly rise in ranks and win a commission.

Mr. Kanter was with George Kleine's organization about eight months but in that time built up a big clientele for his firm. He is known amongst New Jersey exhibitors as a progressive, wide-awake man whose place Mr. Kleine will be pushed hard to fill. Mr. Kleine has pledged himself to take back after the war all his employes who are called to the service, so New Jersey representatives can see Mr. Kanter immediately after the Kaiser is convinced that he undertook a bigger job than he could finish.

PATRICK O'MALLEY RIDES TO FAME.

Like his famous namesake, Charles O'Malley, the famous dragoon and rider of fiction, Patrick O'Malley has practically ridden himself into the Selig Polyscope Company through his wonderful bareback riding. He will be prominent in the support of Lew Fields in "The Barber," a drama of circus life, to be a forthcoming Selig feature film. O'Malley's riding skill was gained in the mountains of Pennsylvania, where he was born at Forrest City, September 3, 1890. The daredevil spirit of the lad finds him at eight years of age doing a slack-wire act on the stage. O'Malley is not new to pictures as his experience covers this country, England and Ireland.

BUSHMAN ENLARGES HIS ESTATE.

Francis X. Bushman, Metro star, has purchased forty acres of land, adjoining his estate of one hundred and twenty-five acres at Bushmanor, Maryland. This new land is devoted to the raising of potatoes. To this part of farming Mr. Bushman has paid especial attention. He estimates that the crop for this season, which will be a late one, will bring him close to $10,000.

Film Building for Washington

Amended Police Regulations Call for Fireproof Structure—In Effect January 1, 1918

THERE isn't going to be any getting away from the requirement of a really, truly, sure-enough fireproof film exchange building at Washington, D. C. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have ordered the amending of the Police Regulations so that no person shall keep, store, handle or manufacture in any building of the District of Columbia any inflammable motion picture film without first obtaining a permit from the fire marshal, and the storage and manufacture of films must be in a building conforming to the various provisions contained in these new regulations.

The new regulations are to be in full force and effect on and after January 1, 1918, and licenses must then be had, the applications therefor to contain the following information: Name and address of applicant; location of premises on which the inflammable motion picture films are to be manufactured, stored, kept, or handled; other purposes for which the building or premises is to be used; the nature of the business in which the applicant is engaged in such building or premises; kind of construction of building; any other information regarding the manufacture, storage, keeping, or handling of inflammable motion picture films, for which application is made.

No permit is to be issued for any building which is occupied as a tenement or apartment house, flat, hotel, dwelling, nor in any building partly used for dwelling purposes; any building which is artificially lighted by any means other than electricity; any building of wooden construction, or one which does not contain one or more separate rooms used exclusively for the storage and handling of such films.

There is no building now in Washington which, as constructed, will conform to the requirements of the new regulations. Whatever is the outcome, there must either be provided by new construction or by extensive remodeling a structure of a type not at any time considered before it became known that the regulations were being promulgated by the Fire Marshal. It is provided that the storage of inflammable motion picture films shall be in vaults or rooms of fireproof construction in buildings defined as of the second class. These vaults or rooms must have self-supporting brick or concrete walls; if of the former, to be thirteen inches thick, laid in cement and extending from the ground, while concrete walls are to be not less than ten inches thick extending from the ground. Tops and bottoms must be waterproof, of brick or concrete arches not less than six inches thick, and no wood top flooring will be permitted. The size of the vaults may not exceed 1,500 cubic feet. Openings into the vaults or rooms must be protected on the outer side of the wall with approved iron doors at least 3/16 of an inch thick, and made fireproof by closing against a rabbet at the top, bottom and side, the hinge side of the door closing into a groove, and the door and wall frames must be of equivalent construction to the 3/16 inch fire door and on the inner side of the wall there must be an iron door of at least No. 14 U. S. gauge steel. The doors are to be of the self-closing type.

In fireproof buildings having standard protection and steel framework, the vaults or rooms are to be carried on the structure from floor to floor, and have brick or concrete walls not less than nine inches thick, brick walls to be laid in cement. The top and bottom are to be as above.

A great deal of expense will be necessitated by the observance of the requirement that all fixtures, shelving and furniture in the vaults or rooms used for the storage of films, and in rooms used for repairing or rewinding shall be of metal or other non-combustible material—everyone knows that metal prices have soared sky high since the beginning of the war.

Exchange Men Protest.

Everything is upside down in Washington at present following the adoption of the amendments to the police regulations, authorized by the District Commissioners, which will cause the eviction of all film exchanges from present quarters on January 1 next.

When word reached the managers late last week that the Commissioners had placed their O. K. on these very drastic rules, they got together for an indigation meeting and it was voted that if the Commissioners insist upon the new regulations the exchanges be moved to Baltimore. In the meantime each manager is to take the proposition up with his company and secure the consent of the proper officials to the move.

Needless to say the managers are very much disturbed over the prospects. The regulations are very strong and are somewhat out of place under the peculiar conditions existing in Washington, where no film exchange building has been provided and there are practically no places available for the purpose except with the expenditure of large sums of money on improvements to put them in condition to meet the requirements of Fire Marshal Nicholson and Commissioner Brownlow.

After going over the regulations and following extensive debate, it was decided to put the problem up to the heads of the companies for determination as to what the managers shall do. The latter of themselves are not authorized to make any such move, but the necessary permission, they expect, will speedily be forthcoming. The managers are getting tired of the conditions that surround the film business in Washington with new laws and regulations and other things being constantly dealt out to them, without their being able to do anything, and the help question, and it is believed they would welcome the word to move.

During the discussion it was pointed out that the only thing that has operated against Baltimore in the past in its selection as the distributing point instead of Washington has been that shipments Southward are better facilitated from the latter, this being a shipping center, yet it is felt that shipments could be expedited; the delays could be overcome by earlier shipping. Washington is but an hour's ride from Baltimore and it would be a simple matter for the managers to accommodate the distribution of film to the running of the trains.

It was pointed out that several of the companies have contended all along that Baltimore is the more logical distributing point because of its being the larger city of the two and there is a large amount of city business to handle, and they have held that they can get better results from Baltimore than from Washington. These companies, of course, will feel predisposed in favor of Baltimore.

During the discussion of the matter it was intimated that a proposition would be made for a film building in Baltimore that would accommodate all of the exchanges under one roof, yet leaving individual exchanges to locate in other places if they so desire. Baltimore's business men are anxious to coax all possible industries to their city and the city is very likely to be far more liberal in the matter of ordinances than Washington, the political complexion of which is so different from any other city in the United States—Baltimore's voters would hardly stand for any absurd regulations and, as it was stated at the meeting, if in Baltimore they would hardly get the "raw deal" that is to be tagged on to the managers in Washington.

Baltimore offers many additional facilities. In Washington, the managers told one another, there is the question of labor. The exchanges are all operating short-handed because the Government has taken over on its payrolls many thousands of clerks, stenographers and typewriters, porters, telephone and telegraph operators, chauffeurs, and all other classes of men and women, young boys and girls, able to put forth any special claim to any special ability. In Baltimore conditions are different; the managers could obtain a better class of people and at less money, two things in themselves constituting advantages, and if they wanted to dispense with the services of any particular individual they would not have to think twice because of an inability to get another person to fill the vacancy.

The enforcement of the regulations will throw upon the burdened local real estate market the twelve or fifteen locations now occupied by exchanges. Local banks would lose large deposits. Washington's merchants would be cut out of the sale of large quantities of merchandise. And capping all, there would be about 250 people thrown out of employment just as soon as the exchanges move.

The managers feel, and so expressed themselves, that if the District authorities are going to make them move into a building that complies with the very "onerous" regulations, they should provide such a building for the film folks. The managers would be delighted at an opportunity to move into a nice new building erected specially to fit their needs, instead of having to do business in places perhaps not large enough, improperly laid out so as to prevent the most economic use of floor space, etc., and they are willing to tell the Commissioners so. But to be thrown out on the streets, as they put it, is an injustice against which too much cannot be said.

All concerned seem very pessimistic over the whole proposition. The District officials know the conditions existing—that half dozen or more propositions looking to the building of a proper structure by local capital have been broached but none carried to completion, yet the amendment to the police regulations are agreed upon.

GOVERNMENT WANTS FILM INSPECTORS.

The United States Civil Service Commission announces an open competitive examination for laboratory aid, motion-picture laboratory, for women only, on August 8, at various cities and towns throughout the country. A vacancy in the Division of Publications, Department of Agriculture, for duty in Washington, D. C., at $720 a year, and future vacancies requiring similar qualifications, at this or higher or lower salaries, will be filled from this examination, unless it is found in the interest of the service to fill any vacancy by reinstatement, transfer or promotion.

The duties of the appointee will consist in the assembling, splicing, and repairing of motion picture films, the staining of positives, and the photographing of positive legends from printed copy.

Competitors will be rated on practical questions, 60; experience, 40.

At least six months actual experience in a producing motion picture laboratory in the assembling, splicing, and repairing of motion picture films and in making of positive legends is a prerequisite for consideration for this position.

Applicants must have reached their twentieth, but not their forty-fifth birthday on the date of the examination.

The New Fox Pictures

William Fox Tells How They Were Produced and Who Made Them

"I DO not believe that there is anything to be added to my statement of the policy of the Fox Film Corporation printed today in your advertising pages," William Fox responded, when asked to amplify the statement, "except that I might tell you how it all came about

"I can assure you that my greatest ambition has always been to make better pictures than anyone else, and that I have experimented patiently for several years. I knew that the pictures that we and other producers made at first could be improved. I began to take a deeper personal interest in the scenarios and to re-write some of them. I looked around for the best directors and as I found them, I encouraged them—gave them carte blanche in their production—when I saw that they were on the right track.

"Being an exhibitor myself, I had great opportunities for watching the public and its desires, and, little by little, I saw our films growing into better stories, better photography and more perfect production.

"When we started on the production of 'Jack and the Beanstalk,' I searched for the best child directors I could find in the world. It took some time, but when I finally got in touch with C. M. and S. A. Franklin, and got them started to work, I knew I had succeeded.

"'Jack and the Beanstalk' started out to be a 3-reel film, just for children, to fill the need then apparent for something to entertain the little folks—something that would not worry their little brains to follow—something they were familiar with. When we got started on the picture with those thirteen hundred wonderful children, and saw them enter into the spirit of it earnestly, we realized that we had struck a big idea, and I gave the Franklin brothers full authority to go as far as they liked. When you have seen this picture at the Globe Theater next week, you will realize how wonderful has been the result and how astoundingly the children have shown their innate talent.

"This was nearly a year ago, we started, and we spent more than $500,000 on the first experiment. The original filming ran into about 17 reels—we will show it in 10 reels. We put this picture away and looked at it ourselves hundreds of times—with more enjoyment at each sitting, and we came to realize that these pictures were not only for children, but for grown-ups even more.

"Immediately we started 'Babes in the Woods' and then 'Treasure Island' and then 'Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp.' With these in our pocket we knew there was no end to what we could do.

"Theda Bara, in the meantime, had advanced to the very top of artistic achievement and of trade popularity, and I decided that we would give her the very best we had in us. She posed in a version of Cleopatra which looked so very good that we decided to lay this picture on our shelf also, to save, temporarily, for our own private enjoyment.

"Then I began to think hard. We had three more big subjects for Theda Bara, so we cast everything to the winds and turned her loose, with the result that we have piled up in our private storeroom a group of pictures better than I had ever seen anybody make before.

"William Farnum, to whom I have frequently expressed my profound admiration for his art and his manliness, so that it is no secret that I consider him the greatest living motion picture actor—was in the meantime recovering from an illness, and he looked so fit and wonderful that he was permitted to outdo himself in four of the biggest, red-blooded, thrilling and wonderful pictures that any man has ever made. We made some innovations in these pictures, too —one in particular.

"It used to be the idea in motion pictures that when a man was made, he merely mugged it, as they say, and it registered. Not so, in the Farnum pictures. When they get wrought up in these pictures, the men are allowed to fight as men fight—and I am pleased to let you know that when the National Board of Review passed on this particular picture they gave it their warmest recommendation in a special additional note.

"With the Theda Bara superpictures and 'Jack and the Beanstalk' and the William Farnum pictures, the kiddie series and 'The Honor System' ready to be offered to the exhibitors, I came to the conclusion that our two and a half millions had been better expended than I ever used the same amount of money before for, and I have now announced Standard Pictures for open booking, to include the pictures already mentioned, and the Fox Kiddie stories, which will in the year amount to twelve of the children's pictures that cannot be resisted by the grown-ups.

"Then, when I thought we were ready for a rest, we gave a sudden thought to our little kiddies, Jane and Katherine Lee. We starred them in a picture called 'Two Little Imps' last week, and overnight they were the sensation, not only in New York, but all over the country. Never, in any case that I can recall, did the word of a success travel so rapidly; and these little folk have found themselves surrounded by crowds ever since the opening at the Acamedy of Music in New York, at which they appeared in person.

"So now Jane and Katherine Lee are Fox Kiddies, indeed, and are named among the Standard Pictures. Bless their little hearts.

"We have seen these pictures ourselves so often, and we are so sure that they are better pictures than anyone else has yet made, that we have decided not to sell them to any manager who has not already seen them; and this will be our policy. We have employed special representatives to give trade showings in all the important cities of the United States and Canada. The releases will begin in September so that there is plenty of time for the men from Missouri and elsewhere 'to be shown.'

"While Standard Pictures occupied a great deal of our attention in the last eight months, we were not neglectful of our fifty-two feature releases for the next year. Dustin Farnum, who has not been heard of in the past ten months, has made for us four pictures that vary in style from the wild Southwest, to the thrilling Northwest, and in between—and these will be seen among our fifty-two features. There are some new ones for George Walsh, Gladys Brockwell, Miriam Cooper, Virginia Pearson, June Caprice, Valeska Suratt and others.

"And the new Henry Lehrman comedies. While we were experimenting on Standard Pictures in California, I discovered that Lehrman had been experimenting also. He showed me a comedy on a new idea that took me off my feet. So I put that away and told him to go ahead on some more. This one was too good to be true. When I got back to New York another one followed, and then another, until we have ten of them on hand that have never been seen, except by our branch managers at the Convention. At the same time, some remarkable accounts followed the films from the coast, one of them for $32,000, another for $28,000 and so on. I wired Lehrman to keep on going and not to stop at anything. I wanted fifty more of them. He took it seriously and answered that it would be beyond human possibility to make more than sixteen more this year. So I am only announcing 26 for 1917-18—and I won't sell one of them until the exhibitor has seen it.

"Did I tell you that the Fox films have been furnished for several months to the English, French, Italian, Belgian and Russian troops in the trenches? We have made the same offer to the American Government for our troops."

MISS YOUNG LEASES THANHOUSER STUDIO.

Clara Kimball Young has taken over the Thanhouser studio at New Rochelle and has started work on her first picture, "The Marionettes," which will be produced by her own organization under her personal direction. "The Marionettes," was first produced in Paris and enjoyed a long run there, being later produced in this country under the name of "The Puppets," with Mme. Nazimova as the star.

The story concerns a young, convent-bred girl, a part admirably suited to Miss Young's well known talents. Work is now being rushed at the studio under the direction of W. G. Belew, who has been engaged as studio manager, having been with Miss Young in former years. Mr. Emile Chautard will direct the picture which will be ready by September 1.

Miss Young has opened executive and publicity offices in Aeolian Hall, New York City.

Nestor Starts the Stage Story Especially Written Around the Convention While on the Trip.

They represented the Universal's acting forces at the convention and in addition to this distinction they staged a two-reel feature comedy which included scenes made at Unversal City, en route to and from Chicago and in the Windy City itself during their stay there. The two popular stars were accompanied by a director, camera man and a number of actors who will appear in the picture

The scenario is the work of Frederick A. Palmer, who is writing exclusively for Lyons and Moran, and it is the thirty-fifth story he has prepared for these comedians. The theme of the comedy lies in the trip to the convention and among those who will appear in the film are President Carl Laemmle, Vice President R. H. Cochrane, Treasurer P. A. Powers of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, Henry McRae, manager of production at Universal City, several well-known stars of Universal pictures and a number of prominent exhibitors who visited the convention.

A throng of three hundred Universalites turned out to witness the comedians from Universal City and cheered their best wishes as the motor car carrying the Nestor Players sped away to the railroad station.

Additional Studio Space for Lockwood Production

FRED J. BALSHOFER has acquired additional studio space comprising three acres adjoining the present studios, and is erecting stages and equipping them in readiness for work on the seven-reel Lockwood Master-Feature, "Paradise Garden," which is to be produced under the personal direction of Mr. Balshofer from the novel by George Gibbs. the production to be made at a probable cost of $75,000.

The enlargement of the Metro-Yorke studios in California took place immediately following the completion of plans for staging "Paradise Garden," which is a society drama. In completing the script for this picture, Mr. Balshofer discovered that the necessary settings would require facilities which the present studios did not include. It was therefore decided to build new and larger stages and fit them up for the proper production of the feature.

When Harold Lockwood signed his new two-year contract with the Metro-Yorke company, the announcement was made that he would soon be presented in a number of Metro Master-Features, some of which would be seven-reel productions. The new picture, "Paradise Garden," is the first of these special productions in seven reels featuring the Metro star.

Since a longer time than usual will be required to produce this feature. the picturization of "Paradise Garden" will probably not be ready for release on the Metro program before September. The production of this picture is in line with the Metro-Yorke general policy of presenting Harold Lockwood in a variety of roles, his latest releases ranging from fantastic comedy in "The Haunted Pajamas" to western drama in "Under Handicap." "The Paradise Garden" is different from either of these in that it is a society drama with a strong psychological interest, at the same time giving the star a pleasing and appropriately fitting role.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

An immense theater interior set has been built for the next starring vehicle of Louise Glaum, being directed at the Triangle Culver City studio by Walter Edwards. So many scenes were to be taken and so many lighting effects produced that the Triangle deemed it necessary to build the set on one of the immense glass stages. The interior is complete and the lower floor will seat 400 persons. The usual incandescent globes used for footlights in theaters have been supplanted by Kleig lights, which are necessary for photographic purposes, but which shine so brightly that players would be blinded by their radiance if compelled to look across them for any length of time.

After three months had been spent in working over the pictorial prologue to "The Curse of Eve," the first production of the Corona Cinema Company, directed by Frank Beal, and fitting the musical score by Louis Gottschalk to the picture, Dr. Bruce Gordon Kingsley, who has been for the past three years one of the leading organists of the Los Angeles theaters, played the score by Gottschalk, and declared it to be the most appropriate thing which he had played in motion picture accompaniment. The Biblical prologue to "The Curse of Eve," which depicts with remarkable photographic effects the creation of the world, gave to composer Gottschalk a theme upon which to work.

Wm. L. Sherry Signs Big Contracts

Makes Extended Trip Through New York State to Sign Paramount and Artcraft Contracts.

WM. L. SHERRY, District Manager of New York State and Northern New Jersey for the Paramount and the Artcraft Companies, has just finished a ten-day trip through New York State and has succeeded in closing practically all the cities and towns he visited for Paramount and Artcraft Pictures.

Mr. Sherry, early in the campaign of coordinated bookings for Paramount and Artcraft, decided to cover the principal cities himself. When things were ready for the taking on of houses under the Star Series Selective Booking Plan, Mr. Sherry started out by machine. He has closed the greater part of the business in the state, has already returned to the New York office for a brief stay to approve contracts secured in the city and has returned to the road to finish up.

Besides the principal cities, Syracuse, Rochester, etc., Mr. Sherry has signed up a chain of theatres in Buffalo, Shea's Hippodrome, the Strand, Regent, Academy, Victoria and others. Many of the houses contracting for the new star stories have planned increased prices and have entered into an entirely new policy.

Mr. Sherry returned to New York on Thursday, July 12, for a two-day stay at the head offices, 729 Seventh avenue, to approve, as district manager, the contracts signed by exhibitors in New York City, New Jersey and other parts of the territory under his jurisdiction.

Following this brief recess, he immediately started out again and within another week will have closed the principal theaters of New York State for the Paramount and Artcraft productions. Besides the contracts actually closed on the first trip, some thirty contracts were held in abeyance, which have almost all since been closed.

Important Plays for Billie Burke

"Arms and the Girl" and "The Runaway" to Be Released by Paramount.

TWO important stage successes have been purchased by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as vehicles for Billie Burke and will be released by Paramount under the selective star-series booking plan. The first of these is "The Runaway," in which Miss Burke starred on the stage under the management of Charles Frohman a few years ago. The play was presented in Paris by Pierre Vebere under the title, "La Gamine," where it scored a complete triumph.

This will be the second instance where Miss Burke will appear upon the screen in a Paramount adaptation of one of her former stage successes, the first being "The Land of Promise," by W. Somerset Maugham, which has already been completed under the direction of Joseph Kaufman.

"Arms and the Girl," the other play which has been purchased for Miss Burke, proved one of the greatest sensations of two seasons ago when it was presented at the Fulton theater in New York, with Fay Bainter in the leading role. It was in this delightful characterization that Miss Bainter made her first Broadway success. The play, by Grant Stewart and Robert Baker, has been declared by critics to be the finest melodramatic comedy written with the war as a background. The story concerns the adventures of several young Americans caught in Belgium during the German invasion.

The Roll of Honor

THE day after President Wilson declared a state of war existing between the United States and Germany, Robert E. Wilson, an actor, who had become well known on the screen through his long association with Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in the making of Metro-Drew comedies, offered his services to Uncle Sam. He was sent to Fort Slocum, where, under the watchful eye of Lieutenant Colonel Maudlin, he started a campaign of intensive drilling. Recently he obtained a three-day leave of absence to visit his mother in Warren, Pa., and say good-bye.

Robert E. Wilson.

"I joined the regulars because I felt that I would see active service quicker," said Mr. Wilson. "At first I found it hard to answer the first call at 5:20 in the morning, and if it happened to be sounded at 4:20 I felt that I was getting up in the middle of the night, but that is all over now. When the call comes to turn in I am always to be found ready for sleep, and I can turn out just as readily as I can turn in. It took some weeks to get used to it."

New G. F. Manager in Albany

In Ray E. Gallagher General Film Appoints Aggressive Man to Serve Neglected Territory.

IN order to improve facilities for distribution in the Albany territory, which has been without a branch of General Film, that company has just made an appoinment of a manager with headquarters in the capital city who begins his duties at once. The appointee is Raymond E. Gallagher, who has been connected with the sales department of the New York exchange.

The important Albany territory has not been served by General Film from an office in that city, the distribution having been from New York. There was, however, such a demand for General Film product developing there that it was considered due the exhibitors to have better facilities. General Manager Harold Bolster of General Film determined that the office at 48 Howard street should be opened and a live, aggressive agent placed in charge. The service given by the company will, therefore, be directly available.

Raymond E. Gallagher, who now joins Sales Manager Kent's aides, has made an unusually good record as a film salesman in the New York district. Before joining Branch Manager Buxbaum's force he was for years at the Vitagraph plant in Brooklyn, which city is his birthplace. Mr. Gallagher was formerly private secretary to Commodore J. Stuart Blackton. Before that he was in the publicity department of Vitagraph, being one of the two original members of the first publicity staff engaged by that company. He knows the film business from every angle and has had, in fact, seven or eight years of experience in it under conditions that were exceptionally valuable. Still he is quite a young man and is probably the youngest branch manager on the rolls of General Film. He is being congratulated on his new appointment by a wide circle of friends in every branch of the film industry. It is expected that he will be welcomed to an equal extent at Albany, where there has been such a desire manifested for some one of his abilities to be on the ground with General Film's interests in charge.

Mutual Film Catalog

Contains List of All Pictures Obtainable at Mutual Exchanges—Will Be Issued Quarterly.

FEATURE film productions representing a total investment of slightly more than fifteen millions of dollars, including hundreds of big pictures, are presented in the first quarterly catalog of the Mutual Film Corporation, just off the press.

The Mutual's catalog is a compact twenty-four-page volume illustrated with pictures of all the Mutual's stars, beginning with the earliest releases and running from the early W. S. Hart and Mae Marsh pictures down to the Mary Miles Minter pictures to be released two months hence, and the coming releases of Charles Frohman successes in motion pictures.

A survey of the Mutual catalog brings before the reader a surprising array of stars whose pictures are available at the Mutual's exchanges. One finds the familiar faces of many favorites now scattered through the field of picture production. There is Robert Harron, Bessie Barriscale, Louise Glaum, "Fatty Arbuckle" and many others of the early Mutual luminaries. Coming down to date we find Marjorie Rambeau, Nance O'Neil, Ann Murdock, Julia Sanderson, William Russell, Margarita Fischer, Gail Kane and others of the current Mutual releases.

The catalog issued by Mutual contains condensed information on each of the stars and each of the pictures, with complete numerical designation, so that the reels can be located promptly in the exchanges and clearing house, regardless of date, and is a part of the elaborate system of special service to the exhibitor instituted in the Mutual Film Corporation by President John R. Freuler.

"We will issue a new edition of the catalog every quarter," said Denis J. Sullivan, of the Mutual's executive staff. "We will constantly have available every picture listed and the list will grow to take in everything among the added productions. Conditions in the motion picture business point to the growing importance of just the sort of service that this catalog presents."

The Mutual's catalog will be sent free to any motion picture exhibitor on application to his closest Mutual exchange.

Mae Murray, Star of Bluebirds

EXHIBITORS of Bluebird photoplays and the theatergoing public will be interested in the announcement that Mae Murray, more recently star in Lasky features, has signed contracts to become a star in Bluebirds, with Robert Leonard her producing director. The deal was closed at the New York headquarters of Bluebird late on Saturday afternoon, July 14, and, after having spent a few days at the Chicago convention, Miss Murray and Mr. Leonard departed for the West Coast.

Mae Murray.

Immediately upon arriving in Los Angeles a decision will be reached concerning the first feature Miss Murray will present and Mr. Leonard will at once begin the work of production. This engagement marks Mr. Leonard's return to Bluebird's directing staff. When the program was in its early stages he directed Ella Hall in several features, leaving Bluebird a few months ago to join the Lasky forces as Miss Murray's director.

Miss Murray's presentations of "A Mormon Maid," "Sweet Kitty Bellairs" and "At First Sight" were directed by Mr. Leonard. Among other features in which Miss Murray has starred are "The Primrose Ring" and "To Have and to Hold." In these presentations Miss Murray has become established as a screen favorite and Bluebird will make every possible effort to capitalize her popularity, not alone in giving publicity to her features, but in selecting subjects that will best develop her natural equipments for entertaining.

While the individual artists are not specifically mentioned, it is known that Bluebird is in negotiation with other stars to add to their flock of public favorites. Further announcements may, therefore, be expected at any time, for Bluebird is planning some conspicuous advances for the forthcoming season. With Dorothy Phillips, Ruth Clifford, Ella Hall, Violet Mersereau and Brownie Vernon already established favorites, the Bluebird program will be well equipped with pretty and talented women stars.

THREE MEN HELD FOR ALLEGED THEFT.

The biggest achievement made so far in the efforts of film producers to put a stop to the theft of positive moving picture films was accomplished by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation last week in connection with the arrest of three men charged with stealing a positive print of "Joan, the Woman" from which a duplicate negative was made. Both the print and negative have been recovered.

Fred Beck, Leo Singer and Louis Weiss, the three men arrested, were brought before United States Commissioner Hitchcock and, after a hearing, were held for the Grand Jury in $2,000 bail each. Beck, Singer and Weiss are charged with the theft of a film positive of "Joan the Woman," produced by the Cardinal Film Corporation.

"What Money Can't Buy"

Theodore Roberts, Louise Huff and Jack Pickford in a Beautiful Five-Part Lasky Subject.

Reviewed by Arthur W. Courtney.

TO WATCH Theodore Roberts, Louise Huff, Jack Pickford and Hobart Bosworth through five reels is delightful. These four appear together in "What Money Can't Buy," a Lasky picture released July 16. The action takes place in a romantic but mythical little principality in southern Europe where the king is in debt. It is the kingdom of Maritzia. Theodore Roberts is an American financier bidding for the concession to construct a railroad through the crown lands. Jack Pickford is his son, Dick Hale. Louise Huff is the Princess Irenia. Hobart Bosworth is a European villain.

Scene from "What Money Can't Buy" (Lasky).

The two little brothers of the princess are interesting children. Theodore Roberts puts them on his yatch and sends them to sea. The press book says the scenes in the yacht interior, set on rockers to give a realistic roll, made Miss Huff green. When it is time to land the little boy says, "I want to live on a yacht forever." Everyone wishes he could.

James Neill looks well as the cardinal. Raymond Hatton does a good bit of character acting as the king. Acting honors go to Theodore Roberts.. He is the active member of the cast. He saves his part from being that of an ill-mannered American millionaire financier. He can interpret emotion by rolling a cigar in his mouth as no other can. The scene where he goes to his office to raise eighty millions by morning and stays on the job all night is good.

This picture is made from a play by George Broadhurst produced at the Forty-eighth street theater in October, 1915, of which the less said the better. The story is worthless except as it serves to connect a series of beautiful scenes. This is the first picture Lou Tellegen has directed since Bernhardt's "Queen Elizabeth." He has injected some anti-Teutonic sentiment into it. The villain and his first assistant both wear fierce, upturned moustaches.

The American eagle screams in some leaders. Dick Hale accepts a lieutenancy in the Maritzian army with: "If there's war, I'll be scrapping for my Uncle Sammy." He resigns with sure-fire profanity. He is profane also in the letter he writes his father.

The close of the picture following the subtitle: "To Each His Own Happiness," is beautiful. The king has cigars and a chess board; the royal children have ponies; Theodore Roberts has his work of making millions, and the princess and her lover have——. Well, at the betrothal in reel two they kiss frankly, but in the last love grapple they sit cheek by jowl. They are best in scenes where they are together.

The spiritual uplift which comes from the contemplation of the beautiful is ample compensation for the hour spent in viewing this picture. It is a beautiful picture

"The Haunted Pajamas"

Harold Lockwood in Five-Part Yorke Photoplay of Fanciful but Pleasing Plot—Released by Metro.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE hero in "The Haunted Pajamas" has many strange adventures. Francis Perry Elliott, who wrote the story which is now a five-part Yorke photoplay, hit upon a novel idea and used it with skill. A pair of magic pajamas that transform the wearer into the likeness of the previous occupant of the sleeping garments without his being aware of the change, leads to many comic complications. One of the most surprising situations is where the hero returns home late at night and finds a young lady, pajama clad, in possession of his spare bedroom. In reality, the young woman is the younger brother of the hero's chum, and has actions seem a trifle unconventional for a beautiful young lady. The construction of the story is handled with much cleverness, and there is a pleasing underplot of romance to hold the interest of the gentler sex

The production is worthy the subject. Harold Lockwood is just the sort of a chap for the handsome hero and acts with a proper regard for the comedy values of his role. Carmel Meyers gives the heroine the right flavor, and Harry DeRoy, Edward Sedgwick, Helen Ware, Lester Cueno and Paul Willis handle the other important roles to good advantage.

"The Rescue"

Five-Part Bluebird Release Has Actress Heroine Played by Dorothy Phillips—Story and Star Smack of the Artificial.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IT IS doubtful whether the author of the five-part Bluebird release, "The Rescue," troubled himself very much about the moral of his story. It has a moral, nevertheless, and a strong one: The folly of a man and a woman marrying and expecting to be happy while each deceives the other—with the best of intentions. Hugh Kahler, who wrote "The Rescue," has not made it very convincing. His characters are not overly attractive and their actions seldom seem dictated by common sense. The atmosphere of artificiality that hangs over the story has also enveloped the acting of Dorothy Phillips, a fault seldom noticed in her work. It is true, she is playing a lady of the stage, an emotional star, but many of her scenes do not ring right even then. The misunderstanding upon which all the trouble is strung is an unnatural one. A newly-married man might elect to take the cure for dipsomania without his wife's knowledge, but he would hardly patronize an institution on a houseboat anchored at the foot of his private grounds. The manner in which the cure doctor's wife is made to contribute to the mistake that sends the couple into a divorce court, and her explanation at the end of the picture, are points of construction that are anything but skilful.

Scene from "The Rescue" (Bluebird).

The story starts after the divorce and shows how the wife's scheme to save a young girl from marrying her ex-husband brings about a reconciliation between the estranged pair.

Ida May Park made the scenario and directed the production and must take her share of the blame for the lack of conviction in plot and acting. The material side of the production has been well handled William Stowell, Lon Chaney, Gretchen Lederer and Molly Malone are competent members of the cast, the latter lady being especially good as Betty Jerrold.

"Richard the Brazen"

Harry Morey and Alice Joyce Featured in Five-Part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Release That Starts Off Promisingly But Is Poorly Directed and Contains Too Much Story.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

AN IMPOSING pair of names, Dr. Cyrus T. Brady and Edward Peple, are credited with the authorship of "Richard the Brazen," a five-part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature starring Harry Morey and Alice Joyce. This, however. has not resulted in a well constructed photoplay. The story starts off promisingly enough, but sags in the middle and then introduces a stolen jewels finish, one of the thieves being a gardener's son to whom a cousin of the heroine had written several love letters. The complications involve the hero in the robbery, but the heroine knows the truth and, although she has quarrelled with the gentleman, she clears his good name. During most of the action Richard, who was raised in Texas on a ranch, impersonates an English nobleman, but is soon found out, although he has borrowed the real lord's monocle and genuine English valet.

"Richard the Brazen" has too much story, most of it is badly made and very little of it is well directed. Perry N. Verkoff, who had the latter matter in charge, has peculiar notions about handling a society "mob" and the proper method for sustaining the interest in a plot.

The members of the cast worked faithfully to make the picture a success. Harry Morey and Alice Joyce did everything possible with their roles. William Frederic, Franklyn Hanna, Robert Kelly, Agnes Eyre, Charles Wellesley and William Bailey constitute the support.

"A Model Marauder"

Seventh Number of Kalem's "The Further Adventures of Stingaree" Series Worth Short Subject.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

AN entertaining number of Kalem's "The Further Adventures of Stingaree" Series is "A Model Marauder," the seventh two-reel episode. The story by E. W. Hornung presents some surprisingly entertaining twists. The story as a whole is interesting, and the interest is added to by the manner in which the piece has been produced. In this number Stingaree starts out to see himself in a wax exhibit. Once more he comes to the rescue of a woman, and the woman in turn proves his much-needed friend. Stingaree escapes from his pursuers by becoming for the time being the wax figure that was made to represent him. Both he and Howie outwit and elude the Mounted Police.

Scene from "A Model Marauder" (Kalem).

True Boardman is again the lovable bushranger. Hal Clements plays Howie. Others in the cast are Edythe Sterling, L. T. Terry, H. M. Mitchel and Barney Murray.

The number is, as usual, good in atmosphere and fairly rich in action. More good western locations are seen in this number, which fully lives up to the mark set by pervious releases.

"Alma, Where Do You Live?

Ruth MacTammany Featured in Six-Reel Adaptation of Well-Remembered Musical Comedy, by Adolf Phillip.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

NOT many musical comedies, or operettas, have thus far tempted screen producers, owing no doubt to the usual scantiness of plot. "Alma, Where Do You Live?" does not suffer from this drawback, but yields up sufficient story interest to keep the observer well content. It does, however, call for some sort of rendition of the famous "Alma" song and other tinkling airs for which the piece is noted, so managers desiring to bring out the full entertainment value of the offering should by all means arrange for proper musical accompaniment.

Scene from "Alma, Where Do You Live?" (Newfields).

Ruth MacTammany, who appears as Alma, makes a splendid showing. She has very expressive features and knows how to use them, and more than a little personal charm. Her scenes with Gaston are particularly good. George Larkin makes an agreeable impression as the young artist.

The original comedy has been built out considerably and filled in with certain incidents that round the story up in a pleasing way. In fact, by the addition of outdoor scenes and the multitude of off-stage features that the screen permits, it is better on the whole than the original production. With the familiar airs accompanying it, the screen production should prove most enjoyable.

There is an unevenness in certain scenes, during which the story interest is considerably broken up. Neither does the comedy business register with any great strength at times. But it is all light and enjoyable, and if it suffers at times from the aberrations of the musical comedy stage, the public will no doubt make certain allowances. Frank McNish as Theobold Martin and Walter Mack as Anatole Peach have the principal comedy roles. The part of Anatole has been considerably minimized in the screen production.

Others in the cast are Jack Newton, John Webb Dillon, Mattie Keene, Marian Kinmaird and George Gaston.

"Melissa of the Hills"

Mary Miles Minter Featured in Five-Part Drama for Mutual Program in Story of the Tennessee Mountains.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE story of "Melissa of the Hills" treats of life in the Tennessee mountains. The picture cannot be classed as one of the best of the Minter pictures, and again substitutes are guilty of meaningless phrases which detract from rather than add to the interest of the story. That the star does not seem to make the most of her opportunities may be due to faulty direction. The construction of the story is also at fault, and has failed to develop the dramatic situations which might have evolved. There is also a lack of convincing action in the picture which is undoubtedly due to a careless direction.

As the story runs Melissa Stark and her father, who was a pious man, lived in the mountains in a neighborhood where a long-standing feud existed between two of the mountain families. Jethro Stark worked steadily among the mountaineers looking principally to the good of their souls, and finally in his devotion met his death by a shot from one of their guns The shooting incident arose through an attempt to arrest Stark on a false accusation brought by a stranger in the community who had known Stark in the past, and believed him to have been the thief of some money which had been stolen from his bank. Melissa has little to do in the main plot of the story, past perpetrating some girlish actions.

"The Neglected Wife" and "The Fatal Ring"

Interesting Episodes Develop in Two Pathe Serials—One Tells Story of Unrequited Love, the Other Flashes With Adventurous Happenings.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A HIGH point of interest is reached in "Revolting Pride," episode No. 13 of "The Neglected Wife." Margaret, the other woman in the case, has resolved to save Kennedy's name and goes to a new address to live. But she is shadowed by members of the political gang and urged to return to him.

Scene from "The Neglected Wife" (Pathe).

Kennedy, meanwhile, has begun drinking heavily and his wife continues her efforts to hold his love. In the final reel of this number he is fired upon by a veiled woman while making a campaign speech.

"The Fatal Ring" is also developing into a typical Pearl White serial, which means a continuous succession of hair-breadth escapes of the sort which causes the observer to hold his breath. In the fifth episode, entitled "Danger Underground," Pearl is rescued from the underground stream in which she has been cast. She and her rescuer barely escape being crushed by an incoming ferry boat, as they climb up to the dock. The scenes then revert to Washington Mews, a New York art center, where there are some violent struggles with Carslake for possession of the violet diamond. The last reel closes with Pearl suspended over a boiling cauldron, head downward, condemned to death for her attempt to obtain the diamond.

"The Warrior"

Seven-Part Itala Film with Maciste, the Giant Slave in "Cabiria," Is Always Capital Entertainment and Contains Much Good Fun—American Rights Controlled by Harry Raver.

ONE of the first impressions made by "The Warrior," the seven-part screen drama produced by the Itala Film Company of Torino, Italy, is that Douglas Fairbanks has a rival and his name is Ernesto Pagani, better known as Macista, the giant slave of "Cabiria." The Italian actor is nearly three times the size of the American exponent of strenuosity and smiles but he goes up the side of a house with the same ease and speed and seems to extract the same amount of enjoyment out of his playing—no one would ever think of calling it work. Signor Pagani is, by no means, a finished actor, however, but when engaged in uprooting trees, upsetting both horse and rider with one gentle shove and bowling over Austrian soldiers by using one of their comrades as a battering-ram technique and mental grasp of the subject is forced to step out of the way for physical prowess of a startling and amusing nature. To see a man toss his enemies about as if they were infants and hurl half a dozen of them through an open window without the slightest effort is to experience an envious glow that ends in a howl of delight.

"The Warrior" is good fun and it also has its share of real thrills. The scenes are laid, for the most part, among the Italian Alps, and the difficulties encountered while carrying on the present warfare in that region are vividly shown. The American public is fairly familiar with the methods adopted by the Alpine soldiers to reach the almost inaccessible mountain peaks, but to behold a body of men working their way across a wide and deep canyon by clinging to a wire cable or see them go up hundreds of feet to the top of a straight wall of rock by means of a rope while fully equipped, is to experience something new in thrills.

There is a story to connect these exciting incidents with the usual romantic love interest demanded by screen melodrama, and "Maciste" exploits are generally performed when he is a soldier, but the Italian strong man towers over everyone in the cast in more ways than one.

"Youth"

Carlyle Blackwell and June Elvidge Starred in Five-Part Peerless Photoplay of Familiar Material Directed by Romaine Fielding—Released by World Film Corporation.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE story of "Youth," a five-part photoplay written by Roy S. Sensabaugh, is a familiar one. Bryan Goodwin, the son of a wealthy and indulgent father, gaes to honfor several years, meets the right woman, gets down to honest work and accomplishes wonders in a remarkably short space of time. This subject is always a popular one, the prodigal son standing in the front rank of characters that never fail to please in whatever guise they appear. Many of the incidents of "Youth" are entertaining in themselves but too much has been made of the hero's last spree, which ends in his being shipped to Tennessee, where his father is constructing a dam. Drunken men are frequently funny but excellent judgment is required to prevent them from overdoing the thing. Young Goodwin imagines he has proposed to a society bud, while not more than half sober. When he finds that he has lost his heart to the sister of Henry Elliott, the head engineer at the dam, he begins to appreciate the folly of getting drunk. He succumbs to his old habit, however, and while in this state offends Miss Elliott. Bryan is at a loss to know how to regain her good opinion, until he discovers that the brother is also a victim of the liquor habit. Elliott gets to the verge of a mental and physical breakdown but Bryan takes him in charge, straightens him out, holds down his job for him until the dam is completed, and is rewarded with the hand of Miss Jean.

A want of skill on the part of the photo playwright in the choice and handling of his material, and the theatric method of Romaine Fielding in directing the production, prevent the picture from receiving unqualified praise. Nevertheless, it will please many of the less critical screen patrons. The locations have been well chosen and the various details of production treated with liberality. The acting is generally capable. June Elvidge plays Jean Elliott with sincerity and pleasing effect. Bryan Goodwin is not one of Carlyle Blackwell's best parts, but he works earnestly and is most successful in the serious scenes. Johnny Hines, George Cowl, Muriel Otriche, Robert Broderick, Victor Kennard, Henrietta Simpson and Henry West complete the cast.

"The Golden Idiot"

A "knight of the road" who is young, handsome, looks like a gentleman and is accompanied by a three-legged dog, is the part played by Bryant Washburn in "The Golden Idiot," a five-part Essanay picture founded on a story by Robert Rudd Whiting, the scenario by H. Tiption Steck. The plot ambles along in a care-free sort of way as Barry Owen, the tramp-hero, goes where his fancy leads him. The director has been to some trouble in finding romantic locations for the story; and as long as the writer sticks to the lighter vein his work is amusing. The serious incidents appear to be lugged in and their effect falls short of the author's intent.

Barry Owen has a millionaire uncle who makes an eccentric will and, quite to the young man's surprise, at his uncle's death, he finds that he has qualified as the fortunate heir. His adventures on the road bring him in contact with a number of pretty girls and he marries the prettiest one after he comes into his uncle's millions. The action could be improved by closer construction.

The wholesome personality and honest workmanship of Bryant Washburn in the character of Barry Owen is the best feature of "The Golden Idiot." Virginia Valli is also an important and valuable member of the cast. She is a fine type of young womanhood, natural, good to look at and shows character in all she attempts. The rest of the acting is uniformly excellent.

Triangle Program

"The Mother Instinct," with Enid Bennett and Margery Wilson—An Adaptation from the French.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"THE Mother Instinct" is a beautifully adapted story from the French, supposedly, as it is located on the tumultous Bay of Biscay, and there is a sincere effort throughout to give it French atmosphere. It is a consistent story af sacrifice, because the sacrifice is made by a woman—the other sex has no passion for it. Opening with a vivid scene of storm, the story strongly enforces a difference in the character of a fisherman's children. The father is lost at sea. Two of the children delight in the storm, the brown ones, and they are but little affected by the loss of their father. The white one is terrified throughout, and this leads the mother to place her in Paris with an aunt, where she may be raised in a different environment. After one reel of this finely-pictured characterization the results are shown in the grown-up children, Enid Bennett playing the white one, Margery Wilson and Jack Gilbert the sunburnt brownies.

The city-bred girl falls under the spell of Bohemian life among the artists and has a child by one of them. Enid Bennett in this role plays with high intelligence, but she is not entirely effective because of her type. She makes it interesting, however, through force of personality. All other main characters and most of the subordinate ones are most carefully typed, adding powerfully to the illusion. Margery Wilson as the country girl who goes to visit her sister in Paris and is so shamed that she refuses to marry the man of her choice on her return, exceeds herself in the role, rising higher than she has ever done before in the critical moments, displaying an emotional intensity thoroughly French and very effective.

Her brother is unjustly accused of murder, with circumstantial evidence so strong that his conviction seems certain. The mother and the erring sister were in court, the latter with her illegitimate child. At a high point the country girl risks all to save her brother. In a passionate confession she snatches the child from her sister and declares it to be her own by the murdered man. She saves her brother by this noble lie and is not arrested for the crime, supposedly because it was justifiable homicide. There is a reconciliation between her and her lover, but the conclusion of the story is very much up in the air. Fine acting and true artistry of directing compensate to such an extent that the release is deeply interesting.

To Honor and Obey

Gladys Brockwell Makes a Human Character Stand Forth in Latest Fox Picture and Gives It Tense Dramatic Distinctness.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE best Fox picture that this reviewer has seen in some weeks is "To Honor and Obey," a five-reel offering released on July 15. Gladys Brockwell, amply endowed with ability to imagine and picture for us those more than superficial emotions of the human heart that appeal to us as eternally true, has made the picture like a swift stream that bears us along past the trees and rocks of life's background. We see these things, but the big thing in our experience watching the picture is the story's motion, its movement. One may ride down the same swirling river times without number, yet the speed of his flight is always new to him.

Miss Brockwell's supporting cast fills the bill, but no great thing is demanded of it. The writer was asked recently by what token he knew good directing from the poor article. Good directing is noticed negatively and by the consciousness after it is all over that the mind has not been distracted from what is deeply relevant by any consciousness of what is awkward because untrue. Director Otis Turner, who made this picture, has used two vision scenes. In the first the hero (Charles Clary), alone at table, keeps looking at his plate, while the longed-for girl he loves takes a seat at table with him for a vision's moment. At another point that same girl sees her husband, the villain (Bertram Grassby), who has confessed to embezzlement. She turns away in pain. In a vision he is seen in convict stripes. She turns and sees him thus clad and over her face comes a look of horror. Now this showed imaginative direction, but how much more imaginative would it have been if she had turned her back to him just before the change and if the look and the change had then come simultaneously, or at least the horror had come just before she turned to look. The director probably saw this as soon as he saw the film. This is a well directed picture on the whole and there is little in the important scenes that distracts attention from the story's motion and our emotion watching it.

Peggy the Will o' the Wisp

Mabel Taliaferro Appears As An Irish Girl, and As a Gentlemanly Highwayman of the Robin Hood Type.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

BASED on the Irish folk-lore story of "The Will o' the Wisp," Rory O'Moore, who robbed from the rich and gave to the poor; the Metro five-reel production of Peggy, The Will O' the Wisp, affords Mabel Taliaferro the opportunity for some pleasing bits of characterization in the part of an Irish lass who adopts the disguise of a gentlemanly highwayman and obtains money to assist the sick wife of a poor peasant.

Miss Taliaferro is excellent as Peggy, and makes a charming highwayman. The part also shows her to be a good rider. The story, which is by Katherine Kavenaugh, and directed by Tod Browning, follows fairly obvious and conventional lines and the action is inclined to drag, too much footage being given to incidents not necessary to the plot.

T. J. Carrigan, as Neil Lacey, the lover, and W. J. Gross, as Peggy's father, do good work. The rest of the supporting cast is satisfactory. Sam Ryan, as the Squire, and Nathaniel Saxe, as Terence, his scapegoat nephew, are inclined to overact.

"Little Specks in Garnered Fruit"

A Two-reel O. Henry Story on the General Film Program—Carlton King and Nellie Spencer in the Cast.

Reviewed by Arthur W. Courtney.

THE art of production of the two-reel picturizations of O. Henry stories is high. In "Little Specks of Garnered Fruit" the hero is a bridegroom on his honeymoon. He is also welterweight champion of the world. When the bride picks up a picture of her husband in a fighting pose, a transition is made to a knockout scene in the prize ring. The fading is done in a perfectly natural fashion. One who had never seen a moving picture could understand this without knowing anything of the conventions of the screen.

The scenes in the bridal apartment also deserve mention for their naturalness. The bride is alone for the greater part of two reels. Nellie Spencer, who acts the part of the bride, has a difficult part in that she has to act so many scenes by herself. Yet these scenes are cut into the adventures of the bridegroom, who is wandering about the city streets in February trying to capture a peach to satisfy his bride's whim, so that the interest is well maintained.

Carlton King plays the part of the bridegroom. He finds that there are peaches in the gambling den of his enemy, Denver Dick, so he informs the police and takes a raiding party to the place. He gets a peach. But when he gets home and wakes up his bride to show her the peach, she has forgotten that she said she wanted a peach. She thinks she would much rather have an orange.

As usual the titles are better than any other titles could possibly be. They are modeled on O. Henry's language in the story.

Comments on the Films

EXCLUSIVELY BY OUR OWN STAFF

General Film Company.

A MODEL MARAUDER (Kalem).—Seventh two-reel episode of "The Further Adventures of Stingaree" series. The number is a thoroughly entertaining one. The story tells of the adventures that befall Stingaree when he insists on visiting a wax works, where his likeness in wax is on view. True Boardman and the usual cast of Kalem players appear. E. W. Hornung's story is made doubly interesting by some surprising twists to the plot.

THE L X CLEW (Selig).—This is an utterly pointless one-reel detective story. The butler steals the diamond necklace. The detective finds a chalk mark, an L X, on the window sill. This mark is on the sole of one of the butler's shoes. He has just got them back from the cobbler. The detective finds that the butler's watch has stopped. Inside the case he finds the necklace. The settings are grossly out of keeping with the level of social life represented.

A DAUGHTER OF THE SOUTHLAND (Selig).—A two-part drama of 1860. Betty, the heroine, dressed as a sailor, is on the Merrimac at the time of its fight with the Monitor. The hero is on the Monitor. She is pitched into the sea and he saves her life. There is much more to the story. It is old-fashioned, futile and poorly done.

A PEACEFUL FLAT (Ray).—In some respects this is better than other Ray one-part comedies. The Rays clash with Mrs. Little to their sorrow. They get even through Mr. Little. The only laugh is when Johnny Ray puts on a woman's dress to meet Mr. Little as Alice, with whom he has an appointment in the garden.

SEVENTY AND SEVEN (Black Cat).—This is a two-part story of a seventy-year-old civil war veteran and his seven-year-old grandson. Julien Barton is excellent as the veteran. Ellis Paul gives an appealing impersonation of the grandson. These two characters figure in several good situations. The scenes in Farmer Scroggs' home are not convincing. He is tyrannical in a way that is amusing in spite of himself.

Art Dramas, Inc.

MISS DECEPTION (Van Dyke), July 9.—Jean Sothern is the featured player in this five-reel comedy-drama. It is a picture typical of the cute-country-girl-who-comes-to-the-city type. The picture relies upon the appealing incidents rather than its story for its appeal. A review is printed in the review columns of last week's issue.

WHEN YOU AND I WERE YOUNG (Art Dramas), July 16.—A five-reel picture with Alma Hanlon as leading player. It is the kind of film that makes a reviewer feel a bit wearied but can not be dismissed as an offering in so off-hand a way. There is only one real character in it, viz., the Spanish artist, played by Florence Short. The story is too long, the characters too unreal and the love interest too unconvincing; but I have seen just such a film go well in a country show. This is understandable. Madame Blache, its director, has fallen far below her high standard in it. One wouldn't believe a careful director had done it.

Bluebird Photoplays Corporation

THE RESCUE, July 23.—This five-part photoplay has an actress for a heroine, played by Dorothy Phillips. The story is artificial. The production is excellent. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Butterfly Pictures.

THE REED CASE (Butterfly), July 9.—A five-reel number, written and directed by Allen Holubar, who also plays the leading role of Jerry Brennon, detective. The opening scenes devote too much footage to Jerry's early career, and the mail story is not reached quickly enough. When it does come, it proves entertaining, though it is not in any sense powerful. The strong feature of the production is the mountain cabin and the weird developments which occur there. The story as a whole is interesting, but has numerous faults in production. Others in the cast are Ernest Shields, Edward Brady, Louise Lovely, Alfred Allen, Fred Montague, George Pearce, Sydney Dean and Nanine Wright.

Greater Vitagraph.

RICHARD THE BRAZEN (Vitagraph), July 25.—Harry Morey and Alice Joyce are the leading players in this five-part picture. The hero is a young American who passes himself off as an English lord and wins an American wife. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

SHELLS AND SHIVERS (Vitagraph).—A war-time burlesque of [illegible] in which a [illegible] gets mixed up [illegible]. The manner in which shells dart back and forth through the air and pursue frantic victims is really very amusing. Rather a clever idea with Lawrence Semon directing.

CHUMPS AND CHANCES (Vitagraph).—Lawrence Semon is the director and leading comedian. This is as funny a picture as one could wish to see. It is full of laughs. Semon gets into the house of the girl he is courting by climbing a telegraph pole and walking in on the wires. He comes out in such a hurry that he crosses the wires. This makes the [illegible]. The comedy is [illegible] funny.

Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay

THE GOLDEN IDIOT (Essanay), July 23.—The acting of Bryant Washburn is a great help to this five-part comedy, which is also strong on [illegible]. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 133 (Gaumont), July 18.—This number of the weekly shows the first regiment of American soldiers "somewhere-in-France," the Fire Department of New York City staging some fire-fighting thrills, the first steamer passing through the new locks at the head waters of the Mississippi, the new armory ready for the 8th Coast Defense, N. G., New York, and the carrying of the largest American flag in a parade by patriotic San Francisco.

TOURS AROUND THE WORLD NO. 37 (Gaumont), July 17.—The places visited in this number are Avignon, France, the Ruined Palace of Tiberius, and Timbuktu the Mysterious, a city of Soudan. These subjects are well illustrated.

REEL LIFE NO. 64 (Gaumont), July 19.—This number contains some interesting subjects, including the manufacture of incandescent mantles, the growth of the cocoanut, scenes with the Boy Scouts' Signal Corps, a novel bicycle race, and cartoon studies from "Life."

MELISSA OF THE HILLS (American), July 23.—A five-part production featuring Mary Miles Minter. The picture is not one of Miss Minter's best and is lacking in convincing action. It is a drama of the hills and has been reviewed at length elsewhere.

MAN PROPOSES—? (La Salle), July 31.—A farce comedy in which a man receives a latter stating that a position with a large salary attached is awaiting him in Alaska, where he is expected with his wife. He sets about to seek a wife and in so doing finds that he has been robbed of the paper of proof that the job is his when he marries and arrives in the North. The most objectionable thing in this picture is a half-dressed model.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

WHAT MONEY CAN'T BUY (Lasky), July 16.—This is a beautiful picture in five parts with Theodore Roberts, Louise Huff, Jack Pickford and Theodore Roberts in the cast. Directed by Lou Tellegen. A review is printed elsewhere.

THE WRONG MR. FOX (Klever Comedy), July 16.—Victor is an actor who is mistaken for a minister. To save the day he introduces his bicycle act in the church service. A long review was printed in last week's issue.

Fox Film Corporation.

TO HONOR AND OBEY, July 1.—A five-reel picture with Gladys Brockwell, in which her acting carries the spectator along as though his soul were watching another human heart in the toils of undeserved misfortune. It is a good offering and can be commended for human beings who like to see real life on the screen. A longer notice is printed elsewhere in this issue.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

HEARST-PATHE NEWS NO. 58, July 18.—Visit of the "kiltie" band of bagpipers from Canada, tennis championship games, French war scenes, departure of University of Pennsylvania Ambulance Unit, an automobile truck with wheels so constructed that it runs equally well on an ordinary road or on a railroad track, together with other interesting items, comprise this reel.

DANGER UNDERGROUND (Pathe), Aug. 5.—Episode No. 5 of "The Fatal Ring." In this number several exciting situations arise. Pearl is first rescued from the underground stream, she and her rescuer barely escaping death from an incoming ferryboat. She then seeks out Carslake, in an artist's studio, and several struggles occur for possession of the violet diamond. The installment reaches its close with Pearl hanging headfirst over a boiling cauldron.

A CRAZY CATASTROPHE (Pathe), Aug. 5.—One of George Herriman's animated cartoons. In this adventure the Krazy Kat visits No-Kats land, accompanied by the mouse. They meet with many eccentric and amusing experiences.

MAKING A NEWS PICTURE (Pathe), Aug. 5.—An interesting educational subject, showing the complicated process by which newspaper illustrations, from photographs, are made. This will satisfy the curiosity of many people who have often wondered how the picture is transferred from the photograph to the news columns.

REVOLTING PRIDE (Pathe), Aug. 5.—Episode No. 13 of "The Neglected Wife." This number reaches an interesting point in the triangle love story. Margaret, "the other woman," after trying to keep away from Kennedy to save his name, is urged to return to him by a political gang. Kennedy himself is shot at by a veiled woman while making a campaign speech, the bullet hitting his chauffeur. The number is well constructed and holds the interest firmly.

LONESOME LUKE, MESSENGER (Pathe), Aug. 5.—A two-reel knockabout comedy, featuring Harold Lloyd as a messenger boy, designated as "a greyhound for speed." He invades a girl's seminary while out with a message and has a lot of laughable adventures. There are a number of very funny stunts in this, which is full of action from first to last.

Triangle Film Corporation.

THE MOTHER INSTINCT, July 15.—A dramatic story of a French fishing village, with Enid Bennett and Margery Wilson in strong roles. Especially effective scenic effects and elaborately beautiful settings enhance this interesting story.

IN SLUMBERLAND (Triangle), July 29.—A dragging story, relieved in spots by the director's efforts to make it interesting, but merely an attempt to stretch an old one-reeler into five reels. Too poor to bear comparison with modern work.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 80 (Universal), July 11.—New government dam on Mississippi, elevated wreck in Brooklyn, New York fire drill and numerous war features of international interest are included in this number.

THE GRAY GHOST (Universal), July 23.—No. 5 of the series, under the special title of "Plunder." This instalment leads up to the big feature of the serial, in which the chief criminal and his band begin the wholesale robbery of a big jewelry store. The number closes with the criminals still at work, having chloroformed the proprietor and made the store detectives prisoners. This constitutes a big undertaking of a dramatic sort and holds the attention firmly.

THE GRAY GHOST (Universal Special), July 30.—Instalment No. 6. This brings to an exciting close the robbery of the jewelry store, in which a band of twenty criminals hold up all the customers in the place and fill an auto-truck with rich loot. They make their escape with the goods and exciting scenes follow. Wade and Morn Light are held as prisoners by the "Gray Ghost" and find themselves in company with young Olmstead, who has been mysteriously missing. This number, with the previous instalment, raise the interest in the serial to a high pitch.

THE WOMAN WHO WOULD NOT PAY (Star Featurette), Week of July 30.—A two-reel number, by E. M. Ingleton, featuring Cleo Madison, Frank Whitson, Daniel Leighton and Bertram Grassby. The former plays the part of a married woman whose love for admiration induces her to ensnare every man she meets. One lover, jealous of her attentions to another, tells the husband. The latter comes home unexpectedly and discovers a man hiding in the vault. He allows the latter to die there, in order to torture the wife's soul. This is strongly presented and contains excellent suspense. It is much better than the average picture of the type.

MARRIED BY ACCIDENT (Nestor), Week of July 30.—A pleasing light comedy, featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, Edith Roberts and Helen Wright. The plot, in which Eddie induces his rival to assist in his elopement with the girl, is slight, but humorous and entirely successful. A good comedy number.

BLACKBOARD AND BLACKMAIL (L-KO), Week of July 30.—A comic number, most of the scenes in which take place in a country school. The boys and girls are up to all sorts of juvenile tricks. Just a string of entertaining incidents of the knockabout sort, some of which are quite funny. The explosion at the close will get a laugh. Phil Dunham, Merta Sterling, Lucille Hutton and Charles Inslee are in the cast.

THE STINGER STUNG (Joker), Week of July 30.—A rural comedy in one reel with Gale Henry and Milt Sims. The latter drives the judge away from his sweetheart by stinging him with bees. The evidence is brought into court; the prisoner is sentenced to the chair. The judge goes fishing. Gale Henry makes a wild dash for the pardon. This is fairly amusing.

THE BATTLING BELL BOY (Joker), Week of July 30.—A knockabout number, by Jack Cunningham. This features William Franey as a bell hop with a "wallop." He challenges the "Masked Marvel" in the prize ring and winds up by putting everyone in sight out of business temporarily. This has a little too much action in it to be really funny, though it will get a laugh from sport lovers generally. Others in the cast are Zasu Pitts, Lillian Peacock, Milburne Moranti and Bobbie Mack.

RIGHT-OF-WAY CASEY (Gold Seal),—Week of July 30.—George Marshall must be given credit for an amusing and original conceit in this three-reel number, in which Neal Hart is featured as a New York traffic cop who finds himself transplanted to a wild Western town, suffering from loss of memory. A lot of good humor is developed when Casey begins regulating the traffic there. A love story is worked into the number, which is different and amusing throughout. Others in the cast are Janet Eastman and Joe Rickson.

WHERE ARE MY TROUSERS (Victor), Week of July 30.—A two-reel comedy subject, by Daisy O'Connor, featuring Carter and Flora De Haven. The husband quarrels with his wife. She removes herself and his wardrobe out to the beach. During the day he slips and soils his trousers. He sends them to the tailor and they fail to return. The husband then starts out attired in brief underwear and a rain coat. There is hardly enough incident to get the full value of this rather humorous idea. It seemed to get over in a tame sort of way, considering the opportunities offered by the main situation.

World Pictures.

YOUTH (Peerless), July 25.—Carlyle Blackwell and June Elvidge are the stars of this five-part photoplay with scenes laid in New York and Tennessee. It is the story of a young man's redemption. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Miscellaneous.

ALMA, WHERE DO YOU LIVE? (Newfields Producing Co.).—A six-reel adaptation of the well known musical comedy, by Adolph Phillip, featuring Ruth MacTammany in the name part. This, accompanied by the well-known "Alma" song and other original music, should prove a pleasing light subject. Reviewed at length elsewhere in this number.

THE WARRIOR (Itala Film), July.—"Maciste," the giant Italian actor, is the star of this seven-part photoplay. It is full of fun and excitement, the scenes being laid in the Alps among the Italian troops. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Herbert Brenon is leaving no stone unturned to make his forthcoming production, "The Fall of the Romanoffs," true to the spirit and atmosphere of Russia. He is making every effort to make the picture correct in every detail. Not only is he anxious to make it a success from the point of view of an entertainment, but he wishes to make it a strong and an important factor in spreading the facts and conditions which led up to and caused the Russian revolution. That the story is true he knows from Iliodor, who was Rasputin's great opponent. History has confirmed his revelations.

Mr. Brenon wants "The Fall of the Romanoffs" not only to be of historical value in this country, and throughout the world, but especially in Russia. The Russian people have been kept in comparative ignorance of the intrigues and plots of the Russian court and they are just beginning to realize how they have been hoodwinked and misgoverned.

Realizing that inattention to detail and failure to observe the habits of Russian daily life with which every Russian is familiar would practically kill the picture from a historical angle in Russia and would therefore be practically useless to the Russian people, Mr. Brenon is taking great pains to follow every detail closely. Russian experts have been called in to supervise all scenes in which a slight deviation from the correct would mean ruination, such as religious ceremonies and gatherings of state, or in any scenes in which customs distinctly Russian are brought into use. Costumes and uniforms are being copied minutely by those well versed in the wearing apparel of the Russians. The Czar's robe of state, trimmed with yards of ermine and silk, has been copied minutely from the original, so have his orb, his sceptre and his crown.

New William Farnum Photoplay Is Finished.

William Farnum's first screen play in the Eastern studios since 1915 was finished last week. The story for the production is an adaptation of "The Doctor," the famous novel by Ralph Connor. Frank Lloyd, who has screened Mr. Farnum's recent de luxe subjects, was in charge of the direction.

State Rights Department

Conducted by BEN H. GRIMM

Exhibitor First, Says Seng

Sponsor of "Parentage" Gives Reasons for His "Follow Through" Campaign—Many Ad Helps Ready.

"I SINCERELY believe it is my duty to assure my fellow exhibitors that I intend to consider their interest first, last and always in connection with the marketing of 'Parentage,'" says Frank J. Seng, who controls the world rights to Hobart Henley's production. "I also want to make it perfectly clear that I heartily endorse the idea advanced by so many of the territorial rights buyers, namely, that the publicity and advertising for any special feature production be continued long after the picture has been allotted and the distributor's interest in it has supposedly ceased.

"And it is with considerable pride that I call your attention to the fortnightly house organ that will be devoted exclusively to the interests of all those exhibitors who will want to book 'Parentage.' Not to my knowledge has any state rights distributor heretofore deemed it necessary to 'follow through' after disposing of his product with any form of advertising whatsoever. The 'Parentage Messenger,' searching out every nook and corner of the country twice each month, will speak for itself. Its usefulness as a beater from the firing line ought to convince the industry that I realize my obligations do not cease when there is no more territory to be sold.

"I also intend to back up my belief in the need for closer cooperation between distributor, buyer and exhibitor by a continued use of the advertising pages of the trade magazines. These trade ads, like our house organ, will be of great sales value to purchasers of prints because they will smooth the pathway to additional bookings and keep exhibitors advised of what the other fellows are doing to make money with 'Parentage.'

"In the Greater New York territory the twenty-four-sheet stands that were so resultful during out record-breaking week at the Rialto theater will carry for another month a direct appeal to the public. A special four-sheet reading 'Ask Your Local Theater to Book It!' takes the place of the Rialto dating and will be on the job night and day, creating new business for later runs. Wherever it is practicable, I have directed my organization to secure extensions of contracts for billboards and continue Mr. Henley's message of home life until another local exhibitor is ready to snipe his dates. If the paper is weatherbeaten I will urge the posting of fresh stands in every instance.

"I do not wish to go on record as favoring the billboard above the newspaper as an advertising medium. If it were possible to obtain sufficient revenue from the sale of a single state rights production I would most certainly back up every booking with a newspaper campaign of my own. But, having determined to ask only reasonable prices for all territories, I will not stand by and see the buyers held up for more money than they can afford to pay, not even to divert such money to the purchase of newspaper space.

"Just one more thought. I fully expect the coming of an era of prosperity in the sale of state rights so far-reaching that it will demand of distributors national advertising, and they will then willingly spend their appropriations to reach the ultimate consumers—the motion picture audiences, and it will be good business for them to do it, too."

BLANK BUYS "SUBMARINE EYE."

The Mid-West Photoplay Corporation, through A. H. Blank, its president, has purchased from the Williamson Brothers "The Submarine Eye" for Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri and Kansas.

MILWAUKEE FIRM GETS "A SLACKER'S HEART."

The Walter A. Baier Film Company, Toy building, Milwaukee, has just closed a deal whereby it obtains the rights for Wisconsin to the seven-reel Emerald Motion Picture Company's production, "A Slacker's Heart." This production was made under the auspices of the Wisconsin Defense League, and has closed a two-weeks' run at the Crystal theater, Milwaukee.

UP-STATE MAN BUYS "RACE SUICIDE."

Joseph Hopper, of Corning, New York, has purchased the northern New York rights to "Race Suicide." The deal was closed for the Phax Pictures Corporation by Samuel Cummins, film broker, of 1476 Broadway, New York.

SUPERPICTURES' PLAN MEETS APPROVAL.

The offices of Superpictures, Inc., are crowded with men with all sorts of pictures to sell, as a result of the announcement that Superpictures had decided upon a policy of buying big pictures and selling them direct to big exhibitors and state rights buyers. The clearing house plan, devised by Frederick L. Collins, president of Superpictures, has met with immediate commendation from exhibitors and from independent producers.

At least three pictures of magnitude are being considered by Superpictures for its first release. So high a standard has been set by Superpictures that all ordinary features are being promptly rejected. Men who have on their hands pictures that are not decidedly better than the average program release will find no market with Superpictures.

Superpictures has announced that no picture is too big or too expensive for it to handle and the biggest men in the industry are taking keen interest in the plan. The same enormous publicity that was put behind "Seven Deadly Sins" will back every Superpicture.

MASTBAUM BUYS "13TH LABOR OF HERCULES."

Leon Schlesinger, manager of the Cinema Distributing Corporation, 220 West Forty-second street, New York, announces that "The 13th Labor of Hercules" has been sold to Stanley Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Theater Company, for eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey. Harvey Day, manager for the Peerless Film Exchange in Philadelphia, which handles the Stanley features, reviewed the entire series of "The 13th Labor of Hercules" and remarked "that he had never before witnessed a series of pictures of this nature which contained so many interesting subjects and so much action, combined with timely interest."

BEADELL JOINS ALLEN CORPORATION.

Ben W. Beadell has become affiliated with the Allen Film Corporation of Chicago. Mr. Beadell is one of the oldest salesmen in point of service and one of the best known film representatives in Chicago. For a number of years he was the special representative of the Essanay Company. Later he became connected with the General Film Company and K-E-S-E, holding important positions. It was in these various capacities that he was enabled to meet and make friends with practically every exhibitor in Chicago and the surrounding territory.

Immediately upon the organization of the Allen Film Corporation F. C. Aiken, general manager, made Mr. Beadell an offer, which he felt offered him a better opportunity than he has yet had for becoming acquainted with conditions throughout the entire Middle West. As special representative for this company Mr. Beadell will have supervision of the salesmen handling "The Garden of Allah" in the seven states for which it controls the rights.

SPITZER RETURNS FROM COAST.

N. H. Spitzer, vice-president and sales manager of the King-Bee Films Corporation, has returned to New York from his transcontinental trip in the interests of the Billy West Comedies. Mr. Spitzer was absent from New York in all about five weeks and visited the important film centers in the country, covering between 15,000 and 20,000 miles on the trip.

Mr. Spitzer succeeded in disposing of the whole available territory for the King Bee Billy West Comedies. This is something of a record, as the first Billy West comedy was only released on May 15, and the entire United States territory was disposed of in about sixty days thereafter. Mr. Spitzer reports that conditions generally in the motion picture field of the United States are booming along at a hurricane clip. In fact, business could not be better. The demand for comedies is overwhelmingly great and the popularity of the young star, Billy West, has been firmly established among state rights buyers and exhibitors.

"POSTAL TIPS" AID SHORT FEATURES.

"Postal Tips," a series of publicity helps which was created by the Short Features Exchange about five weeks ago, seems to be bringing in the desired results, according to reports. The "Postal Tips" series are sent out to the exhibitors in Greater New York every week, and they contain helpful "tips" about short features of merit.

Distribution of the Lincoln Cycle

Benjamin Chapin Explains Preliminaries—Mailing Campaign to Give Direct Contact.

BENJAMIN CHAPIN, president of the Charter Features Corporation, distributors, as well as star of their "The Call to Arms" and other Lincoln Cycle pictures, is a believer in most painstaking care and absolute thoroughness in every branch of the process of making and marketing a motion picture. As a result he spent years in the production of the Lincoln Cycle. For this reason, also, he has conducted an extensive advertising campaign for many months, in this way familiarizing exhibitors, exchanges and public as well as state rights buyers with every detail of the vast proposition he had to offer them. Then came the trade showing, the successful run at the New York Strand theater, followed by more than two hundred performances at the Globe theater. The criticisms of the trade journals and those of the daily newspapers injected the adjectives into descriptions of the photodramas in a much more valuable way than would have been possible to the company's publicity exploiters and, coming on top of the lack of a fanfare of laudatory trumpets from Mr. Chapin, their value was all the greater.

"Now came the most important part of our work," said Mr. Chapin. "We had to get a response from the trade. Personal contact is, of course, the best way of doing that, but we cannot go personally to twenty-five thousand motion picture people in the United States and Canada, so we did the next best thing; we wrote to each and every man whom we considered big enough to appreciate the value of what we had to offer and whom we might reasonably expect to be interested in our pictures. We wrote to each exhibitor of importance to know if he wanted our pictures, and how much he would pay for them. Not that it was our intention to express the pictures to him. No. But you can easily see that when we turned over a batch of requests for rental of the "Lincoln Cycle" in a certain state to a state rights buyer, assuring him of certain bookings, without the cost of one cent for salesmen or otherwise that buyer would see the practical commercial value of our pictures and would be the more anxious to obtain the territory.

We sent out two hundred thousand pieces of mailing matter last week—sent this material to particular persons in particular places—and fifty thousand in the week previous—and I don't know how many next week. But if ever the picture market was combed, we did it. And that is why I can make such favorable contracts with exchanges and state rights buyers. I have a market to offer them, in addition to that part of the market which their own initiative and selling ability will open to them. When much time, money and care is taken in making good pictures it would be unjust to the director, star and author not to give the exhibitor some help in advertising the features."

BEYNON TO WRITE MISIC FOR "BABBLING TONGUES."

George W. Beynon, an orchestration writer of wide repute, has been engaged to prepare the musical synchronization for Ivan Films Productions' photoplay, "Babbling Tongues." His work in Morosco's "Peer Gynt," in Famous Players Company, Lasky Company and Paramount is unquestionably of great value as a musical contribution to moving picturedom. Mr. Beynon excellently acquitted himself in his presentation of the orchestration on "One Law for Both."

NEW OUTPUT PLAN FOR MOTOY COMEDIES.

After a year of careful study of the production of short subjects, H. C. Allen, president of the Peter Pan Film Corporation, is preparing to begin in September to give the exchanges a most unusual output of short films. The Motoy Comedies, which are being released by the Peter Pan organization, are enacted by doll actors and present an entirely new feature in the field of production. They are novel, clever and amusing, and deserve a place by themselves in the production of screen artistry. It is an unexplored field of infinite possibilities, and from present indications is proving a gold mine to exchanges and exhibitors.

Mr. Allen formerly headed the Educational Films Corporation, and in that capacity had a rare opportunity to study the production of short subjects. The success of this corporation convinced him of the possibilities of releasing worth-while short novelties providing that proper material and proper sales plan, organization and publicity were co-ordinated. With this thought in mind, he has formed an organization including some of the strongest men in the business, the details of which will be made public during the next month.

"Motoy pictures," says Mr. Allen, "came into the market during the height of the summer heat, and that would appear to some extent a handicap. The bookings, however, have been most successful and the pictures are being played all over the country. Proctor and Loew are booking them solid for their theaters in New York. We know that they cannot help but be successful, for they cannot fail to please a discriminating audience. At present a great advertising campaign is under way, which will be a material aid to both distributors and exhibitors. Additional plans are completed, but the details will be released later."

MUCH INTEREST IN "PERSUASIVE PEGGY."

In spite of the numerous letters and telegrams which have come to the executive offices of the Mayfair Film Corporation regarding the first production, "Persuasive Peggy," starring Peggy Hyland, M. A. Schlesinger, who has just returned from Chicago, is amazed at the interest displayed by state rights buyers and exhibitors. The executives had the greatest faith in Miss Hyland's popularity and realized the enormous strides it has taken, but they did not really know what a great asset she has proven herself to be to the box office. This fact has been clearly displayed by those at the convention.

The story of "Persuasive Peggy" has also attained much favor in both magazines and book form, for many are well conversant with the charming story of Maravene Thompson, and one and all declare it well adapted to the screen.

In the face of these facts, Mr. Schlesinger feels sure that the value of the first Mayfair production has not been exaggerated in any way. Mr. Schlesinger also writes his office that there is much satisfaction shown over the fact that the authoress is writing the subtitles as well.

Although Miss Hyland herself was unable to attend the convention, owing to important business engagements in town, she did not foroget her many friends, and thousands of original souvenirs were distributed by a number of young girls, who at the same time found it necessary to answer the hundreds of questions concerning the dainty star which were asked them by her ardent admirers.

LESSER OFFICES FLOODED WITH OFFERS.

The offices of Sol L. Lesser, at 523 Longacre Building, New York, which will be the temporary headquarters of the new national organization of state rights buyers, is busy arranging appointments for interviews with Mr. Lesser upon his arrival in August, for the consideration of the deluge of propositions and offers pouring in since the announcement of the establishment of the organization. Some of the most prominent film concerns have submitted offers and have requested interviews.

BLUEBIRD TO STATE-RIGHT "MOTHER O' MINE."

Following the success of "The Eagle's Wings" and "Hell Morgan's Girl" as specially released features, apart from the Bluebird program, the decision has been reached to make "Mother o' Mine," the latest Rupert Julian production, a Bluebird extraordinary. This means that the feature will be distributed by Bluebird branches along state rights lines, independent of the programed features in the Bluebird series.

"Mother o' Mine" will be released Sept. 2, the week starting Labor Day, with Rupert Julian and Ruth Clifford the stars of a photoplay so exceptionally meritorious that Bluebird has decided to match it against features that are made by independent concerns and promoted through state rights. Mr. Julian directed the production from Elliott J. Clawson's story.

Bluebird asserts that the work of Ruby La Fayette, in the mother role, would alone make "Mother o' Mine" a work of extreme merit. Instead of "making up" a younger woman to play the part, Mr. Julian held back the production until he could find the exact type of old lady who could back her mature appearance with suitable dramatic art. In Miss La Fayette he discovered just the combination he desired.

Scene from "Mother o' Mine" (Bluebird).

This veteran actress at the age of seventy-two gets her initiation to the screen in "Mother o' Mine," although her stage career began in the early sixties. She played in various stock companies in the early years of her stage experience, supported Booth, Barrett and John McCullough and later headed her own travelling company. Fifteen years ago she retired, and Mr. Julian's extreme persuasion was required to lure her before the camera.

SHOWING OF CENTURY COMEDIES JULY 27.

Invitations have been issued to state rights buyers and the trade in general by the Longacre Distributing Company to attend a showing of Century Comedies at the Broadway theater, New York, on Friday, July 27, at 10:30 A. M. Three of the Century's productions will be screened at that time: "Balloonatics," "Automaniacs" and "Neptune's Naughty Daughter."

Century Comedies have Alice Howell as their star and last week Julius Stern disposed of the distributing rights to the Longacre Distributing Company, with headquarters in the Mecca building. There is a fourth Alice Howell feature completed, but it will not be shown at the Broadway for the reason that factory work on the subject is not complete.

The Strand, New York, is the only theater where Centuries have been shown, Managing Director Harold Edel having arranged for pre-showings at that house. The Longacre Distributing Company will begin active circulation for the Alice Howell comedies early in September, the interim being taken advantage of to establish distributing branches throughout the country.

PATRIOTIC FILM CONTROLLED BY PIEDMONT.

Piedmont Pictures Corporation, of 727 Seventh avenue, New York, announces that it controls the rights for the entire world, with the exception of the United States, on the Hanover Film Company's production, "How Uncle Sam Prepares to Help the Allies." The subject was photographed under the direction of government officers and is said to teem with patriotism. It shows the training of the soldier from the time he enlists until he reaches the battlefield. The picture is in five reels, about 4,200 feet.

WILD TO SHOW ITALIAN WAR FILMS.

John Wild, of 347 Fifth avenue, New York, who is the American representative of Anglo Film Agencies, Limited, of London, is arranging for a private showing of two Italian war films which have just arrived in this country. The pictures are "The Battle Cry of the Alps," which is 3,700 feet in length, and "The Battle of the Isonzo." The first named film was shown by royal command at Buckingham palace and later was viewed by Queen Alexandra, the Italian Ambassador and other officials. The film is said to be the most interesting war subject to reach this country in recent months. The second production is reported to bring home to the viewer the tremendous fighting activity of the Italian army. It was photographed on the firing line.

Mr. Wild is arranging for the disposition of territorial rights to the two films.

MUTT AND JEFF IN DEMAND.

After allowing three months for a sufficient supply of Mutt and Jeff cartoons to accumulate, Bud Fisher has taken hold of the producing company himself, and is attending not only to the production, but also personally to the distribution. So great is the demand for these comedies reported to be that Mr. Fisher has been receiving requests from exhibitors from all parts of the country to release two a week. However, the amount of work involved in the producing, coupled with the strain of the advertising program which he is carrying out, has rendered it impossible for him to comply with these requests, at least for the present.

While there are several territories still open, from the present outlook the entire country soon will be sold out. This has been accomplished solely on his reputation and without showing a single print. He meets the exhibitors halfway and they like to deal with him, for he makes their interests his own. Hence the wide and rapidly increasing circulation of Mutt and Jeff.

A. KAY COMPANY GETS PATRIOTIC PICTURE.

The A. Kay Company has secured from the Premier Motion Picture Company, of San Antonio, Texas, the negative of a picture entitled "Doing Their Bit." The negative is now bieng assembled and developed, and a large number of prints are being made for general exploitation throughout the entire world.

The negative of "Doing Their Bit" contained about five thousand feet of negative, but it has been made into a three-reeler, so that the interest does not lag for a moment throughou the screenig of the picture. The picture is a patriotic one, and shows our boys in the various training camps of the South going through the training they must have preliminary to going onto the field of battle. The scenes in the picture show our boys performing the duties of the soldier as they would on the battlefield. "Doing Their Bit" depicts in a most forceful manner the necessity of universal military training.

The A Kay Company have received many inquiries regarding the picture, but have not as yet made known their plans as to the [illegible] of distribution.

BACKER BUYS MASTER DRAMA FEATURE.

Franklyn E. Backer, president of the Mammoth Film Corporation, has purchased the first offering of Master Drama Features, Inc., for Washington, Oregon, California, Montana, Nevada, Arizona, Utah, Idaho, Colorado, Wyoming, Ela Paso, Texas; New Mexico and New Jersey. The deal was negotiated through the Overland Film Company and its managing director, Samuel Krelberg. Mr. Backer has arranged with H. O. Martin, formerly general manager for Clune, of the coast, to supervise the bookings for the picture, which will be routed after the manner of a road show.

PURKALL TO MARKET "THE LIAR."

C. Purkall, président of the Purkall State Rights Film Company, 729 Seventh avenue, has purchased the New York territory for "The Liar," a six-reel picture featuring Jane Gail. The supporting cast includes May Simon, Helen Milholland, Stanley Walpole, Agnes Nielson and William Butler. Bookings are now being placed for the 1917-1918 season.

MOSS TO PRODUCE "SINS OF THE CHILDREN."

B. S. Moss announces that production of the screen version of Cosmo Hamilton's "The Sins of the Children" will begin soon, following the completion of the scenario this week by Anthony P. Kelly. A large sum will be spent in the making of the picture, which will be seven reels in length, it is reported.

"The story by Mr. Hamilton," said Mr. Moss, "makes an admirable vehicle for screen production, and the elements of the story have been worked up to a pitch that only the expert hand of Kelly knows how to achieve. Production will be rushed post haste."

HIRSH REPORTS BIG BUSINESS WITH "HATE."

Nathan Hirsh, president of the Civilization-Pioneer Film Corporation, who has recently acquired the exclusive distributing rights for "Hate," produced by the Fairmount Film Corporation, reports that this picture has established a new record for summer business.

Among the big circuits which have already contracted for this picture is the Loew chain, which has booked it solid for sixty-five days for the whole circuit. Several other circuits are at the present time negotiating for a run on this pitcure, it is reported.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

WALLY VAN'S FIRST PICTURE.

Wally Van has completed the first picture to be made by his own company. It is called "Love, Pep and Petrol," and may be classed as a two-reel successor to his other two comedy classics, "Love, Luck and Gasolene" and "Love, Snow and Ice." In his two former "Love" pictures he was known as Cutey, a name which has caused both ridicule and wrong impressions, so the name Cutey is to be abandoned and the same character is henceforth to be known as Mr. Pep.

Mr. Van has gathered together a hand-picked cast of comedy players for his first pictorial offering. Nita Frazer, who played opposite Mr. Van in many of his comedies and who later on was the featured leading lady in the comedies directed by Mr. Van, but in which he did not personally appear, portrays the leading feminine role in "Love, Pep and Petrol." Others in the cast are Hattie Delaro, Nora Cecil, Charles Eldridge, William A. Bechtel, Margaret Cusack, Helen Gauntier, Marie Bryar, Florence Flynn, Marjorie Metzke, Marcella Shields and a host of aviators, seamen, chauffeurs and other forms of gasolene artists. Mr. Van also playfully made use of quite the most interesting lot of extra people imaginable, for he persuaded several very swagger affairs to take part in his premier picture.

"THE LONE WOLF" TO OPEN IN TEN CITIES.

The instantaneous success achieved by Herbert Brenon's latest production for Selznick Pictures, "The Lone Wolf," which is now playing to tremendous business despite the hot weather at both the Broadway theater, New York, and the Studebaker theater, Chicago, has resulted in the formation of plans to open this feature in ten cities early in August as a pre-release showing before the stated date of September 10. The picture will open on the same day in Philadelphia, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Boston, St. Louis, Denver, San Francisco, Los Angeles, New Orleans and Detroit.

"THE AMAZONS" (Paramount).

Farce-comedy and intensely dramatic situations are freely interspersed in Marguerite Clark's first Paramount picture under the new "selective star series" booking plan, with the comedy note predominating throughout the production. "The Amazons" is an adaptation of Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's successful play of the same name which was directed by Joseph Kaufman. In it Miss Clark is Lady Thomason, one of the three daughters of Lady Castlejordon, who suffers from the obsession that her daughters should have been sons. She brings them up as boys, dressing them in male attire and in every way endeavors to inculcate the masculine spirit in her offspring.

SECOND CHAPTER OF "THE GREAT STANLEY SECRET."

"The Great Stanley Secret," a photo-novel in two chapters, product of the Mutual-American studios, is one of the most thrilling adventure stories ever told on the screen. The second installment, "Fate and the Child," will be released by Mutual July 30. The plot involves a conspiracy on the part of a gang of English and American crooks, men and women, to obtain possession of the estate and jewels left by the Earl of Stanley, a famous and wealthy Englishman, to young Arthur Stanley, his grandchild, born in Virginia of an American mother.

Scene from "The Great Stanley Secret" (Mutual).

The cast is headed by William Russell and Charlotte Burton, who is now Mrs. William Russell. The production was directed by Edward S. Sloman, whose Russell productions have been distinct successes.

BESSIE BARRISCALE NEXT IN "MADAME WHO."

Bessie Barriscale's next production will be a screen version of Harold McGrath's sensation mystery story, "Madame Who," on which Monte M. Kerrijohn has been engaged for some time in making the scenario.

Mr. McGrath's story created a nation-wide sensation among readers of fiction last fall when it was first published in a popular magazine. The scenes are laid in the South during the Civil War. The tale centers around the thrilling adventures of a young Southern girl who is taken as a spy and forced into marriage with one of a band of eleven mysterious men. Throughout the narrative the identity of the unknown husband remains enshrouded in mystery and is not solved until the climax.

The scenes are laid in various cities and towns below Mason-Dixon's line and much of the action takes place on disputed ground, so many flashes of actual warfare as it was waged in the '60's will find reflection in this picture.

The production of "Madame Who" will be undertaken almost immediately and David M. Hartford, the casting director for the Kerrigan and Barriscale organizations, is engaging Miss Barriscale's support.

"MISS NOBODY" (Pathe Feature).

In "Miss Nobody," the Pathe Gold Rooster play to be released on August 19, is much human interest of the kind that is sure to "go" in any house. This human interest is given by the really remarkable impersonation given her part by Gladys Hulette and equally fine work done by A. G. Andrews and Cesare Gravina as the elderly pawnbrokers "Crespi and Malone." It is a striking fact that the plays that are the most popular and live the longest are those which show the inherent goodness of human nature and are built around characters who exemplify, among other things, the truth of the statement that the Golden Rule of "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you" is the basis of all true religion.

August Art Dramas

Schedule Changed to Admit of Immediate Release of Crane Wilbur Features.

THE revision of program schedules necessary to allow of the immediate release of the Horsley Crane Wilbur Features on Art Dramas program has been completed, and the new order of releases is here given. Several changes in releases for the next two months are indicated. Contrary to first plans, "Eye to Envy," first of the Wilbur Art Dramas, is to be placed among the July releases, and the second, tentatively titled "Blood of His Fathers," will follow in August.

The release schedule, which will be adhered to, as far as is known, presents the Apollo picture, "When You and I Were Young," starring Alma Hanlon, directly following "The Peddler," the Joe Welch feature from the U. S. Amusement Corporation studio.

"When You and I Were Young" is to be followed by "Eye of Envy," a description and synopsis of which is given in another column of this issue. This presents Crane Wilbur in a role of a novel sort, in which full opportunity is given the star to display his versatility.

After "Eye of Envy" comes the U. S. Amusement-Art Drama, "Think It Over," in which Catherine Calvert and Richard Tucker are starred. The story of this play was written by Herbert Blache, who also directed the production. A cast of unusual excellence enacts "Think It Over," which is said to be as startling and surprising a drama as its title would indicate.

The first release for the month of August comes from the Van Dyke studios, and is entitled "Peg O' The Sea." Jean Sothern is starred in this, which is a delightful comedy with some unexpected situations. It was written by Winifred Dunn, a playwright of distinction and ability. "Peg O' The Sea" has for a setting a New England fishing village.

Another Alma Hanlon vehicle, "Behind the Mask," from the Apollo company, is next in order. This was written by Charles Dazey and adapted by Frederick Rath. Miss Hanlon is supported in this by a cast of well known players, including Florence Short, whose work in former Apollo-Art Dramas has given her a high place in the ranks of screen actresses.

An Erbograph production, starring Marian Swayne and directed by Joseph Levering, will be the next feature on the program. No title has yet been selected for this. The picture is said to be, in tone and theme, similar to Miss Swayne's two previous Erbographs, "Little Miss Fortune" and "The Road Between," both of which were extraordinary successes.

The last production for August will be the second of the Horsley productions starring Crane Wilbur. The working title of this is "Blood of His Fathers." It was directed by Harrish Ingraham and written by J. Francis Dunbar. Mr. Wilbur plays three distinct roles in this—a father, his son and his grandson. The play is said to be stirringly dramatic.

TRIANGLE RELEASES FOR WEEK OF JULY 29.

A unique feature of the Triangle program for the week of July 29 will be "In Slumberland," starring Thelma Salter, a fairy-tale production with considerable interest for grown-ups, too, which is designed to meet the growing demands for photoplays of juvenile interest.

Little Miss Salter, who was co-starred with Frank Keenan in "The Crab" several months ago, has the part of an Irish child whose poetic fancy has been stimulated by the fairy tales told her by an old fortune teller and a genial old man. The action, which is laid at the time of the Boer War, involves an old reprobate of a landlord, who persuades a young husband and father to go to the front that he may carry on his suit with the charming wife whom he has long coveted. How his plans are frustrated by the little girl, with the aid of "little people," is said to constitute an action full of surprise and with rare charm.

Another interesting fact about the production is that it is the first directing effort of Irvin Willat, who was long head of the photographic and titling departments at Triangle's Culver City studio.

Triangle's other release for the same week is "Borrowed Plumage," a five-reel production starring Bessie Barriscale, and notable for its picturesqueness and beauty of mounting. It is a story of Georgian England, involving John Paul Jones and a little kitchen slavey who was the only one who did not run when he arrived at the castle with his pirate band.

GEORGE M. COHAN-ARTCRAFT PICTURE TO BE RELEASED AUGUST 26.

The Artcraft Pictures Corporation announces that the second George M. Cohan picture, "Seven Keys to Baldpate," has been completed and will be released August 26, following the Douglas Fairbanks film, "Down to Earth," which will be released August 12. George M. Cohan portrays the leading part in the photoplay, also gives the film a great advantage over the original play. In the part of George Washington Magee, the novelist who makes a wager that he can write a story in twenty-four hours, on which item the play is built, George M. Cohan is given great opportunity to present his famous characteristics and mannerisms. Supporting him is an exceptional cast, including Anna Q. Nilsson, Elda Furry, Corene Uzzell, Joseph Smiley, Armand Cortes, C. Warren Cook, Purnell Pratt, Frank Losee, Eric Hudson, Carlton Macy, Paul Everton and Russell Bassett.

"A RUNAWAY COLT" (Selig).

William N. Selig announces the release of "A Runaway Colt," one of the best comedies ever written by Charles Hoyt. The release date is Monday, July 23, in K-E-S-E service. Briefly, the story concerns Elias Simpkins, an energetic farmer, who would marry his daughter Letty to Notso Short, son of Banker Short. However, Letty and Hank Higgins, the industrious farm hand, have resolved to get hitched up at the earliest opportunity. When Judge Short brings his son, Notso, to see Letty, Hank Higgins is instrumental in causing a riot, which results in Judge Short leaving the old farm in anger. After a series of unfortunate circumstances, Elias Simpkins resolves to have revenge on his farm hand and orders Letty to remain indoors, while Papa sees the birdmen fly. Hank and Letty seize this opportunity to elope. Simpkins follows the trail in an airship. He overtakes the fugitives but does not foil their purpose for the reason he is thrown off the train by irate commercial travelers.

Scene from "A Runaway Colt" (Selig).

J. A. Richards, who is responsible for the previous laugh makers released by Selig in K-E-S-E and including "A Day And A Night," "A Rag Baby," "A Brass Monkey," "A Hole in The Ground," etc., has put some of his best work into the production of "A Runaway Colt." A capable cast led by Wm. Fables, James Harris and dainty Amy Leah Dennis enact the play. The Hoyt comedies are noteworthy for the reason that they carry out the spirit of the famous American playwright and also present realistic plots.

There is promised a series of comical situations, good photography and unusual effects. Exhibitors who have seen "A Runaway Colt" have booked the comedy and many pronounce it the funniest of the entire series of comedies.

UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY TO THE FORE.

Scenes showing the transportation of a giant lens to the Lick observatory on the summit of Mount Wilson, California, under armed guard, will be sure to arouse interest. The lens, which was made in Europe and cannot be duplicated, weighs four and one-half tons and required twelve years' work in casting, grinding and polishing. When it was announced that the gigantic telescopes on Mount Wilson were to be improved by the addition of this masterpiece of the lens-maker's art, anonymous letters threatening its destruction reached the authorities. Hence, the employment of armed men to insure its safe delivery at the observatory.

Other scenes show the welcome accorded the visiting Belgian Commission at St. Paul, Minnesota; an exhibition of rough riding by a detachment of U. S. cavalry at Portland, Oregon, before leaving for war service; demonstrations in military bridge construction by a company of U. S. Engineers in Lincoln Park, Los Angeles, and the annual Rodeo, or cowboy frolic, at San Jose.

European camera-reporters of the Animated Weekly contribute many striking scenes, including a series of intimate pictures of General Petain, the hero of Verdun; pictures of Sir Thomas Lipton and Harry Lauder, acting as hosts to American forces recently landed in England; scenes showing the landing of food supplies for General Pershing's army in France.

An improvement has been made in the "layout" of the Animated Weekly. All subtitles are now printed white on a black background, and the change is found to obviate eyestrain.

CHANGE IN WILLIAM FOX RELEASES.

A change in the schedule of William Fox releases brings "The Innocent Sinner," an R. A. Walsh production, with Miriam Cooper in the leading role, as the photoplay for the week of July 22.

Universal's Schedule

Cleo Madison Stars in Vivid Tabloid Drama, Comedy and Current Events.

FOLLOWING "A Wife On Trial," a five-reel Butterfly picture released July 30, Universal offers a strong list of diversified subjects, including two dramas, five comedies, and four news and educational features, besides the latest episode of "The Gray Ghost," the mystery serial founded upon Arthur Somers Roche's novel, "Loot."

"Right-of-Way Casey," a Gold Seal drama featuring Neal Hart and Janet Eastman will be released Tuesday, July 31. The story was written by George Marshall and C. J. Wilson, and was produced under George Marshall's direction. "Married By Accident," a Nestor comedy featuring Lee Moran, Eddie Lyons and Edith Roberts, will be released on the same date. This rapidly-growing compound of absurdities was produced by Roy Clements.

"Blackboard and Blackmail," a two-reel L-Ko comedy, in which Merta Sterling, Phil Dunham and Lucille Hutton are the principal funmakers, is the offering for Wednesday, August 1. Directed by Vin Moore and supervised by J. G. Blystone, this unusual combination of thrills and laughs deals with the adventures of a group of school children, their new teacher and a group of light-fingered gentry from the city who take refuge in the school when pursued by the law. The 83rd issue of the Animated Weekly will also be released at the same time.

Cleo Madison in "The Woman Who Would Not Pay" is the star of the feature release for Thursday, August 2. This story, written by E. M. Ingleton, and directed by Ruth Ann Baldwin, is strongly emotional with an unusually effective climax. Cleo Madison is shown in a role demanding her best at all times. Miss Baldwin, with her usual skill in bringing out the high lights of a story with telling art, has used the silhouette method with great success. A jealous lover of a beautiful woman has arranged for her downfall and watches for his revenge from a house on the opposite side of the street. He sees the consummation of his desire on the window shade, where the whole tragedy is played out for him in flashes which tell of the progress of events for which he has set the stage.

"The Battling Bellboy," a Joker comedy featuring William Franey, will also be shown on August 2. This hilarious tale of a bellboy with aspirations to become a fistic champion was written by Jack Cunningham and directed by W. W. Beaudine. Franey is capably supported by Za Su Pitts, Milburn Moranti, Lillian Peacock and Johnnie Cook.

On Friday, August 3, Carter de Haven and Flora Parker de Haven will be featured in a Victor two-reel comedy entitled "Where Are My Trousers?" written by Daisy O'Connor and Ryder Cunningham and produced by Carter de Haven. The de Havens take the part of a newly-married couple who are the victims of an officious mother-in-law.

The 30th issue of the Universal Screen Magazine, released on the same date, contains a series of interesting subjects, including scenes showing improved methods of educating the blind; a demonstration of the Hyde ship-brake, an invention that enables craft to stop in little more than their own length, and thus avoid collisions; demonstrations in domestic science; and scenes incidental to the making of an aeroplane.

A Joker comedy, "The Stinger Stung," featuring Gale Henry, will be released on Saturday, August 4. This new version of the wooing of Maud Muller by the Judge was written by C. B. Hoadley and produced by Allen Curtis. The 12th issue of Universal Current Events will appear the same day, together with a Powers comedy cartoon and a Ditmar's Educational subject, "In Monkeyland," showing the champanzee, gorilla, orang outang and their brethren in various scenes from life.

The sixth episode of "The Gray Ghost"—for release outside of Greater New York—will be entitled "The House of Mystery," and will feature Priscilla Dean, Emory Johnson, Eddie Polo and Harry Carter.

"THE NEGLECTED WIFE" REBOOKING.

Additional bookings from all the Pathe exchanges throughout the country show that "The Neglected Wife," the Pathe serial, adopted from the famous novels by Mabel Herbert Urner, is proving popular with motion picture fans of the nation. The universal appeal of the serial, together with the prestige of the name and the fame of its author, has been responsible for its exhibition in motion picture houses whose managers had never before booked a serial. "The Neglected Wife" is a serial presenting a problem of every-day life that enters or touches every home at some of its angles. Every wife, every girl and every husband can learn a lesson from it.

RUSSELL IN "PRIDE AND THE MAN."

William Russell, screen actor of the athletic type, whose work in motion picture drama has made him the idol of young America, is starred in a new play, "Pride and the Man," produced by the Mutual-American studios, which is certain to be one of Mr. Russell's most sensational successes. "Pride and the Man" will be released by Mutual July 30.

Stingaree in Battle of Wits

"An Eye for an Eye," Fifth Episode of "The Further Adventures of Stingaree," Depicts Extraordinary Resource of Gentleman Bushranger.

IN "An Eye for An Eye," the fifth episode of "The Further Adventures of Stingaree," author E. W. Hornung has told a story which is said to be a photoplay classic. The Kalem Company in presenting this series, which features True Boardman, supported by an unusually capable cast, calls particular attention to the stories—the work of a master plot builder, and "An Eye for An Eye," Kalem announces, combines many of the features which brought Hornung international fame, heart interest and novel stratagems being interwoven in an adventure of tense action.

Stingaree, coming upon a lamb which has strayed from the flock and broken its leg, makes a rough splint, sets the limb and carries the little animal to the cabin of Gypsy Prince, a notoriously unscrupulous gambler of the Australian bush country. When Gypsy protests against the lamb being placed in his bunk, Stingaree remarks, "The lamb is clean enough, Gypsy. It's a pity you aren't half as clean in mind and body!" The gentleman bushranger then permits himself to be enticed into a game of dice with Gypsy, that he may study the methods which the latter uses in fleecing his victims. But despite his vigilance, Stingaree loses heavily. Later he learns that the dice were loaded and he swears to "get" Gypsy.

A year passes, however, before Stingaree's opportunity arrives. One day he stops the stage coach, to inspect the valuables of the passengers, among whom are Gypsy and a youth named Tom Banks. Stingaree finds nothing of value on either of these men. When the coach proceeds, Banks remains and begs Stingaree to take him as a partner. Stingaree, with curiosity aroused, leads the young man to his camp, where the youth tells a pitiful story. Returning from the gold fields he had been robbed and now is ashamed to face his sweetheart and needy mother. Surmising that Gypsy committed the robbery, Stingaree seeks out the gambler and engaging in a thrilling encounter with Gypsy and his partner, Black Hill, he recovers Banks' fortune.

How, in the face of hot pursuit from the police, Stingaree returns the gold to Banks and pilots him through the bush country until he reaches home, builds up the story to a rousing climax.

WEEK'S WORK WITH FOX.

A change in the schedule of releases in William Fox productions will result in issuing another big R. A. Walsh picture. "The Innocent Sinner," for the week of July 22. Miriam Cooper is the featured player in the new photodrama. In the supporting company are Charles Clary, Jane Novak, Jack Standing, William E. Parsons, Rosita Marstini, Johnny Reese and Jennie Lee.

The next Foxfilm comedy will be "Love and Logs." This two reeler has wonderful landscape beauty in addition to humor and stunts, because it was filmed in one of the most picturesque parts of the high Sierras.

Following "The Innocent Sinner," on July 29, Mr. Fox will release Valeska Suratt's ninth subject for the cinemas. "Wife Number Two" has been chosen as the title for this feature. William Nigh was the director. The cast includes Eric Mayne, John Goldsworthy, Peter Lang, William Burten, Martin Faust, Dan Mason, Dan Sullivan, L. F. Kennedy and Mathilde Brundage.

Another screen play which has just been finished is William Farnum's first in the Eastern Fox studios since 1915. The story for the production is an adaptation of "The Doctor," the famous novel by Ralph Connor. Frank Lloyd, who has filmed Mr. Farnum's recent de luxe subjects, was in charge of the direction. Titles are now being considered for the new film product.

Harry Millards, June Caprice's new director, has practically completed the cast for his initial pictureplay starring the Sunshine Maid on the William Fox program. The company now includes Harry Hilliard, who will appear opposite the dainty star; Dan Mason, the splendid character actor; Kittens Reichert, the talented diminutive; Margaret Laird, who was seen in a recent Fox film, and Lucy Beaumont, a newcomer to Fox productions.

On the West Coast, Robert Lawler, who has been in support of a dozen favorites in the legitimate, has been signed for a forthcoming screen play.

HITS AT BIRTH CONTROL.

"Master of His Home," the immediately forthcoming Triangle play starring William Desmond, hits a decisive blow against the birth control propagandists who have been the subject of much newspaper discussion recently. Alma Rueben, who plays opposite Desmond, appears in the role of a society butterfly of aristocratic parents who marries for money, turning down her husband's proffer of domestic happiness and refusing to be a real wife and a mother. Later on, how the presence of the gardener's children next door exert their influence over her and bring about a change for the better, makes one of the best and most human stories that has been filmed in a year. A very capable supporting cast includes Robert McKim, J. J. Dowling and Eleanor Hancock. The piece was directed by Walter Edwards from the story by R. Cecil Smith.

Concentrating Upon Plays

General Film's New Product Being Chosen for Dramatic Excellence First of All.

GENERAL FILM in the process of augmenting its product has determined to concentrate upon dramatic value as the prime consideration, and an announcement of its new product when given in detail will reflect this policy. By the middle of August the total of releases will be doubled.

"The success of General Film in marketing motion pictures that have their outstanding value in the story and in artistic production, devoid of the conventional 'star,'" says an official of the company, "has uncovered a gratifying and wholesome condition in the film field. In has become commercially significant that the public appreciates splendid plays, that it goes to see plays as plays, that it has seen about as much as it wants of stars without plays, and that it enjoys plays from one reel up to five that have a good story and good actors and have been staged adequately. All of our most conspicuous successes have been 'starless'.

"The O. Henry subjects, which have made such a prof und impression and which have proved so profitable, are 'starless'. But they do have story. They do have the human appeal. They are in every sense of the word 'plays'. The same can be said of the Black Cat stories, comedy dramas produced fundamentally for 'story', chosen for story and the players adapted rigorously to story. True, the producer, Essanay, has put into them some of its best people, people who in five-reel dramas represent the star element that seems so indispensable to part of the public in 'features' even yet. But these people, true artists, play heart and soul in the short length Black Cats are establishing a new and enduring school of photoplay that has quality for its first consideration, where a role is a role and not an overworked 'vehicle'. The consistent excellence of the Kalem productions may also be remarked There every member of the cast plays a vital part, plays right up to the leading man or woman and the latter right along with them, in the sort of story that does not twist the lead, famous as he or she may be, into forced prominence. It is another example of the kind of releases which are winning General Film products such pleasing response and such encouraging loyalty among picture players. As much can be said of the General Film comedies—all chosen for their humor their evenly balanced casts and their story—whether with or without featured leads."

"REBECCA OF SUNNYBROOK FARM" NEARING COMPLETION.

Mary Pickford's presentation of "The Poor Little Rich Girl" will live long in the hearts of the many thousands who have seen it, but her newest picture, "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," according to an Artcraft executive, will out-Pickford even that famous success. The child type presented by "Little Mary" in "The Poor Little Rich Girl" was conceded to be the most remarkable characterization of this kind ever screened, which prompted the producers to obtain the screen rights to "Rebecca," the famous story and play by Kate Douglas Wiggin and Charlotte Thompson

Under the direction of Marshall Neilan the new Mary Pickford vehicle is now rapidly nearing completion at the West coast studios. The subject was adapted to the screen by Frances Marion, which fact adds considerably to the merit of the production. Supporting Mary Pickford in her latest photoplay is a splendid collection of talent presenting many well known players, including Eugene O'Brien, Helen Jerome Eddy, Charles Ogle, Marjorie Daw Mayme Kelso Jane Wolff Josephine Crowell, Jack MacDonald, Violet Wilkey, Frank Turner, Kate Toncray and Emma Gerdes.

PATHE ANNOUNCES "THE STREETS OF ILLUSION."

A boarding house is not commonly supposed to be a fertile ground for the finer qualities of mankind or for romance, yet in the Pathe Gold Rooster play, "The Streets of Illusion," to be released on August 12, there is romance and human interest a-plenty. Gladys Hulette is the star, and Director William Parke has surrounded her with a cast of unusual merit. J. H. Gilmour, William Parke, Jr., Ribharrd Barthelmess, Warren Cooke, Doris Grey, Katherine Adams, little Gerald Bodgley, William P. Burt, Logan Caul, William Yearance, William Marion and William Dudley are some of the names that not only make a cast of unusual size, but one of noteworthy merit as well. Some of these players have been starred in feature pictures. Not one of them but is well cast. The picture was produced by Astra.

BI-MONTHLY HOUSE ORGAN.

"Parentage Messenger" is the title of the house organ that will be issued bi-monthly. It is an eight-page booklet crammed full of advertising hints, money-making ideas and other good common sense. On the cover of the first issue appears the line "A Service of Ideas." The house organ will be kept up to date by the introduction of stories telling how the other fellow "put it over," together with reproductions of his advertising stunts.

"THE LAW OF THE LAND" COMPLETED.

The screen adaptation of George Broadhurst's great dramatic success, "The Law of the Land," starring Mme. Petrova, has been completed under the direction of Maurice Tourneur and is scheduled for release by Paramount under its new selective star-series booking plan in the middle of August.

Great as was the dramatic value of the original play which proved a success on Broadway, it is asserted by the producers that the adaptation of the play for the screen will prove even more intensely dramatic and thrilling than the original play itself

Scene from "The Law of the Land" (Paramount).

An exceptional cast appears in support of Mme. Petrova, headed by Wyndham Standing, well-known English actor, in the role of Richard Harding; Mahlon Hamilton, who also appeared in "The Undying Flame," in the role of Geoffrey Norton. Riley Hatch, one of the best-known character actors on the stage, is superb in the role of Inspector Cochrane. Two other important roles in the cast are played by J. D. Haragan and T. Vivian in the persons of the private secretary and the butler.

L-KO'S FOR AUGUST AND SEPTEMBER RELEASE.

General Director J. G. Blystone of L-Ko comedies has shipped to Julius Stern, in New York, a number of comedies to be made ready in the factory for August and September circulation. In one of them Phil Dunham, who has heretofore been an L-Ko comedian, presents his first work as a director of lively comedies. The other features have been produced by Dick Smith, Vin Moore and Noel Smith, old stand-bys on the L-Ko directorial staff.

"Street Cars and Carbuncles" will be the release for August 22, introducing as principal merrymakers Bob McKenzie, Eva Novak, Eddie Barry and Chester Ryckman, directed by Dick Smith. August 29 "A Rural Caesar" will be circulated, with Lucille Hutton and Billy Bevan featured, under Phil Dunham's direction.

September 5 will have "From Ranch to Riches" as the release, directed by Vin Moore. Myrtle Sterling, Al Forbes and Kathleen Emerson will be the principals. "The Prop's Revenge," September 12, will be a theatrical subject in which the house property man gets into the limelight. Noel Smith directed Walter Stevens, Gladys Varden and Bert Roach in this L-Ko.

KERRIGAN IN "TURN OF A CARD."

The second Paralta production of the J. Warren Kerrigan Feature Corporation will be begun in their Hollywood studios in a few days. The story selected for this photoplay is Frederick Chapin's tale of romance and adventure in the West—"Turn of a Card." The screen version was made by Thomas J. Geraghty and the story is said to fit Mr. Kerrigan's personality as snugly as did the part of John Stewart Webster in "A Man's Man," which has just been completed. In "Turn of a Card" Mr. Kerrigan has the character of an athletic young college graduate.

UNITED BULLETIN CONVENTION NUMBER.

The Convention number of the United Bulletin is an unusual issue. The cover is in three colors and the entire edition is printed on good paper. The information contained therein is of particular interest to all exhibitors and will prove to be profitable reading. The United Bulletin is the official organ of the United Theater Equipment Corporation, of 1604 Broadway, New York, and is to be mailed gratis to any address.

Shubert-Hammerstein-Ince First Picture Ready

New Producing Combination Will Offer New Munsey Serial Among Big Pictures Listed in Twelve a Year Schedule.

DIFFERENT from some film producing companies in that it has allowed but meagure information of its plans to get into print before the actual consummation of its picture production is the Advanced Motion Picture Corporation, which announces the practical completion of its first feature, a five-reel subject, "The Co-respondent," with Elaine Hammerstein in the title role that Irene Fenwick created in the original stage version of the piece at the Booth theater, New York, last season.

Lee Shubert, Arthur Hammerstein and Ralph Ince are the executive heads of the new concern, the first bringing influence in the acquisition of big stars and plays to the corporation, the second a long and successful show experience, and the last the technical and film directing knowledge.

The Advanced believes it is taking advantage of a psychological moment in the film industry in starting at this time to make what its announced aims designate as "big pictures." Its trio of executives believes all the good pictures that can be made by any intelligent producing firm at this time can be sold to distributing corporations at satisfactory profits.

"Fate's Honeymoon," a serial now current in Munsey's Magazine; "The Girl in the Forest," and "The Battle Cry," the last named a Shubert stage production of several seasons ago, are included in new productions to be produced before next Thanksgiving. Other plays and serials of assumed advertising value, the names and characters of which the new firm prefers not to disclose at this time, are owned outright for picturization by the Advanced and will be among the firm's first twelve.

"A WIFE ON TRIAL" LATEST BUTTERFLY.

Mignon Anderson is the star of the Butterfly feature release for July 30. Miss Anderson will have the leading role in "A Wife On Trial," a five-part drama taken from Margaret Widdemer's novel, "The Rose Garden Husband," which ranked as one of the best-sellers a season or two ago. She will be supported by Leo Pierson and a capable cast.: Ruth Ann Baldwin directed the production.

"MR. OPP" (Bluebird).

Alice Heagan Rice's popular novel "Mr. Opp," has been translated to the screen by Lynn F. Reynolds, Bluebird's "nature study" director, and has been set for distribution on that program Aug. 20. This is the second novel by Alice Heagan Rice that Mr. Reynolds has given to pictures, "A Romance of Billy Goat Hill" having been previously released under another program, by the Universal people.

"Mr. Opp" gives opportunity for the Reynolds specialty of taking scenes out-of-doors as backings for his photo-dramatic episodes. Locations in Southern California were found to faithfully reflect the atmosphere and topography of a small Kentucky village—for a land boom in Cove Junction is the basis of the narrative.

Scene from "Mr. Opp" (Bluebird).

Arthur Hoyt will be featured as the principal player, in his interpretation of the title role. Neva Gerber was cast for the heroine, just as she finished her work in the Universal serial, "A Voice on the Wire." George Hernandez, who has always appeared in the Reynolds Bluebirds, was cast for a conspicuous part, and George Chesbro, Elise Maison and Jack Curtis will be seen in the supporting organization.

"STREET CARS AND CARBUNCLES" (L-Ko.).

Dick Smith directed "Street Cars and Carbuncles" as the L-Ko. comedy to be distributed through Universal channels for Aug. 22. The principal merrymakers are Bob McKenzie, Eva Novak, Eddie Barry and Chester Ryckman. Fun is extracted from a contest for patronage between a jitney bus and a horse car line, and many unusual methods of defying fate are employed by the venturesome comedians. General Director J. G. Blystone supervised the production. As usual with L-Ko. comedies, there are daring deeds and sensational effects to surprise laughter from the audience, Eva Novak competing with the male comedians in doing unusual things for laughing purposes. "Street Cars and Carbuncles" gives promise of being an exceptionally good comedy.

ELLIS PAUL IN "OUR BOYS" (ESSANAY).

Following his appearance in "Seventy and Seven," the gifted juvenile player, Ellis Paul, is seen in the current Black Cat release, "Our Boys," for General Film distribution. Whereas in the former production the lad was the only child in the story and played opposite a grandfather role, in the present case he is entirely surrounded by young people. In addition to the Paul boy, Essanay has gathered together an unusually competent group of children, some of whom give splendid characterizations. The story throughout has juvenile appeal, the situations being such as develop in a middle class neighborhood between children who attend the same school. Of course there is the light hearted and pleasing touch that belongs to such an atmosphere, but there is an element of drama as well to make the story absorbing. It is expected that this picture will meet with great favor from any audience.

NEW JAXON PRODUCT ANNOUNCED.

Following the first successful series of six each, new sets of half a dozen Jaxon comedies and Sparkle comedies have been finished by the Jaxon Film Corporation for release through General Film. The number two series of Jaxon comedies, featuring Pokes and Jabs, contains these six one-reel subjects: "Counting 'Em Up," "The Baggage Man," "Getting the Coin," "Tough Luck," "Jolly Tars" and "Play Ball."

The second series of sparkle comedies, single-reelers of the polite type, contains "An Attorney's Affair," "Her Peignoir," "Those Terrible Telegrams," "Stag Party," "Bragg's Poker Game" and "Mixed Nuts."

"THINK IT OVER" FROM ART DRAMAS.

Herbert Blache, president of the U. S. Amusement Corporation, releasing on Art Dramas program, announced this week that the next picture from his company's studio would be entitled "Think It Over."

"Think It Over" will be a two-star combination, the principal roles being portrayed by Catharine Calvert and Richard Tucker. Miss Calvert, who is in private life Mrs. Paul Armstrong, has appeared in two previous U. S. Amusement-Art Dramas, but this will mark Mr. Tucker's debut on the program.

"HIS WEDDING NIGHT," FATTY'S LATEST COMEDY.

Roscoe ("Fatty") Arbuckle's newest comedy, "His Wedding Night," is nearing completion. Within the next few weeks it will be ready for release by Paramount to all exhibitors if the supply of watermelons holds out. Watermelons, incidentally, have been substituted for pies in the Arbuckle productions. This picture will be released August 20.

SANGER OPENS PLAYERS' AGENCY.

Harry R. Sanger has opened an agency as personal representative for players, directors, cameramen, technical men, scenario writers and all other persons engaged in moving picture activities. He has opened his offices in the Commerical Trust building, 1451 Broadway.

BEAUTIFUL UNDER-SEA PICTURES IN "REEL LIFE" NO. 67.

Novelty is a most desirable characteristic for any motion picture program to have, and exhibitors are always keen to get pictures out of the ordinary. An appreciation of this fact is what makes Gaumont single-reels so satisfactory in brightening a program. As a regular release and without extra charge Gaumont always provides some picture that stands out and is worth talking about afterward. An example in point is that of the wonderful series of under-sea pictures which are included as part of "Reel Life" No. 67, the current issue. Despite the expense incident to their filming at Miami, Fla., they are offered without any thought of securing extra compensation for them, just part of the Gaumont insistence upon keeping the quality up.

Scene from "Reel Life No. 67."

These submarine pictures were made by E. B. Gray, one of the leading inventive photographers of America. Several processes of a mechanical nature had to be invented by Mr. Gray before he could secure the wonderful effects of natural lighting. The sunlight furnishes the illumination for these pictures, the shifting lights and shadows adding materially to the beauty of the garden beneath the waves.

Life is added to the picture by the work of a diver who wears a "divinhood." This is a marvelous piece of headgear which the wearer can remove at will and replace beneath the water. All in all, these pictures will be a source of strength to any program, well worthy of holding for a week.

VICTOR MOORE IN "MOTORBOATING."

Victor Moore, for his next release, on July 30, returns to the "family series" in a comedy called "Motorboating." It was written by Thomas J. Gray and is the same type of laugh getting comedy as "Bungalowing," "Commuting," etc. Vic is discovered tinkering with his old Ford car that his wife has been trying to exchange off for some time. She happens to fall upon an exchange ad which offers a "motor boat" in exchange for a car, anything but a Ford. She tells Vic it would be a good idea to disguise the car. Vic tells her "there are two things you cannot disguise—a married man and a Ford." He tells her to help him get some things together and he will try and disguise it. He does, and they start off to get the boat. Vic and the family arrive at the dock and the deal is arranged and he takes the boat and gives up the car. From this time on the ridiculously funny things that happen to Vic and his family and the other fellow with Vic's Ford keep up to the finish of the picture, and it is a "safe bet" that Moore has another big hit on his hands.

Scene from "Motorboating" (Klever).

Most of the scenes are taken down at the seashore and they make the comedy a splendid release, particularly for the summer time.

By the Boston Correspondent.

DORCHESTER, MASS.—Work has been begun on the construction of an immense motion picture theater at Upham's corner, Dorchester, an ideal location that has long been coveted by theatrical interests. Marblehead Pleased with Picture Makers.

Marblehead, Mass.—Residents of this town who just recently learned what it is like to live in a motion picture city, are anxiously awaiting the return of another motion picture company to film a play on the rugged shores of this picturesque town. While Viola Dana and her company were in the town recently filming "Aladdin's Other Lamp" the townspeople and tradesmen benefited financially and Marblehead was a mecca for yachtsmen and vacationists who were interested in seeing the motion picture actors and actresses at work.

Boston Theaters Aid Red Cross and Recruiting.

Boston, Mass.—Among those who are contributing immensely to the success of the recruiting drive in New England by army and navy officers are the Boston motion picture men. Each week many theater managers volunteer the services of members of their organizations, singers and performers at their houses. In addition to assisting the recruiting officers the motion picture men have contributed largely to the success of the Red Cross and Liberty Loan campaigns. While the Liberty bonds were being sold each theater gave its stage to Liberty bond salesmen, who conducted whirlwind tours of Boston, speaking for four minutes from the stage of each theater.

Among Boston Men Who Were in Chicago.

Maine News Letter.

By John P. Flanagan, 147 Park View Ave., Bangor, Me.

Ferguson Joins Canadian Kilties.

PRESQUE ISLE, ME.—Lee Ferguson, proprietor of the Perry theater in this town, was recently mentioned in the World as a patriotic young man who had responded to President Wilson's call by registering for the draft. Now he has gone one better, and yielding to the lure of the clan, for as his name indicates, his ancestors hailed from the land of the heather, he has enlisted in the 236th Canadian Kilties battalion. If his fellow exhibitors could only see him now in his skirts, with nothing on his knees at all, they'd hardly know their enterprising friend. Lee looks good in plaid and some day when you're looking at a Pathe or Universal weekly scene, you may see him charging the Germans or proudly appearing in reviews before the King of England. A. P. Stevens has bought the Perry theatre from Mr. Ferguson and will run it.

Work Begun on New Waterville Theater.

Waterville, Me.—Work has just started on Waterville's new theater, to be located on the Haines lot on Main street, opposite the postoffice. The building, which is to be erected by Cyr Brothers for Hon. William T. Haines, former governor of Maine, will be two stories in height and approximately 80 by 100 feet. The entrance is flanked by a store on both sides. Brick and concrete will be the materials. There will be a large stage, lofty flies, and fine dressing room facilities for accommodation of road companies. Thirteen hundred people will be able to purchase seats for any one performance. The ventilating, lighting and heating systems will be up to date. It is planned to construct a theater that in every way will be a credit to the Elm City. The house will be operated under lease from Mr. Haines by the Waterville Theaters Incorporated, of which Alfred S. Black of Rockland, president of the Maine Exhibitors' League, is president and manager. The estimated cost is $40,000.

Business Notes.

Patten, Me.—Dr. Raymond of Patten has bought out the Star theater of Millinocket from George Ferland.

William Green of Portland has been showing "The Daughter of the Gods," and "The Unborn," in the Morse building, Postoffice plaza, Bangor, and intends to open this house permanently in the fall. Mr. Green is recovering from the effects of a fall sustained while making alterations in the Morse Winter Garden.

Red Cross Benefits in St. John, N. B.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—The outstanding events of this week in St. John have been the generous response made by the St. John theaters to the Red Cross appeal for French wounded. The appeal was made to the Red Cross headquarters, who sent it out throughout Canada. The local Red Cross Society planned several entertainments and the local managers and exchange men most willingly assisted in every way.

The Imperial Theater's Benefit.

The Keith interests, following their plan of donating their houses for one day to this cause, gave the Imperial theater for July 12 to the cause. Three performances were held there and were splendidly attended. It is expected that upwards of six hundred dollars will be the result. The services of the orchestra were given, as well as those of the ushers (who are members of the Young Women's Patriotic Association.) The pictures shown were "The Bugler of Algiers" or "We Are French," donated by the Universal Film company through G. A. Margetts, and which was highly praised on all sides. Scenes of the French navy were loaned by the Specialty Film Import company, R. G. March, manager, and a beautiful colored film of French scenery was sent down especially from the Montreal office as an extra donation. Another film man, J. E. Breadon of the General Film Co., gave a French soldiers' picture. All this has been acknowledged by the society and in its publication has been highly appreciated.

At the Empress Theater.

At the Empress theater on July 12 a Red Cross benefit was given in the evening by the Lancaster Red Cross Circle. William B. Smith, with the consent of his partners, gave the theater outright to the society, made all arrangements for the program and decorated the house. Mr. Smith was thanked in a speech made during the program. The pictures shown here were also loaned to the cause by the Specialty Film Import, the Universal Film and the General Film companies.

Star Gives Two Performances.

T. J. O'Rourke of the Star theater has also given his house outright for two performances on July 19 to the Lancaster Red Cross Circle. He puts on his Butterfly feature, "Like Wildfire."

At all the theaters slides were shown advertising the various benefits to be given for Red Cross purposes.

Veterans Benefit at the Lyric.

St. John, N. B.—At the Lyric on July 18 the theater is donated for the benefit of the Great War Veterans' Association after the first evening performance. A chapter of the Daughters of the Empire will put on a one-act play. The proceeds are for a permanent club house for the veterans.

Roger Thompson Goes to War.

ST. LOUIS.—Roger D. Thompson, who has been connected with the Bluebird exchange as traveling representative for the last fourteen months, will leave St. Louis on July 25 to become a member of the South Carolina National Guards in the capacity of Quartermaster Sergeant, attached to the headquarters staff at Columbia, S. New Grand Central Issues House Organ.

Detroit. William Sievers, manager of the New Grand Central theater, is issuing a house organ that is creating considerable comment among the patrons of the house because of an interesting history of theatricals in St. Louis, which is made a feature of the publication. The history starts one hundred years ago, and gives the record of the very first theatrical performance given west of the Mississippi River. Mr. Sievers intends printing an installment of the history each week until the advent of moving pictures, when a history of that industry will be taken up.

Democrat Exchanges Picture Section.

St. Louis - The St. Louis Globe Democrat has added a department to the moving picture page which has been a feature of their Sunday Magazine section, that is very popular with exhibitors and exchangemen throughout this territory. Under the title of "New Films to be Released This Week" every feature released in the territory is given announcement with a brief synopsis and names of the principal players. The matter is arranged so that it appears in the paper as near the release date of the picture as possible. That the department is of value to the exchanges is shown by the fact that several out-of-town exhibitors have written the paper asking where features described in the column could be rented.

Rosenthal Returns from New York.

St. Louis.—Barney Rosenthal, manager of the Universal Exchange, has just returned from a week's visit to New York, where he was in conference with officials of the Universal.

Terre Haute, Model Fire Prevention City

Local Fire Inspector R. H. Ring Reports All Theaters in City Are Equipped with Standard Safety Storing Cans for Waiting Films.

By Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis.

TERRE HAUTE, IND.—While the exhibitors of Indianapolis are stewing and fretting about the passage of the new ordinance governing the storage, handling and manufacture of motion picture films, the motion picture men of this city are saying "I should worry." And all because Terre Haute is probably the best protected of any city in the state as far as fires resulting from film or gasoline are concerned.

R. H. Ring, local fire inspector, reports that every motion picture house in the city is equipped with a standard containing can for the storage of films about to be shown on the screen. These cans are made of metal, and are safe from fire. All films are shipped from exchanges in sealed metal boxes, and these are placed in storage boxes immediately on their arrival, and are kept there until wanted for use.

"About the only chance for a fire in theaters here is the ignition of the film being shown in the picture machine," said Inspector Rihg. "And even at that such a fire would not be hazardous, as all of the operating machines are built in a fireproof booth."

Mr. Ring is now acting as a deputy state fire marshal, working directly under H. H. Friedley, state fire marshal. He says he is seeing to it that the state orders regarding fire prevention are being carried out to the letter. He has appointed a fireman in each fire company of the city to inspect theaters and other buildings in its territory each month, and in turn make a report to him.

There is only one film exchange in the city, that being the Lyric Film Supply Company, which recently moved from the American theater building to a new building near Fifth street and the Vandalia railroad

A standard containing booth for the storage of films is being built in the new building on order of Inspector Ring. The booth is being constructed on plans designed by the National Board of Fire Insurance Underwriters, is properly ventilated and absolutely fireproof. The storage booth in the American theater building is being used by the film company pending the completion of the new booth.

Exchange Managers on Lookout for Roadmen

Scarcity Due to War Is Felt and There Are Good Chances Offered to Capable Men Who Want to Get Into the Film Business.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Motion picture film exchanges of the District of Columbia are up against a very tough proposition in the way of securing suitable help to handle the heavy business which has been coming to them during the present year. Taking the top notchers, the roadmen—all of the managers are on the lookout for men capable of handling that work.

The shortage of roadmen in this territory is necessitating the taking of men who are absolutely inexperienced in so far as film selling is concerned. Further trouble is found in that there is a shortage of salesmen in other lines, due to the fact that all experienced men are being retained by their employers and the surplus secured to make up for those who have either entered the army or navy or have become affiliated with some business incident to the war.

There has been quite a rush to secure the services of men not eligible for the draft or army service. It is the desire of not only the exchange managers but others in the commercial field to get these men and train them as quickly as possible so that when the draft does come, it will not deplete the sales force to such an extent that the exchanges cannot do business. All the managers look for greater trouble when the draft does come.

Several of the exchange managers in this city are now on the lookout for roadmen who are capable of handling high class propositions. These positions carry with them salaries of from $25 to $40 per week. As in all other lines, this is an agent's specialty in so far as film sales are concerned, the great demand being for men capable of handling features and specialty productions.

"We want men of good approach and appearance, capable of writing a good letter," said one of the local managers to the Washington correspondent of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD. "An extensive knowledge of the film industry is not necessary. Selling ability is the main requirement. Due to the constant change in the industry, promotion is almost guaranteed to the right man."

Labor trouble does not affect the roadmen, while it hits every nook and cranny in the exchange. The government has taken the best people in all of the places. The girls have gone into the government offices and to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and the Government Printing Office, where they have become printers' assistants; the young girls, experienced in telephone service, have gone to the government as operators, while the inexperienced go to the telephone company as student operators; even the porters find plenty of opportunities for more remunerative wor

If any of the readers of this column who can qualify, desire employment in Washington the MOVING PICTURE WORLD correspondent will be pleased to convey that information to any of the exchange managers who may signify their desire of securing such help.

Carl H. Pierce Takes New Paramount Department.

Washington, D. C.—The Famous Players' exchange announces that Carl H. Pierce is now in charge of Paramount's new exhibitors' service department. This announcement states that Mr. Pierce is anxious to get in touch with every Paramount exhibitor in the country. He has become a familiar personage to the exhibitors in this locality through his letters printed in "Paramount Progress." The sole purpose of his department is to help the exhibitor wherever possible and it is urged upon them that they do not hesitate to avail themselves of his assistance. "No matter what kind of a problem, complaint, or query you have, pass it along; the service department thrives on such," the exchange states, and continuing, it says that it has every confidence in the ability of Mr. Pierce and his associates to render exhibitors valuable assistance.

Fire Insurance Rates Go Up in Virginia.

Washington, D. C.—The motion picture exhibitors across the river in Alexandria, Va., will be very much interested in the news coming from Richmond of increased fire insurance rates. The Alexandria fire insurance agents have just been notified by the Virginia Inspection and Rating Bureau in Richmond of increases in rates on certain classes of property, effective July 1. There is an increase of ten per cent made on all mercantile buildings, a ten per cent. increase on the mercantile stock contained in such structures, and another of the increases is one of fifteen cents per one hundred dollars on brick and frame dwellings with shingle roofs, with the promise, however, of a ten per cent. reduction upon the passage of an anti-shingle roof ordinance, its application and enforcement, the idea being to do away with shingle roofs as far as possible to lessen fire hazards.

Baltimore News Letter

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Ter., Baltimore, Md.

Charles E. Harper Reappointed to Censor Board.

BALTIMORE, MO.—On Friday, July 13, the worthy Governor of Maryland, Emerson C. Harrington, announced that Charles E. Harper had again been appointed by him as chairman of the State Moving Picture Censor Board.

On Tuesday, July 17, Governor Harrington visited the offices of the censor board, 204 East Lexington street, and discussed the complaints which had come to him regarding its work, but it is understood that there was nothing in the Governor's talk in the nature of a reprimand. It is thought generally that the board will arrange to have the films inspected at the theaters after the eliminations have been ordered to see whether the cuts have been made. The whole board, including Wm. F. Stone, Mrs. Marguerite E. Harrison and Charles E. Harper, were present when the Governor called.

Maryland Delegates to National Convention.

Baltimore, Md.—On Saturday, July 14, a delegation representing the Maryland Exhibitors' League, composed of three well-known film men of Baltimore, left for Chicago to attend the National League convention held last week in that city. Messrs. J. Louis Rome, manager of the Broadway theater; Guy L. Wonders, manager of the Wilson theater, and Thomas D. Goldberg, proprietor of the Walbrook theater, made up the delegation, with the last named acting as chairman. The Baltimore delegation met the Washington members at Union Station and they all continued the trip together. It was thought probable by the Baltimore League that if a strong enough argument is put up for it, the 1918 annual convention may be held in Baltimore. After attending the convention, it is the intention of the Baltimore delegates to visit the cities of Detroit, Buffalo and New York, in order to inspect the theaters located there

Julius Goodman Stirs Up Recruits.

Baltimore, Md.—Julius Goodman, owner of the Ideal theater in Hampden and the Airdome located at Thirty-sixth street and Roland avenue, did a mighty clever piece of recruiting work on Saturday night, July 14. When two soldiers who were making recruiting speeches had finished their pleas at the Airdome, Mr. Goodman got up and announced that he would "give $5 and a suit of clothes each to the first two men who enlist now.' Immediately up jumped four men and just which two reached the platform first was hard to be ascertained. However, one of the winners stated that he wished the money and clothes sent to the Red Cross.

Charles E. Thropp on Vacation.

Baltimore, Md.—Charles E. Thropp, the affable and courteous manager of Nixon's Victoria theater, 415 East Baltimore street, is now on his vacation. A. M' Seligman, the treasurer of the theater company, and G. C. Brown, his able assistant, are getting along with the work during his absence.

Arthur C. Melvin Had Jinx.

Baltimore, Md.—Several months ago Arthur C. Melvin got sick leave owing to general ill-health and in a cautious manner started out to build himself up. He became robust and strong, a fine specimen of humanity, but there was a little jinx waiting around plotting for his downfall. So he took a ride in an auto with a party of friends and, feeling very strong, he cranked it, but the crank got cranky and with a kick back snapped Mr. Melvin's arm. Consequently it was two more months before the arm mended. He is all right now, however, at his old quarters in the Hotel Joyce, and his friends were glad to welcome him back.

Thieves Loot Hagerstown Theater.

Shepardstown, W. Va.—C. S. Musser, manager and owner of the opera house in this city, is alive. Recently he screened the huge Vitagraph production, "Womanhood" for two days at 20 and 25 cents admission and came out successful. It is understood that nearly the whole population of 1,070 flocked to the theater. He also edits and publishes The Independent, and last but not least, he is a steady reader of the Moving Picture World. When Mr. Musser opened his theater in this city the whole church-going community, it is understood, were against the action. But by showing the cleanest, best and most entertaining pictures obtainable, the very people who fought hardest against him in the beginning seem now to be his best patrons.

New Theater on Site of Pittsburgh's Grand

PITTSBURGH, PA.—Announcement has been made by the Harry Davis interests that one of the largest and most modern moving picture theaters in the country will be erected soon on the site of the Grand opera house, Fifth avenue, part of which was destroyed by fire last winter. The contract for the building is to be let in the near future, bids having already been closed. Conjecture for some time as to whether or not the Harry Davis enterprises would rebuild on the historic location of the Grand are set at rest by the announcement last week and the trade is particularly interested in the fact that the new house will be devoted to moving pictures. This concern now operates two leading houses in the downtown district, the Lyric, Fifth avenue, and the Temple, Sixth street. Pittsburgh, Pa.—Miles E. Gibbon, head of the Pittsburgh office of the K-E-S-E and one of the oldest managers in point of service in this city, has been transferred to the Cleveland branch of the K-E-S-E service. Mr. Gibbon was president of the local K-E-S-E club, having been quite active in its organization less than a year ago, and has led in the effective work of establishing higher standards in the film business here. With his departure from this city the [illegible] film trade loses a "live wire" member.

Charles K. Campbell, formerly special representative for the Essanay Company at Philadelphia, handling the Max Linder comedies, is Mr. Gibbon's successor. Mr. Campbell is an experienced and able film man, and his appointment to guide the affairs of the local K-E-S-E meets with much approval among the exhibitors and the trade generally.

Pitt Theater Showing Italian War Films.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Pitt theater, Penn avenue and Sixth street, on July 16 opened an indefinite run of the first official war pictures sent to this country by the Italian government and which are being shown for the first time in America. The films were brought to this country by Lieutenants Mario Prochet and Enrico Palvis of the Italian army, who will remain here throughout the engagement to assist Manager Patch in the exhibition of the pictures.

There are about seventeen reels of the Italian war films, but only eleven are being shown at the Pitt. The A. G. Fontanna Productions have closed a contract to handle same in this territory and bookings are now being taken for dates following the Pitt engagement.

The Bijou theater, Piqua, O., has been taken over by H. W. Kress, owner of May's opera house. Extensive alterations are to be made and the seating capacity of the Bijou increased. George Ziegenfelder, formerly manager of the Princess theater, will be assistant manager at the Bijou.

Wrong Economy Will Spoil Exhibitor's Bit

Dingy, Depressing Theaters Won't Help Win the War—Manager's Chances for Success Won't Be Brightened by Lack of Cheer Either.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—"Don't let your theater 'run down at the heels.' That won't help Uncle Sam win the war."

This is the substance of the advice offered to exhibitors of the Buffalo territory by a film expert, who has noted the tendency of many theatrical men in this vicinity, who have got the "economy fever" so bad that they have relegated the paint brush and, in some cases, the vacuum cleaner to the scrap heap on the ground of conservation.

"The boys of Buffalo and Western New York by the thousands will shortly cross the sea but that is no reason for the exhibitors to have shabby lobbies, grimy, faded walls and unattractive stage settings," said Mr. Keen Observer to the representative of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD. "The exhibitors who have fallen victims to false economy should realize that they are on the wrong track. Nations at war have learned that cheerfulness is the proper spirit. Surroundings influence the moods of film fans, and there never was a better time than the present to 'brighten the corners,' as Billy Sunday would say. War breeds gloom and the exhibitor who fails to dispel this feeling from the minds of his patrons, by sunshiny and inviting surroundings, will wonder eventually what has caused the slump in his box office receipts."

When it comes to cheerfulness, a lively pace has been set, to snatch at only one example, at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, where the summer spirit pervades the air throughout the entire house. A summertime cretonne curtain has replaced the heavy velvet of the colder days, and as it parts, a Chinese garden scene appears, with its high walls and long approach of steps. In the center is a fountain, the vari-colored lights turning the water from crystal to opal. Baskets of Boston ferns hang from the ceiling of the theater. There are ferns and flowers over the foyer doors. The men ushers on the orchestra floor have been replaced by gray-clad girls, whose white shoes, white cuffs and other requisites give a summery touch to the big auditorium. Just inside the foyer beside a silken flag is a great basket of American beauty roses. A large temple lamp throws its glow over the orchestra, now elevated to view from the audience. The whole air of the house is restful and those who are gloomy when they enter usually depart in a cheerful mood.

Proposes New Billboard Ordinance.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Local theatrical managers have been informed that if an amended ordinance which Councilman Hill has requested Corporation Counsel Rann to prepare is adopted by the council, billboards can no longer be erected in this city without consent of a certain percentage of owners of property to a proposed billboard site. Existing billboards would not be affected by the new ordinance.

W. A. V. Mack Honored—Other Mutual Film Notes.

Buffalo, N. Y.—W. A. V. Mack, exchange manager of the Mutual, has been appointeda representative of the moving picture interests on the publicity committee of the Home Defense League of Buffalo. The committee will aid the league in recruiting the local regiments to full war strength. Speakers and slides will be used at the local theaters for this purpose, as well as for food conservation.

The local branch of the Mutual has prepared a beautiful catalogue of all Mutual releases up-to-date, for the past two years. Copies will be sent to each exhibitor in this territory, regardless of whether or not he is using the Mutual service.

C. J. Rose, formerly Twin City salesman for the Pathe, has been appointed Star production salesman for the Mutual. Philip Gentilly has been appointed chief shipper at this exchange. He formerly occupied a similar position with the Fox Film, Syracuse.

Olean, N. Y.—The Gem theater, Olean, N. Y., has closed permanently. G. T. Nickum, proprietor, has taken over the Havens theater, that city.

Olean, N. Y.—Charles Denzinger, formerly manager of the Olympic theater, Buffalo, is now manager of the Grand moving picture theater, Olean.

Olean, N. Y.—Bruce Fowler, manager of the Olympic, reports the cool weather is helping to give him capacity business. He is assisted by Charles Bowe, manager of the Lyric, Buffalo, who will return to that house for the fall opening.

Operators Scarce in Rural New York.

A scarcity of moving picture operators exists in the small towns on account of many heeding the call to join the colors. A good proof of this is contained in the following telegram received recently at a Buffalo exchange from an exhibitor of a nearby village: "Please cancel our film service. Operator enlisted. Letter to follow."

Photodrome's Lobby Displays Attract Trade

Making All Possible Use of Theater Building Brings Good Business to Manager Harry Pomeroy—Live Ideas in His Advertising.

W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard Street East, Toronto, Ontario.

TORONTO, ONTARIO.—Great changes are being made at the Photodrome, 37-39 Queen street West, Toronto by Manager Harry Pomeroy. After taking over this houe a few weeks ago, he started out by making a series of startling lobby displays to feature the various attractions. These got both the people and the trade talking and, in spite of summery weather, the theater immediately began to show to capacity both afternoons and evenings.

Pomeroy now feels so assured of success with this theater that he has decided to launch upon a much broader field. He has made arrangements for the opening of a dancing establishment and cabaret on the two upper floors of the Photodrome building and the opening of a seven-chair barber shop in the large and airy basement. Hitherto these floors have been going absolutely to waste, although there are separate entrances on the street to both the upstairs portion of the building and to the basement. Pomeroy will be the general manager of the four features in the building and he will continue to have direct charge over the theater. One of the new fixtures in the building will be a large soda fountain. Considerable money is to be spent in improving the facilities for the new purposes.

During the week of July 16 Manager Pomeroy had two particularly fine lobby displays. One advertised the Fox feature, "Daredevil Kate," and the second attracted the crowds to "The Bottle," an English production starring Albert Chevalier. The lobby was done up in Western style for the Fox picture, the main set in the mezzanine window showing a ranch with various cutouts. There was tan bark on the lobby floor and the ticket booth became a log cabin. The ticket taker wore a cowboy outfit for the occasion. Broncho harness was hung around the walls. For "The Bottle," live models portrayed the misery in a drunkard's home in the window set while live snakes and bottles graced the lobby proper.

Mr. Pomeroy was formerly associated with the Belmont and Wychwood theatres, Toronto, and the Keith and Elmwood theaters in Buffalo. His personal aggressiveness is doing quite a bit to advertise the Photodrome here. He has gone into all quarters in search of proper properties for his lobby effects. Most everybody in town knew, for instance, that he wanted live snakes as he made inquiries for them in every place where one might expect to find them. Naturally, everybody wanted to know what he would do with them. Even the small boy was out looking in the tall grass for a couple of serpents for Pomeroy.

Sudden Death of R. C. Newman.

Toronto, Ont.—At Piqua, Ohio, after he had addressed the annual meeting of the Theatrical Mechanics' Association, of which body he had been secretary for many years, Robert C. Newman of Toronto, Provincial Inspector of Moving Picture Theaters, was stricken with apoplexy. He passed away on July 9.

The Exchange Managers' Association of Toronto immediately sent a large wreath of flowers and prominent men in theater circles sent many floral remembrances. The moving picture industry was also well represented at the funeral.

Though big in appearance and brusque in his manner, the late Mr. Newman was really kind-hearted and considerate. He was popularly known as "The Lion," but he was anything but that when anyone really deserved attention. He had been the Provincial Inspector for three years, during which time he brought the new department of the government to a perfected state. For seventeen years before his appointment he had been stage manager of Shea's theater, Toronto.

Two sons are serving with the Canadian Expeditionary Force in France and a third lives in Michigan. The widow and two daughters live at 230 Pearson avenue, Toronto.

Allen Theater to Be in Charge of Ben Cronk.

Toronto, Ont.—Ben Cronk, formerly manager of the Allen theater in Calgary, will be the manager of the new Allen theater in Toronto. The latter house is rapidly nearing completion and will probably be opened about September 1. Mr. Cronk has been with the Allen brothers for many years, having been associated with them when they started primitive store shows in Brantford a decade ago.

The information has also been secured that Mr. Romanelli, the eminent leader of the Strand theater orchestra, has been secured to organize the large orchestra for the Allen theater.

Reopening of the Moss Park Promised.

Toronto, Ont.—The Moss Park theater, Queen and Sherbourne streets, Toronto, is to be reopened, according to a large sign which has been decorating the house for several weeks. This theater, which has a seating capacity of 600 and is a model for its size, has been dark for several years.

Worth a Passing Glance.

Toronto, Ont.—Wally Davidson, local Pathe manager, has secured the exclusive right to take moving pictures in Camp Borden, Ontario. This privilege is worth while, as this camp is now the center of aviation in Canada and many celebrated flymen are located there.

Toronto, Ont.—The only airdome in Toronto this summer is at Scarboro Beach, the east end amusement park. Comedies are offered as one of the special free attractions. The Canadian Universal has secured the contract for this service for the season and Alice Howell is being featured in various ways by both the Universal interests and the Toronto Railway Company, which controls the park.

Toronto, Ont.—"The Whip" returned to the Grand opera house, Toronto, on July 12 for an indefinite engagement. This attraction, which is controlled by Super Features, Limited, Toronto, made good on its first showing at this house six weeks ago, and has been brought back for a probable long stay.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

Toronto Operators Win Wages Demand

Local 173 Asks Minimum Wages of $18 a Week for Night Shows Only and $25 for Eight-Hour Day—Some Exhibitors Favor Paying More Money.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard Street East, Toronto.

TORONTO, ONT.—The people of Toronto have been concerned greatly with strikes. A street railway strike, the second in fifteen years, was declared on Wednesday, July 11, and the patronage at various theaters was more or less affected. Coupled with this move was an ultimatum from the Moving Picture Operators' Union, Local 173, to the exhibitors of Toronto demanding a substantial increase in wages. A time limit was given in the notification before which the exhibitors, individually and collectively, would have to come to a decision in the matter.

The projection machine operators have been drawing from $15 to $27.50 per week, but they have asked for a minimum of $18 per week for night shows only and a minimum of $25 per week for an eight-hour day. Many of those who work an eight-hour day have been receiving far less than $25 per week, while the majority of the suburban houses have been paying only $15 per week for night shows and Saturday matinee.

Some of the downtown exhibitors are inclined to favor the payment of more money to the operators, as a great deal depends upon the operator in the matter of projection. They say that a good picture can be spoiled by carelessness in the "box."

Operators Get New Wage Scale.

Toronto.—It is reported from official sources that the wages discussion between the exhibitors and the projection machine operators of Local 173 was quickly smoothed over, various managers conceding the right of the booth men to a raise in salary. Announcement has been made that the scale for night men only will be $15 to $18 per week and $20 to $25 per week for those who work an eight-hour day. Some of the operators were already making the new maximum—several in fact draw more than $25 per week. The new scale probably makes the greatest difference with the operators in small theaters.

Two New Theaters Coming.

Toronto.—The building of new moving picture theaters goes on apace in Ontario. This week the details of two more new houses have been received by your correspondent. One new theater on Wellington street, Stratford, will cost $60,000 when completed. This is being built by W. I. Kemp, now of the Classic theater, Stratford. The size of this house will be 110 foot frontage by a depth of 132 feet.

Michael Maker of Napanee, Ontario, is also converting a store building into a moving picture theater. The architect and contractor in this case is G. W. A. Cliff.

Swindler Claiming to Be Mutual Official.

Toronto.—Reports have reached the Toronto office of the Mutual that a young man representing himself as a Mutual manager has been signing up young women for picture work. He has made his bid in the smaller towns of Ontario and one of his "gags" is that he has been sent to find a suitable location for a Mutual studio in Ontario. He has been charging his young female victims $25 per chance.

The Mutual people say that they have no intention of opening a Canadian studio. Exhibitors are asked to keep an eye open for the suave stranger. The police everywhere have also been notified.

Heard Here and There in Toronto.

Toronto.—The Holman theater, Montreal, was turned over to the Khaki League of Montreal one morning recently for a special show for returned soldiers and sailors, the feature of which was the Universal special, "With Pershing in France." The Montreal office of the Universal provided the whole program free.

Toronto.—The week of July 16 was celebrated as a "Chaplin Review Week" by the Strand theater, Toronto. In addition to the three regular features during the week, Manager Clarence Robson used three of the recent Chaplins, "The Immigrant," "The Cure" and "Easy Street." Manager Robson is adhering to his polisy of changing his program three times each week during the summer months.

Toronto.—By July 14, James Sullivan of the King George theater, St. Catharines, Ontario, had shown his sixteenth straight Fox comedy. Then came a break and only because the supply ran out. Sullivan has been making a specialty of Fox features and comedies at his new theater.

In the Dominion Day parade in St. Catharines, Sullivan had an elaborate float bearing live models to advertise the current Fox release at the King George.

Toronto.—Manager C. A. Garner of the Mutual Toronto branch has made plans for a transcontinental inspection trip in the Dominion, starting in August. He will be on the road for six weeks, during which time he will investigate conditions in all the larger centers of Canada.

Toronto.—Superfeatures, Limited, Toronto, over which Charles Stevens holds a directing hand, has secured the Canadian rights to the special attraction, "Within the Law." This feature will be placed on the road in the fall.

Greater Vitagraph may also make a road show out of its latest big picture, "On Trial." Present indications are that it will be sent over the Ontario circuits early next fall.

Toronto.—Clara Kimball Young in "The Rise of Susan" and the Universal special, "With Pershing in France," brought near-record business to the Regent theater during the week ending July 14. Manager Roberts announced that, despite rain, heat and a street car strike, the week's returns were among the heaviest since the opening of the house last September.

Three Ontario Theaters to Be Improved.

Toronto, Ont.—Manager Fagan of the Eclipse theater, 387 Parliament street, Toronto, has taken out a permit for the reconstruction of his house. The construction of a gallery has been started and various other improvements will be made. The new gallery will provide 550 more seats, making the capacity of the theater well over the 1,200 mark.

Ottawa, Ont.—The Dominion theater, Ottawa, one of the largest houses in the city, has also been closed to permit general interior alterations. It will be several weeks before the renovated theater is reopened.

Hamilton, Ont.—Guest and Farewell, Hamilton, have called for tenders for the reconstruction of the Strand theater, 755 King street East, Hamilton. This has been one of the brightest little theaters in Ontario, but $15,000 is to be spent in improving both the interior and exterior this summer.

Toronto, Ont.—The new company operating the Strand theater, Toronto, has been named the Strand Theater, Limited, and it has been incorporated with a capital of $75,000.

What Is Proper Price for Special Films?

By M. A. Malaney, 218 Columbia Bldg., Cleveland, O.

DAYTON, OHIO.—Albert F. Kinzeler, secretary of the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League of Dayton, has just completed another tour of the principal cities of Ohio and has gained much information about the theater conditions.

A. F. Kinzeler.

"I am of the opinion that pictures which play to top prices of $1 and $1.50 are not a success in Ohio," he said. "I have found that the popular price for real good pictures is 25 cents. But one big picture went over successfully in most Ohio cities, and that was 'The Birth of a Nation.'

"I also say it is bad business for big producers to discriminate as to where their pictures shall play. Many of the so-called super-pictures were played in opera houses or their equivalent only, and thus the first-class photoplay houses did not get a chance to play them."

Cleveland, O.—Sam Barck, owner of the Market Square theater, has bought the Colonial Garden. Sam is not afraid to say he bought a lemon. He claims that his eyes were open when he made the purchase and that he expects to squeeze juice out of it soon.

Cleveland, O.—Miles E. Gibbons, formerly manager for K-E-S-E in Pittsburgh, has been transferred to the Cleveland office. This does not otherwise affect the roster of the Cleveland office.

Yes, It's a Gift Truly.

Cleveland, O.—Frank Greenwald of the Exclusive Features company, Cleveland, recently made a record of calling on the exhibitors of nine towns in a day.

Last week at the Cleveland Screen club's outing he made another record. Frank played centerfield, leftfield and rightfield for the exchange men's club in the annual baseball game the last two innings, and while playing in the right garden he caught a long fly hit to leftfield on the run.

"It's a gift, boys," says Frank.

Joseph Williams Edits Film Department.

Cleveland, O.—The Cleveland News has established a live photoplay department under the supervision of Joseph Williams, formerly Cleveland manager for Fox and a well-known newspaper man.

Cincinnati News Letter

(From Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank, Cincinati.)

I. W. McMahan Loses Little Son.

CINCINNATI, O.—The tragic death at Toronto of little Rupert McMahan, the baby son of I. W. McMahan, of McMahan & Jackson, not only prostrated the family, but cast gloom over scores of film men and exhibitors who are numbered among the friends of Mr. McMahan and feel something of his grief. The family had gone to Toronto to visit relatives, and it was while there that the baby suffered the accident which caused his death by scalding. The family returned to Cincinanti with the body, and the funeral was conducted at the home on July 17. The sad occurrence brought healt-felt condolences from many sources to Mr. McMahan and his family, especially from those who had seen the bright and promising youngster thus cut off.

Cool Weather Gives Patrons to Downtown House.

Cincinnati, O.—The Vitagraph-Blue Ribbon series at the Lyric theater interposed with productions of other companies, is proving the hit of the summer season, according to the management. "Her Secret" is the latest of the series to be offered, followed by a Pathe picture featuring Gladys Hulette, entitled "The Cigarette Girl." The prolonged cool weather has helped the downtown houses, including the Lyric, very materially, as it has hampered the operations of the suburban airdomes and has also rendered other outdoor counter-attractions impossible, thus proving that it is an ill wind that blows nobody good.

Wallace Draggett Buys Orpheum at Youngstown.

Youngstown, O.—The ownership of the Orpheum theater has changed hands, P. G. Atsalas, its proprietor for seven years, has disposed of his interest to Wallace Draggett, of New Castle, Pa. Mr. Atsalas is taking a well-earned vacation in Chicago and New York, pending which announcement of his definite plans is held up. He has stated, however, that he intends to remain in the moving-picture business, probably in Youngstown, which may mean the construction of a new theater.

Adding 200 Seats to Springfield's Majestic.

Springfield, O.—The Chakeres Amusement Co., by recent acquisition taking rank as one of the most ambitious concerns in this section, is preparing to spend a considerable sum in remodeling the Majestic theater, and in the addition of 200 more seats. The house will also be completely redecorated, while the entrance will be enlarged and remodeled to accord with the rest of the house. As soon as the directors of the company have formally approved the plans bids will be called for and the work will proceed. The company has operated the house for four years.

E. L. Crary Now Manager at Famous Players.

Cincinnati, O.—E. L. Crary is now running things at the Famous Players' exchange, being promoted from a staff position to succeed W. C. Bachmeyer. Mr. Bachmeyer, it is understood, will take charge of the Metro office about August 1, when arrangements will have been completed for its opening.

Cincinnati Notes of Interest.

Youngstown, O.—The Hippodrome management has had a fine week with "The Vivar of Wakefield," which was booked as the result of many requests from patrons, as well as recommendations from civic organizations, and its success proved all that could be desired.

Youngstown, O.—The personal appearance of Rose Tapley at the Strand theater marked a new policy at that house, following the closing of a contract whereby the Strand will have the first run in Youngstown of Fox and Vitagraph films. The first Fox feature shown at the Strand under the new management was "Broadway Sports." featuring Stuart Holmes.

Van Wert, O.—The latest in moving pictures in Van Wert is a traveling show in charge of a gentleman who admits that he is a Roumanian nobleman, Baron de Orgler, by name, and that he is a former officer in the Austrian army. He is showing war pictures taken, he says, at first hand, with a moving lecture to go with them. The Baron declares that he wants to arouse interest in the war so as to help recruiting and thus aid in bringing the conflict to an end that much sooner.

The Colonial is taking no dust from any house in town on account of the drawing power of its attractions. A pair of recent instances were the ever popular Clara Kimball Young in "The Easiest Way," one of her biggest hits, and Marjorie Rambeau in "The Dazzling Miss Davidson."

Sunday Closing Again Stirs Kentucky

Owensboro Exhibitor Fined $40 for Open Show—Another Fight Started to Determine Whether State Blue Laws Still Stand.

By Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, KY. — Sunday closing trouble has broken out again, this time at Owensboro, Ky., where Arthur C. Hedderich, manager of the Queen theater, was arrested last week as a result of operating on Sunday, and haled before Police Judge Haskins. The latter fined Mr. Hedderich $40 for breaking the Sunday law, which is merely one of the old blue laws upheld in a few of the small towns of the state. Mr. Hedderich's attorneys contended that the theater was a "necessity," and that there had been no violation of the law, which permits street and steam railroads, steamboats, ferries and household work to go on during Sunday.

Mr. Hedderich has announced that he will appeal the case to the circuit court, and if the lower court is affirmed he will carry it to the Court of Appeals. He stated that he would open his theater every Sunday regardless of fines, and was notified that he would be arrested and summoned to appear each Monday following.

In opening the theater for Sunday shows Mr. Hedderich endeavored to operate so as not to conflict with the churches, and only opened from 1 o'clock until 7 o'clock in the evening. As soon as he announced his intention of operating a [illegible] of the [illegible] on Mayor Hickman and protested. The latter stated that personally he would see no objection to the movement, especially as it did not conflict with the church, and pointed out that such cities as Louisville, Lexington, Henderson, Paris, Winchester and Mt. Sterling were operating, but that if the people of Owensboro objected to the theater operating on Sunday he would endeavor to carry out their wishes. A large audience was present at the afternoon shows, and it appeared as though a fair percentage of the public was in favor of the diversion. However, Mayor Hickman and [illegible] Chief Bell, desiring to have the [illegible] pass on the matter, had a warrent taken out.

Several other cities in Kentucky are closed on Sunday, most of them being smaller towns. At Paducah, Ky., several theaters remain dark, while at Frankfort an argument has been going on for some time. At Lexington, Ky., Mayor Rogers was so strongly in favor of open Sunday at the picture theaters that the movement to close them on Sunday was dropped by the ministers' organization.

However, it is a question as to whether the blue law will or will not stand. At Louisville the tire and auto supply houses have all been closed within the past month under the blue laws, although none of the cases have been taken to the higher courts as the suits are of a friendly nature and the supply houses are really anxious to remain closed on the Sabbath.

Cost of Heating Theaters Goes Up.

Louisville, Ky.—The advance shot in the high cost of coal problem was fired last week when the Louisville Gas & Electric Co. announced that all of its steam customers in the downtown district would pay an increase of 33 1-3 per cent. for steam heat during the 1917-18 season. During the past three years the company has sold service during the heating season of seven or eight months at the rate of 33 1-3 cents per square foot of floor space to be heated, this rate being subject to a ten per cent. cash discount. The rate for the coming season will be 44.44 cents a square foot, subject to the same discount. Several of the local heaters have been buying their steam from this company, and will have to absorb the increased cost of heating. As three or four feet of floor space are required to each seat, and there is a good deal of open space for aisles, etc., the increase per seat for heating amounts to something.

Adds Musical Comedy to Film Shows.

Louisville, Ky.—The Casino and Orpheum theaters, operated by Judge Allen Kinney, are now running musical comedy shows along with pictures, changing the program twice each week, and charging ten cents for admission. Fox, Vitagraph, Metro, Paramount and other leading second run features are shown. The Star theater, which is controlled by Judge Kinney and L. J. Dittmar, is back to five cents for the summer, and is running pictures and vaudeville.

Patriotic and Civic Work of Local Film Men.

Louisville, Ky.—Local exhibitors are interesting themselves at present in securing free shows for local institutions. L. J. Dittmar is at the head of a movement whereby a Friday night show is being given once a week at the Neighborhood House, for the benefit of the poor children. The Owl and S. & P. Film supply houses have donated the machines while the Central Film Co. donated the reels and Johnson Musselman put on the show.

For the benefit of the First Kentucky Regiment several of the picture men have gotten together and donated shows. Last week Joe Steurle of the Walnut Street theater arranged a special show at the State Fair grounds, where the soldiers are camped; and later Col. Fred Levy, of the Big Features Rights Corporation, assisted by Lee Goldberg of the Strand and Mr. Carroll of the S. & P. supply house, put on a show for the soldiers.

Here and There Across Kentucky.

Louisville, Ky.—The Crescent airdome, operated by the Hilltop theater, is open for the summer and has been doing a nice business in spite of chautauquas in the neighborhood.

Louisville, Ky.—Dr. C. W. Barnes, manager of the Knickerbocker theater, has returned from a month's vacation spent on his farm in Missouri.

Louisville, Ky.—The Gayety will open this fall in the International Circuit with William Woolfolk in charge of the house. Last year the theater had a rough and stormy passage, but managed to stay open most of the season, although in the hands of a receiver for a time.

Louisville, Ky.—The Majestic Amusement Co. has been running the series of "Official British War Pictures" during the early part of each week, and has made special arrangements for the boys of the First Kentucky Regiment to see these pictures by companies.

Louisville, Ky.—N. A. Wilkerson, a pioneer exhibitor, and J. R. Miller have taken over the Paramount theater, which will be named "The Liberty," and reopened after being repapered, painted and other changes made. New electrical equipment, fans and machines will be installed.

Maysville, Ky.—The managers of the Washington, Gem and Pastime theaters recently closed their theaters for one week in order to give the Red Cross-Elks' Carnival a clear field. The theaters took advantage of the opportunity to inaugurate a general clean up.

The elevator discharges into the office; back of this is a projection room 20 by chairs for the accommodation of visitors —and many exhibitors are expected. They will be especially welcomed. There will be special telephone facilities for the visiting exhibitors' use exclusively. There is a 25-foot throw for the pictures, the full length of the room, the machine being in another room.

A 2,000-reel film vault has been built. The shipping clerk has a long-distance telephone at his desk. Pictures, posters, and all material on each subject are stored in one place, the unit system. An electric freight elevator discharges into the alley behind. The shipping office has the light from the rear windows; the office is on the front, with windows onto Walnut street.

Fight in Arkansas for Sunday Show Freedom

Old Blue Law Holds Tight—Demand of Many Soldiers in Training Here for Sunday Afternoon Shows—Get Sermons Now, Will Get Films Soon.

By Kent Watson, Times-Herald, Dallas, Texas.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.—Arkansas is about to rise up and cast off the yoke. The entire state seems now in the throes of a rebellion against "blue laws," and Arkansas citizens are pining for Sunday picture shows. From one end of the state to the other the leading newspapers are growing belligerent toward closed places of amusement on Sunday, and from present indications the war of editorial comment is to carry more weight than did General Chang Hsun's rebellion toward the restoration of the Manchu dynasty in China. Arkansas democrats probably will win out in their farsighted contentions, as did Tuan Chi Jui's Chinese republican troops.

In holding that the operating of moving picture shows on Sunday is necessary from a moral viewpoint while the soldiers are encamped near Little Rock and Argenta, Judge James Gerlach of Argenta took a stand recently for the best interests of the community.

Soldiers Need Sunday Pictures.

The soldiers who are here now and those who will be training at the cantonment are subject to strenuous schedules, much harder than those which most business men experience through the day's work. The only time they have for recreation, the soldiers contend, is on Saturday and Sunday, the latter day being allowed them in which to spend away from the camp.

The soldiers further contend that while they always go to church on Sunday morning, they should have some kind of recreation and amusement of a wholesome nature during Sunday afternoons. Otherwise they might be tempted to provide their own amusement of a sort that may not be for the best interest of the soldiers and the community.

Another consideration is that it is necessary for them to have some kind of Sunday recreation as a matter of efficiency. Anyone who has ever seen a human being knows the degrading effects of idleness even on the highest type of men. High army officials, among them General Leonard Wood, have stressed the need for Sunday amusement for the soldiers.

"The right kind of amusement and recreation on Sunday is not opposed to proper Sabbath observance, because it serves to re-create the mind and spirit to the place which they had reached before the previous week's hard grind of work had worn them down.

"Granted that recreation and amusement of some kind must be provided for the soldiers on Sunday, the next question is, what kind of recreation and amusement shall it be?

"The Arkansas Democrat believes that properly regulated moving pictures furnish the right kind of amusement. There is practically no noise connected with their operation, not nearly so much as there is at vocal concerts, which have often been given on Sunday in Little Rock and Argenta without opposition from the very persons who are now opposing Sunday movies.

"Those who are opposing Sunday movies have not suggested any form of Sunday amusement or recreation for the soldiers to take the place of the movies. The only thing they thus far have suggested for soldiers on Sunday is sermons.

"Sermons Are Needed, but Sermons Do Not Furnish Amusement!"

"Some of the men who are opposing Sunday movies for the soldiers are old and bald-headed. Their years of service in the church entitle them to all the more respect, but in considering the situation which the community now faces, they should hie themselves back to the day when they, too, were young and active.

"It is not a fossilized crowd of men in the army. The men in the various camps represent nature in its strongest development. The unusual emergency must be met, both from a patriotic and a community viewpoint, as a human situation that pulsates with a vitality that must be reckoned with."

The activity of the soldiers and the broad-minded editors and officers of the law presages the early opening of picture theaters in Arkansas on Sunday. It seems that the barrier of freedom is to be beaten down and here's hoping that the newspaper men and judges, like Judge Gerlach and the Arkansas Democrat, will unceasingly wage their war unto a successful end.

THE FILM TRADE IN ARIZONA.

By the Phoenix Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

PHOENIX, ARIZ.—The motion picture business throughout Arizona is on the wane, due to the excessive heat and so much war talk.

The Majestic theater on Washington street, Phoenix, closed its doors, has been remodeled and is now serving drinks instead of showing moving pictures. The Lamara theater, the best on Washington street, is doing a fine business with Fox, Paramount and Artcraft pictures, and Harry Nace, the manager, is wearing a smile every day, for he claims the hot weather is not hurting his business in the least.

The Columbia theater, owned by George Mauk and managed by Edw. J. Cooper, is enjoying a phenomenal business, on account of the place being so cool. This is the largest and most comfortable theater in Phoenix. It is located a little out of the way, but nevertheless, through good management, business constantly improves. Mr. Mauk has been ill in the hospital, but is out again and has resumed his business duties.

On Mr. Mauk's circuit of houses business has dropped off a little, due to the heat and strike situation. Mr. Mauk owns the exclusive right for all amusements in Florence, Ray, Hayden, Sonora, San Pedro and Winkleman, Arizona, and in each of these towns his theater is one to be proud of.

The Hip theater, the Plaza and the Amuzu theater of Phoenix cater mostly to the Mexican trade and are enjoying a fair business, especially when they get hold of a Chaplin picture.

This week the Columbia theater is showing "The Star Spangled Banner" and Pershing arriving in France, which has created no end of excitement, as everybody in Phoenix is more or less patriotic

War Camps Boost San Francisco Business

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—The presence of a large number of troops at the Presidio and the expenditure of huge sums of money in the erection of cantonments and the purchase of military supplies is commencing to have a marked effect upon local theater attendance, and some houses are reporting the best business ever enjoyed at this season of the year. Thousands of troops are in training in this city and the Presidio is being placed in shape for the reception of thousands of others, insuring much activity from this source for a long time to come. Palo Alto, a suburb of this city, has been selected as a site for a National Guard camp and preparations are being made to rush work on a camp to house more than thirty thousand men. The military activities of the Pacific coast are being centered here and purveyors of amusement are already benefiting to a marked degree by the expenditures being made.

While much patronage is being enjoyed by exhibitors from the troops themselves, even greater benefits are being derived in an indirect way. Most of the soldiers are from outside points and friends and relatives are commencing to pour in to visit them and see their mode of life. The extremely hot weather experienced in other parts of the state is also causing thousands of visitors to come to this city and where business was rather quiet a month ago it is now very active. Exhibitors in the interior are not faring so well, however, and many of those coming to town to arrange for service state that their receipts are smaller than usual, in spite of the general prosperity.

Return from Long Trip.

San Francisco, Cal.—Irving C. Ackerman and Sam Harris of the team of Ackerman and Harris returned from a lengthy trip through the Northwest. This was made primarily for the purpose of being present at the opening of the latest addition to their circuit, the People's Hippodrome at Butte, Mont. which was formally opened on July 4. This house, which is the fourteenth in the circuit, will be conducted along the same lines as the other Hippodrome theaters controlled by the firm, with vaudeville and feature pictures. Mr. Harris states that the local theater is now doing the biggest business in its history and is attracting much transient trade. Many of the soldiers stationed here are from the Northwest, and, being familiar with the Hippodrome service there, are attracted to the local house. While away Messrs. Ackerman and Harris visited a number of the houses on their circuit, but could not devote time to inspect them all.

Louis Reichert in Readiness for Trip.

San Francisco, Cal.—Louis Reichert manager of the local Metro branch, was at this writing ready to depart on short notice for New York to attend the meeting of branch managers to be held late in July. Friends in the trade are evidently endeavoring to induce him to become a devotee of Lady Nicotine, for while he does not smoke, he has been made the recipient of no less than seven boxes of cigars since the trip was announced. An Emily Stevens perfecto might cause him to sit up and take notice.

Goldwyn Representative Expected Soon.

San Francisco, Cal.—The offices of the Goldwyn Pictures in the Easton building are rapidly assuming shape and will be in readiness for exhibitors by the time the first pictures are received. When asked how long he would stay, he replied that he did not know, only it would not be as long as he wished. He found the cool weather of this city a pleasant relief to the heat of the South, where he has been for the past six weeks.

Strand Gets New Organist.

San Francisco, Cal.—Edwin M. Bent, for eight months organist at the Cline theater, Santa Rosa, Cal., has harkened to the call of the city and is now presiding at the fine new organ of the Strand theater. Manager Sid Grauman of this house states that business is steadily improving. Mary Miles Minter, in "Periwinkle," a production made along the beach near this city, was a successful drawing card recently.

World Correspondent Takes a Vacation.

San Francisco, Cal.—Abraham Nelson, whose breezy notes from Portland keep Oregon on the map in the Moving Picture World, spent a few days in this city in July and visited the work den of yours truly. While here he did a few little odd jobs, such as placing an order for a big musical instrument for a Portland exhibitor and investigating local methods of house management and advertising.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Progressive Motion Picture Company has booked Paramount service at the Imperial theater and the new California theater to be opened in the fall. The Turner & Dahnken circuit has secured the services for all of its houses, with the exception of the Tivoli.

San Francisco, Cal.—A company of actors and actresses from the Fox studio at Hollywood were here recently and later left for Portland and the Northwest for a brief stay. The party included George Walsh, the "sunshine boy"; Seena Owen, who won fame under D. W. Griffith; director Paul Powell, who also served at one time under Griffith; Fred Burns, cowboy and actor; Fred Graham, assistant director; K. D. Armstrong, business manager; Jack Sealock, property man, and Ray Lincoln, assistant property man and Walsh's physical trainer. Pictures were made on board the steamer coming up the coast for "The Yankee Way," in which Miss Owen and Mr. Walsh will appear together for the first time.

The studio had not been used for several weeks and before being taken over by this concern was occupied at various times by the Artcraft, the Superba and the Italia Film companies.

Paramount-Art Craft Enters Portland, Ore.

Big Feature Concern Closes Deal for Largest Exchange Space in Rose City—C. M. Mill of San Francisco to Have Charge—First Runs Divided.

By Abraham Nelson, Majestic Theater Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—On July 23, the Progressive Motion Picture Company closed a deal with A. King Wilson, whereby a large portion of the exchange building erected several years ago by Mr. Wilson will be occupied by the Progressive company, distributing Paramount and Artcraft releases in this territory.

The space leased is approximately 7,000 square feet in size, with a hundred foot or more frontage on Ninth street, and including the corner of Ninth and Burnside, formerly occupied by the Reliable Film Service and the Empire Film Service. The lease on the corner store was heretofore held by Metro, which sublet to the Reliable and Empire people upon moving to Seattle some time ago. The store was recently vacated when the Reliable and Empire services moved three doors south into part of the room formerly occupied by the General Film. The space leased by Progressive includes the present Reliable and Empire store, the store occupied by the Standard Feature Film, and the old Metro corner.

The new office will be in charge of C. M. Hill, who has been assistant to Herman Wobber in San Francisco. Mr. Wobber, district manager, came from San Francisco, and H. G. Rosenbaum came from Seattle to negotiate the deal. C. J. Kerr, branch manager for Metro in Seattle, looked after Metro's end of the transaction.

Inasmuch as there are considerable alterations to be made the opening date for the new exchange has not been announced. The tenants now occupying the space leased have not had time to announce their plans, but it is anticipated that they will remain in some part of the same building, as there is some vacant space there to be had.

First Runs Are Divided.

Since the affiliation of Artcraft with Paramount, it might be of interest to know the way their pictures have been distributed between the two large Portland first run exhibitors who formerly had separate contracts with each company. Among those the People's Amusement Company gets are the Fairbanks, Pickford, Eltinge, Petrova, Vivian Martin, Anne Pennington, and Lina Cavalira, and Cecil B. DeMille, and D. W. Griffith productions; among the big ones allotted to Jensen and Von Herberg, operating the Columbia and Liberty theaters, are William S. Hart, Margarite Clark, Fatty Arbuckle, George M. Cohan, Wallace Reid and others.

Portland Censor Board Resigns.

Portland, Ore.—The censor board that has for the past two years been the boil on the neck of the Portland moving picture industry has resigned. With the accession to office of Mayor George L. Baker the censor board stepped out. Portland's famous no-appeal censorship ordinance is still on the statute books, however, but it is anticipated that a more reasonable law will take its place as soon as the new city administration gets the city matters well in hand.

At the time of this writing viewers are still inspecting pictures before exhibition, but there is no board to pass finally on their propriety. Owing to the co-operation of the film men with the administration, the decisions of the viewers are being accepted, there have been no condemnations, and everything is running along smoothly, says Mrs. Colwell, the censor secretary.

Liberty Theater Opens July 17.

Portland, Ore.—Upon the completion of extensive alterations, which will be described in detail with the report of the opening of the theater, Jensen and Von Herberg's new Liberty will open July 17 with "The Flame of the Yukon."

J. G. Von Herberg and C. S. Jensen were here a few days prior to the opening. Mr. Jensen later going to Butte, Mont. While in Portland Mr. Jensen served as a bathing suit censor at the instance of the delegation of newspaper men who are officially in that capacity. The bathing suits were duly approved by the "censor board."

Strike Hurts Picture Business.

Butte, Mont.—A strike in the copper mines in this vicinity, now over six weeks duration and effecting over 12,000 men, has demoralized the picture business here.

Henry Harcke Manages the Ideal.

Portland, Ore.—The Ideal theater, operated by the Ideal Amusement Company, is now in charge of Henry Harcke, George Maple, who conducted the house for the past year, has resigned. He has not disclosed his future plans, although it is intimated that he has had a more lucrative offer from the people controlling the Ideal Amusement Company to work for them in a different capacity.

Mr. Harcke was formerly manager of the Crystal for the People's Amusement Company. He is an accomplished musician, and makes the musical program a feature of his shows.

Rialto Opening Delayed.

Medford, Ore.—The Rialto, Percy-Moran Company's new theater, which was scheduled to open July 25, will not be completed until August 5, when the grand opening will be held. The new seats for the big show house were unloaded at Chico, Cal., by mistake, causing the delay.

Strand Goes to 15 Cents.

Portland, Ore.—It meant joy in the hearts of Portland's suburban exhibitors when the Strand theater increased its evening admission price to 15 cents. It had been a dime, the same as charged in Portland's suburbs. The Strand's enormous seating capacity and combined shows of photoplays and vaudeville at this cheap price has been a mighty competing factor in Portland's amusement realm. The Strand, with "photoville" at a dime, was one of the successful ideas of S. Morton Cohen.

The expense involved in opening the new Washington street entrance, and the closing of the side street entrances, together with the general increased cost of operation, is the reason for the raise.

New Organ for the People's.

Portland, Ore.—The People's Amusement Company has purchased a new Model 50 De Luxe photoplayer from the American Photoplayer Company, of San Francisco, to add to the musical equipment of the People's theater. The organ is being constructed at the company's Berkeley factory under special specifications in order that the instrument may be particularly adapted to the house. All the attachments and latest innovations in the De Luxe type of Model 50 are included in the new People's organ. The installation will commence about August 1.

Theaters Opening and Closing.

Astoria, Ore.—D. H. Welch opened the Columbia theater July 19.

Mill City, Ore.—Too much prosperity is the cause of the showhouse here shutting down several nights a week. To fill orders the saw mills are working a twelve hour shift, keeping the men on until 8 o'clock at night, which puts a crimp in the show business.

Gresham, Ore.—After Claude Smith had sold his theater here on a payment down, the new owner tore the equipment out of the building and abandoned the show.

McMinnville, Ore.—E. B. Schultz has sold the Rainbow theater to Maude Munson.

Long Beach, Wash.—C. B. Strauhal has opened the Row theater.

Portland, Ore.—The Peninsula and Elite theaters have closed for the summer.

Newport, Ore.—L. Pefferle has opened the Natatorium theater here. He formerly conducted the Baker theater at Baker, Ore.

Supply Business Good.

Portland, Ore.—Pete Sabo, of the Portland Moving Picture Machine and Supply Company, reports several new installations of equipment. Two new machines at the Sunset, Portland; also one each to L. S. McConnell, Star theater, Sherwood, Ore., and Kiggins & McGill, U. S. A. Amusement Company, Vancouver, Wash., were part of a week's business.

The Vancouver people are reopening the Palace theater, formerly owned by Chris Engleman, but which Kiggins & McGill purchased some time ago. This makes three houses operated by the firm in Vancouver.

City Theaters Helped by the Farmer's Auto

Manager Clemmer of Spokane in a Pleased Mood Remarks That "the Automobile Taketh Away and the Automobile Giveth"—Good Business Generally.

By S. Clark Patchin, E 1811 11th Avenue, Spokane, Wash.

SPOKANE, WASH.—Dr. Howard S. Clemmer, manager of the Clemmer theater, announces that the automobile is an equalizing factor in the question of summer Sunday business in this city. He outlined his reasons practically as follows:

The automobile taketh away and the automobile giveth; or, in other words, the charm of the open calls the city man from the town and city shows on Sunday, and the charm of the city and the picture show calls the country people to the city. The farmers and their families flock to the moving picture shows on that day, which sort of balances up affairs and of which the moving picture managers fully approve. The country exhibitor gets the week-day business of the farmers, but the high prices of wheat and the buying of automobiles, as a result, have brought the city closer to the country again. Mr. and Mrs. Farmer and all of the little farmers and farmerettes come to town to enjoy everything from restaurant meals to the latest thrills of the moving picture theaters.

After all, what people need most in life is variety. In modern times they are getting it, and the horrors of farm housekeeping are lightened to the woman who knows that after working in dishwater during the week, milking the cows and goats, and feeding the pigs, she will be enjoying a comfortable box seat in the city's leading moving picture house. She will be listening to the soothing sound of the echo organ with an electric fan cooling her forehead, and will be seeing films of the American heiresses and foreign villains.

Spokane Film Brevities.

The O. Henry stories which are running at the Clemmer in Spokane in film form are proving a popular attraction and sometimes lead the advertised headliners as box office attractions, some persons going only to see them and leaving when their time is taxed.

Mrs. R. L. Burr, of Los Angeles, and a sister of Mrs. J. L. Campbell, of Spokane, was a visitor in the city during the week

"The Flame of the Yukon" was being shown at the Liberty. She appeared in the picture with Miss Dorothy Dalton, and this was her last picture to appear in previous to taking her vacation.

J. H. Baum of Portland, Oregon, special representative of the Universal Film & Supply Company, spent the week in Spokane and is covering this territory with "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," which was shown at the Casino theater.

Prairie State News Letter

By Frank H. Madison.

A. H. Blank Leases Site for Theater in Omaha.

OMAHA, NEB.—The Mid-West Photoplay Corporation has filed a 99-year lease on a site at Fifteenth and Douglas streets from the Byers Building and Farm Corporation. Seattle Theaters Fight Hot Weather Slump

Exhibitors Use Brains and Win Out in Effort to Attract Patrons in From Sultry Streets—Patriotic Pictures to the Fore.

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

SEATTLE, WASH.—Many different ways of winning people to the photoplay houses are being tried out these first days of real summer weather in Seattle.

The Coliseum is making a specialty of advertising the fact that its air is cooled by a $25,000 filtering process, and the advertising manager, J. O. Hovick, has invented a combination of three words which he places in the corner of every Coliseum advertisement. They are: "Coliseum for Coolness." In addition to this advertisement Manager E. D. Tate is selecting the best drawing cards he can get, and the big business done with the latest Norma Talmadge release, "Poppy," and the record breaking engagement of Douglas Fairbanks in "Wild and Woolly" fully justifies him.

At the Liberty, where a special effort is made to lighten the atmosphere with comedy, there are sometimes two comedies introduced on the same bill besides the feature. The Liberty also has a very satisfactory air cooling arrangement, and the business is not suffering noticeably from the warm weather.

James Q. Clemmer, of the Clemmer theater, is sticking pretty well to his usual plan of [illegible] features and comedies, scenics and educationals; and the Clemmer's air cooling process, together with its [illegible], is keeping the summer business up to normal.

W. H. Smythe, manager of the Strand, is relying on big features and big advertising to entice the people from tennis and golf and Seattle's beautiful parks. Last week's showing of the "Official British War Pictures" was the most successful of this season's shows at the Strand. The recruiting wagon with members of different Washington regiments made the Strand their headquarters. In the lobby a number of relics of the war were on display, and an invalided soldier was in attendance to explain about them to the always curious crowd. Mr. Smythe also did a fine business this week with the second run of "The Barrier" by heavy advertising in the papers both before and during the showing.

John Hamrick, of the Rex, is trying the [illegible] of electric fans and variety in his program, to bring in the people who must seek their summer diversions in the city. He has just installed a new system of fans and is advertising the fact both in the papers and on a card in his box office. By showing three features on this week's program Mr. Hamrick hoped to make an appeal to every class of picture lover and results show that he is succeeding. There is a light problem play featuring little Mary [illegible] Children Count," and Fatty Arbuckle furnishes the laughs in "Rough House," while the ever popular story of the north country is shown in "The Law of the North," featuring Shirley Mason.

New Houses and Changes in Theaters of State.

Seattle, Wash.—Norvin Haas resigned the management of the Colonial theater to accept that of the Tivoli, W. H. Smythe's musical comedy house on Madison street.

Uniontown, Wash.—J. A. Greif of Butte has bought the Button theater and will personally manage it.

Ellensburg, Wash.—Miss Millie Sayles has taken over the Isis theater, recently deserted by W. G. Spath.

Fort Lapwai, Wash.—This town, although having only 500 population, now has two motion picture theaters. The latest addition is the Liberty, recently opened by H. L. Wright.

Moscow, Idaho.—M. W. Ebel has just opened the new Class A theater.

Ripley, Western Amusement Co., Aberdeen; Mrs. James Webb, Cozy theater, Union, Oregon; Fred Mercy, theater magnate of North Yakima; A. H. Hilton, Paramount theater, Lewiston, Idaho; R. V. Griner, Ideal, Centralia; C. A. Swanson, Princess, Everett; C. E. McKee, Orpheum, Everett; Ed. Dolan, Weir, Aberdeen; H. T. Moore, Colonial, Tacoma; A. C. Anderson, Apollo, Tacoma; W. N. Dominion Film Launched—Will Begin Work

Vancouver Business Men Take Up New Producing Venture—It Is Now Up to the Studio to Make Worthwhile Film—Canada Wants Homemade Pictures.

By Chas. S. Thomson, 645 Burrard Street, Vancouver, B. C.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—Various initial difficulties in the path of the Dominion Film Corporation having been overcome, the new concern will now progress with all possible speed. To control the business and financial arrangements of the corporation, a board of directors, including the following prominent business men of British Columbia, has been formed: President, J. A. Cunningham, president of the B. C. Manufacturers' Association, also managing director of the B. C. Refining Company and a director of the Vulcan Iron Works; vice-president, Alderman R. H. Gale of the city of Vancouver; treasurer, J. A. Rennie of the Westminster Trust Company; secretary, H. C. Laughlin, formerly secretary-treasurer of the Alaska Bedding Company; general manager, J. A. Nelson.

In addition to the foregoing officials, the other directors are Messrs. A. A. Richardson, R. W. Holland and J. E. Dougherty, all well known men in British Columbia. The final plans for the new studios at Burnaby were passed by the directorate last week. The present offices of the corporation are in the Orpheum block, where they occupy almost the entire fourth floor.

On the 18th of July, Mr. Nelson left for California to collect a company to form his first producing unit. During the past month or so so many difficulties have arisen that it has seemed several times as if the whole concern were going to die a natural death. However, now that the Dominion Film Corporation apparently has a clear path before it, all that remains for it to do is to go ahead and fulfill its promises. Its success or failure can only depend upon one thing, and that is whether it can turn out "pictures" or merely "junk."

Lady Member Appointed to Censor Board.

Olympia, B. C.—The authorities of British Columbia have decided to increase the personnel of the Moving Picture Censorship Board by the addition of a lady censor. The new member of the board is Mrs. Fred Patterson, who is well known throughout the province as a social worker and leader in philanthropic movements. Hitherto the board has simply consisted of chief censor C. L. Gordon and two assistant censors, of the male sex. In spite of the smallness of its numbers, the decisions of the board have seldom been quarrelled with in the past. In the several years of its existence, on only two occasions have appeals been made against its rulings. On one occasion the censor's decision was vetoed by the attorney general, and on the other it was upheld. That was a long time ago, however, and of late things have been running so smoothly that it seems somewhat curious that the government should suddenly decide to add a woman to the censorship board. Perhaps it would be better, though, to say that it was curious that a woman was not included in the first instance, for of course nobody will quarrel with the new arrangement. Possibly the government thinks that the present board has been somewhat too lenient in some of its decisions.

W. P. DeWees Handling Chaplin Films.

Vancouver, B. C.—W. P. DeWees, of the National Film Service, will handle the new productions of Charlie Chaplin, which will be made under the latter's new million dollar contract. Mr. DeWees, who is also manager of the big Rex theater, will run these productions for a week each at that house, after which he will send them over the dominion.

Tennessee Plans for National Theatrical Day

Nashville, Knoxville, Memphis, Chattanooga and Other Cities of State Will Do Their Bit in Big Red Cross Benefit—Local Chairmen.

By J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Building, Nashville, Tenn.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—With the announcement that a date will be set in the early fall to be designated as National Theatrical Day, at which time all box office receipts, actors' salaries and special donations will be turned over to the War Council of the American Red Cross, Tennesseans immediately began making arrangements to take care of their part of the gigantic movement.

W. A. Sheetz, manager of the Vendome theater, has been appointed by Henry P. Davidson, national chairman, to look after Nashville's interest, and he will be assisted in the local work by Harry Sudekum, manager of the Princess theater. Other Nashville managers will join in later, to insure full co-operation in this territory. Albert Weis of Memphis will have charge of arrangements in that city, as well as a number of cities in Texas. Full arrangements have not been completed in the other Tennessee towns, but the National Council may rest assured that the old Volunteer State will live up to its name as usual in making this worthy movement a huge success.

Theater Runs for Benefit of Strikers.

East Chattanooga, Tenn.—The Princess theater recently opened its doors on Sunday for the benefit of the striking textile workers of Chattanooga. The mill strike has been in effect a number of weeks and many of the men, especially those having dependent families, are feeling the effect of being out of work. No admission was charged to the performance, voluntary contributions being accepted at the door by Constable Charles Taylor, the entire fund being turned over to Squire Wm. M. Parks for handling. A seven-reel picture, "The Life of Christ," was shown, and a neat sum was realized to relieve the suffering in Chattanooga.

Johnson City's Photoplay Houses Thrive.

Johnson City, Tenn.—The moving picture theaters of Johnson City, one of the most important of the extreme East Tennessee towns, are in a prosperous condition and showing good pictures. The Edisonia is a five and ten-cent house at night, with five cents for all seats daytime, and Universal service predominates. At the Majestic ten cents is the admission, where the general program consists of a five-reel feature and a two-reel comedy or serial. "Patria" has just started at the last named house and is running strong.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—Moving pictures are proving popular at the Chattanooga summer school. In accordance with the plans of the summer school management to render moving picture programs at the Jefferson hall, a number of films have been secured on the type of "The Lady of the Lake," by Sir Walter Scott, Shakespeare's "Winter's Tale," Dickens' "David Copperfield," "The Vicar of Wakefield," etc. In addition to these, children's educational pictures are shown.

Crescent Books Pearl White Serial.

Nashville, Tenn.—"The Fatal Ring," starring Pearl White, has been started at the Elite theater, operated by the Crescent Amusement Company. This is the house where Miss White made her Nashville debut in serial work, the initial series being "The Perils of Pauline," followed by the "Exploits of Elaine," "The Iron Claw," etc., and the steady weekly following evident on former occasions is fast returning for the newest serial.

Worth a Passing Glance.

Wilder, Tenn.—The Albert Amusement Company of Chattanooga, recently incorporated to operate amusement enterprises at Wilder station for the benefit of the soldiers, has drawn plans for the erection of a power plant at this point to furnish electric current. A small amusement city has sprung up here, which includes a $10,000 theater.

Memphis, Tenn.—Kaufman Specials of Memphis is now turning out a number of new specialties from the Memphis office, including the Sidney Drew comedies. In addition Mr. Kaufman features one, two and three-reel Westerns and comedies, as well as serials and cartoons.

Birmingham, Ala.—Fire broke out in the Champion theater, 212 North Eighteenth street, a few days ago and damaged the building to a small extent.

Florida Building Notes.

Fort Pierce, Fla.—Messrs. Karl and M. L. Kettler, West Palm Beach, have leased the Crystal theater and will expend $3,000 in improvements, including the erection of a concrete front, lobby, foyer, rest room and office. The electrical fixtures will be augmented with new additions, the ventilating system improved, etc.

By Frank H. Madison, 623 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Pays Tribute to Richardson.

LA CROSSE, WIS.—Local newspapers were generous in their accounts of the visit to this city of F. H. Richardson, editor of the projection department of the Moving Picture World. The Tribune refers to him as "America's foremost authority on matters pertaining to the photoplay projection man's art," and declares he gave local operators and managers "a revelation." "He knows his subject backward and forward," adds this paper.

New Picture Company Formed.

Milwaukee, Wis.—The Peerless Photo Players is the name of an organization that has taken up the production of pictures at Pabst Park, a local amusement resort. In addition to allowing the patrons of the place to get a glimpse at the making of a five-reel film, the park management is capitalizing the interest and selecting some of the actors, by contest methods, from among the visitors.

"A Slacker's Heart" Has Premiere.

Milwaukee, Wis.—The Crystal theater had the first showing of "A Slacker's Heart," a film made under the auspices of the Wisconsin Defense League by the Emerald Motion Picture Company. Added interest to the premier at the Crystal was given by the appearance in person of Tony West, who portrayed the part of Abraham Lincoln, and P. H. Westphal, bearing a striking resemblance to President Woodrow Wilson. The production was directed by Frederick Ireland, who also is the author.

Gives Theater for Patriotic Meetings.

La Crosse, Wis.—The La Crosse and Majestic theaters were dark for a night, the houses being turned over to the Council of Defense for the holding of patriotic meetings.

Latts Brothers Lease Majestic Theater.

Ashland, Wis.—A five-year lease on the Majestic theater has been taken by Latts brothers, owners of the Royal theater It is likely that the Royal will be used principally for theatrical and vaudeville attractions and that the Majestic will be devoted to photoplays.

Lucas, Head of Atlanta-New Orleans Office

Goldwyn Distributing Corporation Announces Opening New Office in Atlanta and Appointment of Arthur Lucas as Manager.

By Alfred M. Beatty, 43 Copenhill Ave., Atlanta, Ga.

ATLANTA, GA. — Announcement was made Saturday, July 14, of the selection of Arthur Lucas as manager of the Atlanta-New Orleans division of Goldwyn pictures, and of the establishment at 75 Walton street of the Atlanta office of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation.

The significance of the announcement is that, under the direction of Mr. Lucas, the south in general, and Atlanta in particular, is to get more than ever of the greatest stars and plays produced.

Mr. Lucas is a dominant figure in the southern amusement field. A pioneer both as an exhibitor and distributor of film, he is fully abreast with the progress of the industry, and is a recognized authority. His affiliation with the Goldwyn company promptly identified that concern as one of the foremost.

Goldwyn Picture Corporation, starting fresh and with a clean slate, was not hampered by any of the problems that have bothered other motion picture companies. It did not have on its hands any unpopular screen stars tied up with contracts, who had to be made popular with the great American public that goes by the millions to the movies.

William Oldknow Will Help Uncle Sam.

Atlanta, Ga.—William Oldknow, of Consolidated Film and Supply Co., Atlanta, who is not only the dean, but the best known and popular motion picture man today in the South, will represent Georgia in co-operation with the Council of National Defense and other governmental agencies in selecting and producing motion pictures for Uncle Sam's men. He was chosen Wednesday night at a conference of motion picture men in Washington, D. C.

Bromberg Back in Atlanta.

Atlanta, Ga.—A. C. Bromberg, who was the Atlanta manager of the Triangle Film corporation and who left his office about December 1, 1916, will again supervise the Triagle pictures for Atlanta and the South. Mr. Bromberg has been identified with the motion picture business for many years, and is well known among exhibitors over the entire south.

Miss Fielder Poses for Universal.

Atlanta, Ga.—Miss Aileen Fielder recently posed for a picture for the Universal Film Company. The invitations came to her following the story in "The Constitution" which described the compliment paid Miss Fielder by Harry Chisam, of the British aviation corps, who named after her his aeroplane, which has done perilous duty on the war front. The machine is called the "Aileen."

Old methods were wrong—so they had to make way for new

Man can no longer afford to set type by hand, nor pay the salaries of many musicians.

Those inventions have best served man which enable man to secure more efficiency and better results with less expenditure of time, energy and money.

Because the Robert Morton Symphonic Orchestra presents all the instruments of an orchestra under the control of a single player, combining the grandeur of the Cathedral Organ, the artistic refinement of an orchestral organ, and the accompaniment, obligato and full symphony of an orchestra of skilled musicians—it has taken its place in the ranks of inventions which set new standards for human advancement.

In the Robert Morton all the beauties of a full orchestra are grouped in the glorious range of tone of a single instrument; all the resources of the instrument are also placed at the disposal of a player without technical skill, by using hand played rolls of small cost.

BROADWAY STAR FEATURE.

THE VENTURERS (One of the O. Henry Series—Two Parts).—The cast: John Ives (Jack Ellis); John Forster (J. Frank Glendon); Mary Marsden (Agnes Eyre). Directed by Thomas R. Mills.

The one was a venturer—the other an adventurer—the one a man who wanted to see adventure, but who had never been beyond the city limits—the other a man who had seen adventure in all parts of the world, and who assured the venturer that things were just as monotonous every place in the world as in the city.

So they met, each seeking for the unconventional, on a New York street, and dined together as men out of luck, with two cents between them—and still nothing happened. They both had credit at the hotel!

Then into their lives came the feminine influence—a sweet girl who lived in a house which was irrevocably a household. The adventurer hesitated—he had yet to satisfy his longing for the incalculable.

Suddenly love changed the venturer into an adventurer, and settled the adventurer into a venturer.

A MODERN MARAUDER (An Episode of the Further Adventures of Stingaree—Two Parts).—The cast: Stingaree (True Boardman); Howie (Hal Clements); Bruce Murray (L. T. Terry); Helen Murray (Edythe Sterling).

Near a village in the bush country of Australia, Bruce Murray resides with his daughter, Helen. The girl, for a lark, dons her brother's riding clothes, when Hawkins, the proprietor of Hawkins' Waxworks Exhibit, stops at the house to ask permission to water his horse. He is attracted by the girl, and is forcing unwelcome attentions upon her when Stingaree, who is fleeing from the police, arrives and saves her. Hawkins recognizes Stingaree and sets the troopers upon his track. When Helen sees the troopers riding up to her house to take the bushranger, she plans to save him. She dons his hat and white coat, jumps on his horse and rides off. The troopers think she is Stingaree and give pursuit.

Stingaree's partner, Howie, sees the pursuit and opens fire on the troopers. But, while the girl escapes, the troopers capture Howie and find in his possession a note from Stingaree, in which the bushranger says that he is going to Hawkins' Waxwork Exhibit to see a figure of himself which they have on view. The troopers take Howie to Murray's house nearby. Stingaree, having borrowed a disguise from Murray, leaves for the waxworks show. Leaving Howie in the charge of two troopers, the other troopers ride after Stingaree.

Arriving at the waxworks show in disguise, Stingaree meets Daubeney, the creator of the "gentleman bushranger." They become confidential, and Daubeney complains that Hawkins will not pay him for the figure. He needs the money because he is going to be married to Helen Murray.

When the troopers arrive at the show, Hawkins persuades them to give him a chance "to get the fellow." The troopers allow him two minutes to bring Stingaree out of the tent. Entering the tent, Hawkins is astounded when the figure of King Lear raises a gun and remarks "Hands up!" It is Stingaree. He ties up Hawkins and buries him under a pile of wax figures. Then he himself takes the place of the wax figure of Stingaree, and when the troopers rush into the tent they see nothing but a pile of figures thrown on the ground. They think that Stingaree has escaped. So they leave. Daubeney and Helen, who has arrived with Stingaree's clothes, enter the tent and join Stingaree. The bushranger gets into the box which contained the wax figure of himself, and instructs Daubeney to carry him out of the tent. Daubeney explains to Hawkins that he is taking the figure home, "Since you wouldn't pay me for it." In a bundle with Stingaree's clothes, Helen carries the head of the wax figure away with her. Stingaree emerges from the box and exchanges places with the wax figure. Thanking Helen and Daubeney, he leaves them, and when the troopers ride up and demand that Daubeney open the box, they are chagrined to see that it contains the real wax figure. Stingaree joins Howie, who, with the assistance of Bruce Murray, has meanwhile escaped from the troopers left to guard him, and the two bushrangers ride away.

He rescued the man and sent him away. Two light-fingered persons from the city arrive—Lucille and her mother. The old man falls for Lucille at once, and asks her to be the new teacher. She accepts the job.

Mishap is the cook in the boarding house kept by the president of the board. His daughter, little Mert, makes all the trouble. She helps in serving the guests, and always champions her father. Two old maids, man crazy, live in the boarding house, and when the children toss Angelface in a blanket and he comes through their ceiling, they try to hold him. He escapes. Lucille has accepted the job of teacher, because the board has offered a reward of $1,000 to any one taming the school. The president escorts her to the school. Mishap thoroughly approves of her. The old maids watch her with suspicion. Lucille and Mishap go out walking. Mert and Al climb a tree and watch them. Mishap swings Lucille in the swing, and the children untie the ropes from above, and the two fall into the stream. Mert steals their clothes, and Phil has to make a hula-hula skirt out of weeds. The president gives Lucille his coat, which she wears as trousers.

Mishap writes a note to her, and puts it in a pancake. By mistake the president gets the pancake and whips Mishap. The president escorts Lucille to school. Mishap steals his son's clothes, leaving the boy in the bushes, and goes to school. Angelface arrives in a barrel, and exposes him. Mishap breaks the barrel, and Angelface takes refuge in a huge map. Lucille's pal breaks into the president's safe, and when the president appears, hangs him by his coat to a nail in the wall. They tie Mishap up in a hammock and throw him into the river. Mert and Angelface fish him out. The president and Mishap then go after the crooks. The pal escapes and runs into the old maids' room. He gets away and climbs to the roof. Mishap follows, and they fight. Mishap jumps into an auto, gets Lucille, and elopes with her. The crowd ropes the auto, and Mishap and Lucille take refuge in the school house. Williams has decoyed the store detectives into the private office of Arabin, the jeweler. They find the telephone wires cut, and are forced to remain with the senseless body of their employer in a chair.

In the meantime the two crooks, who gained entrance into the vault as inspectors, are packing the valuables. In the store others of the Gray Ghost's men are awaiting William's signal to fall upon the loot. In the back alley a huge empty motor truck stands ready. An auto draws up in front of the store, and several men enter and go to different counters, holding the clerks in conversation. There are many customers in the store. At a signal from Williams, the Ghost's men draw guns, and order the customers to line up at the right, the clerks to the left. They fill their bags. Women shriek and faint. One clerk tries to break away and is shot. The colored porter is shot trying to escape. The crooks in the vault come out of a side door. A crook stalls his motorlorry in the street and provokes a fight with a man to keep the attention of the cops away from the store.

At an order from Williams, the crooks back out with the loot, keeping their guns pointed at the crowd. Williams is the last to leave. The detectives in the private office break the glass door and climb through, rushing to the store, where they find that they are too late. The crooks have driven off in the empty truck.

The commissioner at headquarters is told of the robbery. He thinks of Jerry Tyron, who predicted that the Ghost would soon be active. He calls Jerry, and learns that though he has left the force, he has gone to the hospital to interview the waiter Jacques who is still unconscious, and may not be able to speak again. The commissioner tells Jerry that he wants him back on the force.

Out on a country road the auto truck is met by a hay wagon. The crooks hide their loot in the hay, and the wagon drives off, while they, after setting fire to the truck, take to an automobile.

Meantime, the Gray Ghost, with some of his men and his two captives, Morn Light and Wade Hildreth, are in a launch nearing a mysterious island. Wade attacks one of the men in the boat, throwing him overboard, but the man swims to the landing. They disbark, enter an auto waiting, with a chauffeur armed with a gun, and are driven to a lonely looking house. Wade is overpowered. Morn Light asks what will be done with him. The Ghost says that Hildreth will never leave the place alive. He locks her in a room. Wade has been put into another room, where he finds a young man Young Olmstead, who is told by the Ghost that the police are still anxious to know of his whereabouts for the murder of his own father, the banker. He says he hopes that the two men will become friends, as they are destined to see a great deal of each other.

Casey is then sent to the suburbs, where he captures two crooks, who are under the protection of the Sergeant. On marching them to the station, Casey finds the Sergeant is present, and the Captain reinstates Casey to his former post. The Sergeant allows the crooks to escape on their promise to get Casey. The next day the crooks knock Casey unconscious, place him in a sack, and start him on a journey in a freight car.

The car arrives at a western town, where a gang, having chased the sheriff away, are plotting to hold up the bank. The sack which contains Casey is loaded on a wagon, and drops off on the main street of the town. Casey crawls out, but his mind has been affected by the blow, and he starts to direct the traffic. STAR FEATURETTE.

THE WOMAN WHO WOULD NOT PAY (Two Parts—Rel. Week of July 30).—The cast: Duane Lovett (Cleo Madison); Graham Lovett (Frank Whitson); Malcolm Leroy (Daniel Leighton); Dan Hargreaves (Bertram Grassby). Story by E. M. Ingleton. Scenario and production by Ruth Ann Baldwin.

Duane Lovett's husband adored and trusted her, although she squandered his money madly. Her husband, Graham Lovett, was one of those simple men who work, play, love and hate with quiet intensity, presenting to the world an unruffled calm.

One evening Lovett presented her to Daredevil Dan Hargreaves, the millionaire explorer. One of her old lovers, Malcolm Leroy, watched the introduction, and became desperately jealous. He took rooms across the street, whence he saw Lovett leave and Dan arrive every day. One night Leroy, making certain that Dan was with Duane, hastened to the club to warn Lovett.

And as Leroy talked, suspicion grew in Lovett's thoughts, and he determined upon desperate measures.

When he entered his home that night, he was seen by the maid, who rushed to Duane to warn her. She hid Dan in the wall-safe in time to open the door for Lovett. He saw that she had been packing to go away. He also saw the corner of a coat sticking through a crack of the safe door. With tranquil cruelty, he slowly smoked four cigars, all the while talking carelessly, while he watched her agitation. He finished his last cigar, and bade her a cold good-night.

Duane rushed to the safe, and opened the door. Dan's body fell out before her—dead. She looked about and saw Lovett standing at the door. She backed away from him to the window, and Leroy, watching from across the street, saw Lovett's shadow approach Duane's, grab her by the throat, then suddenly flinging her from him leaves the room. Leroy dropped the curtain, hate left his face; love, pity and horror at himself overwhelmed him. Duane stood staring at the body of Dan. At last, she had paid.

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE.

ISSUE NO. 30 (August 3).

The Screen Magazine No. 30 begins with a demonstration of the methods in use in an Ohio institution in teaching the blind to "see." Girls are shown sewing and cutting out dresses. They crochet and weave baskets, and design intricate patterns. A fire drill is put through with as great dispatch as if the children could see. A chute is used instead of stairs. The boys are acrobats, and their favorite sport is "wrastlin'."

A new invention is the Hyde ship brake, which enables craft to stop in little more than their own length. The new brake, which is a series of vertical and horizontal fins on the sides of the vessel, is demonstrated on a model, and then on a small boat in action.

Domestic Science is represented by a demonstration of how to make a fireless cooker A large wooden tub is the basis of the cooker. There is a cushion of cotton stuffed with excelsior, sawdust or shredded newspaper to fit in the top. Soapstone or metal discs heated supply the heat, and are set inside a galvanized iron pail, which fits in the tub. Three inches of insulating material, tightly packed excelsior, sawdust, powdered asbestos, or shredded paper to conserve the heat is required around and below the pail. We then see the beef stew as it looks when parboiled and put into the cooker. Five hours later it is taken out perfectly done.

Making an airplane is perhaps the most interesting subject in this number. Air supremacy, we are told, means victory, and it behooves us to attain it as rapidly as possible. We see every step in the making of a machine, all illustrated with comprehensive clearness.

GAUMONT.

TOURS AROUND THE WORLD NO. 39 (July 31).—The first number in this release tells about Marken, the quaint Dutch island in the Zuider Zee. The inhabitants live by fishing, and the customs and costumes of the Scandinavian bargemen are still in evidence. The harbor, the canals and the children in quaint native costumes are among the picturesque views. Viewed from a distance the island resembles a miniature playground such as might be laid out for children.

Perhaps no monastery and convent is as widely known as that of La Grande Chartreuse, where the celebrated liqueur of this name has been made for generations by the monks. The Gaumont cameraman visited the site of the monastery especially for these pictures. His journey was through a group of limestone mountains in the Alps of southeastern France over a splendid carriage road begun in 1854. Crossing the bridge of St. Bruno, named after the founder of the monastery, the visitor is admitted to the monastery, founded in 1084. The Carthusian monks were expelled in 1793, allowed to return in 1816, and again expelled in 1904. The Chartreuse liqueurs are now made in Spain.

Majorca, a Spanish island in the Mediterranean, is a little known place which will be fully appreciated by all who see pictures of it in this issue of "Tours Around the World." Palma, a city of 65,000 inhabitants, is situated upon hills which rise toward the mountains. After seeing the narrow, gloomy streets, the visitor is taken to the river Pareys, Manacor, the second city, and the Caves of Arta nearby, one of the finest groups of stalactite caverns in western Europe. The Majorcan women in their picturesque costumes are interesting to see.

REEL LIFE NUMBER 66—(Aug. 2).—When Gaumont releases "Reel Life" No. 66 the public will see on the screen how machine guns are made. A Gaumont cameraman made a trip through one of the largest American factories, securing some highly entertaining pictures. Necessarily there are some processes which cannot be shown, but enough is pictured to give a good general idea of the work required.

A second section of the reel shows the manufacture of beads from rose petals. It requires a wheelbarrow load of petals for the making of a single necklace. This is a queer California industry which is now for the first time receiving wide publicity.

When the "Bear" went ashore on the Pacific coast, the vessel was regarded as a million dollar loss. But a wrecking firm saw that by cutting the ship in half, the forward part could be saved. While engaged in this work motion pictures were taken, and these are now shown in this issue of "Reel Life." It shows the ingenuity of marine engineers. The boat is to be floated, towed to San Francisco, and a new stern added.

"Keeping the Boys at Home" shows how the young, active members of the family are entertained by means of a billiard table, saving them from the street and the saloon. The reel concludes with two animated drawings based upon humorous illustrations in "Life".

"JERRY'S BIG STUNT"—(Aug. 8).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Count de Cuckoo (George George); Father (Harry DeRoy); Daughter (Claire Alexander). Produced by Milton H. Fahrney.

Jerry seeks a "hand-out" at the back door of a hotel. The daughter of the proprietor "falls" for Jerry's pitiful plea and is just handing him a "snack" when Father breaks in on the longed-for repast and refuses him one bite until he has earned it by chopping a man's size pile of wood.

Father has been advertising the arrival of Count de Cuckoo with the result that his hotel has been deluged with requests for reservations. While Jerry is chopping wood the baggageman arrives with a load of the Count's trunks. Asking for help the baggageman is reinforced with Jerry's assistance. Jerry's help is so well appreciated that the baggageman permits him to carry all the trunks while his own particular efforts are applied to rolling a cigarette. A letter arrives from the Count protesting his great sadness that he cannot be a guest at the hotel.

Father wilts into dejection at the upset plans but revives with the idea that he might secure Jerry's services in filling the role of a count. He promises Jerry liberal remuneration and seals his acceptance by handing him a quarter. Jerry enters into the spirit of the situation by donning the Count's clothes, and upon presentation to the guests "starts something" when he selects the hotel man's daughter for a dancing partner. In the midst of the festivities the real Count de Cuckoo arrives with his valet. He learns of the hoax, sends for swords and the duel is on. Jerry forsakes technique for practical results. He graduates into a sword hurler, punctures the Count with a carefully aimed throw, wins the daughter and together they leap into an automobile. Speeding away from the grounds Jerry and his winsome winnings chuckle at the hysterics of Father and the Count.

LA SALLE.

MAN PROPOSES (July 31).—Otto, a young newspaper man, receives a letter offering him $10,000 a year as editor of an Alaskan newspaper and advising him to bring his wife. Otto lives in a Bohemian boarding house where there are several pretty girls, but after he has phoned for the minister and begun proposing, they all turn him down because he has left the precious letter at the office and can offer no proof of his good fortune.

Meantime Eddie, a fellow boarder and in the same office, finds the letter and takes opportunity to offer himself to Matie, the handsome young artist who occupies the roof studio in Bohemia. Matie snaps at the bait offered and Eddie, to celebrate the event, starts drinking and loses the letter. One of the girls finds it, shows it to the other girls and all, including Matie, start in pursuit of Otto, while Eddie also starts after him with a gun. The chamber maid, always a secret admirer of Otto, saves his life and the minister marries them, to the sorrow of all the girls who have turned him down.

Anne Blair, a Fifth avenue modiste model, drew the attention of Thomas Brockton, a wealthy business man. Against her will, Anne accepted favors from Brockton in order that she might make things easier for her invalid mother. One evening she found herself alone with Brockton in a secret room, where her employer had tricked her. Unaware at first of his attentions, Anne soon found herself resisting Brockton. In a struggle her hand falls upon a dagger. Realizing that she has no chance to escape she drew the knife and seriously wounded Brockton. Anne escapes.

Arriving home, she is notified that her mother is dying at a mountain sanatorium. Rushing to her bedside, she finds her dead. Grief-stricken, Anne wanders out. Richard Steel, an artist, is engaged to Brockton's daughter, who is a society leader. Continually seeing her drinking, he pleads with her to give up this sort of life, but she will not listen. [illegible] He comes across the exhausted body of Anne. He carries her to a cabin, where she recovers. Realizing that she is under some mental strain, Richard convinces Anne that she must come to his home, as he will be able to place her under the care of his aunt. Shortly afterwards her health is restored, so she tells Richard that she is going to leave. He pleads with her to remain, as he wishes to make her his wife. She refuses. Steel demands to know the reason why. She relates the past incident with Brockton. Knowing the character of Brockton, Richard implores Anne to marry him, as she needs someone to protect her honor.

Brockton enters to demand an explanation of Steel regarding his daughter. Anne, seeing him, becomes alarmed. Unknown to Anne a picture falls from her bosom. Brockton sees the upturned face. The picture brought back bitter memories, as the photograph was no one else save himself.

THE FATAL RING (Episode No. 4, "The Warning on the Ring"—Two Parts—Astra—July 29).—The cast: Pearl Standish (Pearl White); Nicholas Knox (Earle Fox); The Priestess (Ruby Hoffman); Richard Carslake (Warner Oland); Tom Carlton (Henry Gsell).

One day before the date set for his death should the Violet Diamond not be returned, Nicholas Knox, accompanied by Pearl Standish, visits the temple. Knox gives the Priestess the Diamond and she immediately has it examined. They discover that it is nothing but a mere piece of glass and that Carslake had tricked Pearl. By the laws of the order, Knox is to be punished. Tied to a pillar he receives fifteen lashes across his back. After recovering a slight bit, Pearl and Knox leave the temple. Thinking that perhaps the queer inscription on the ring might have some power to stop the sentence of death, Pearl and Knox decide to visit a Chinese dealer to have it translated. Reading the inscription, the dealer becomes alarmed, casts the ring away and flees.

Pearl, turning around, spies Carslake talking to the frightened man. Pondering a moment, she calls her dog and, attaching the ring to his collar, sends him home. Disappointed at not being able to secure the setting, Carslake commands Pearl to go for it, and if she fails to return in an hour, Knox will never leave the room alive. Leaving, Pearl accidentally meets the Priestess and relates the incident. The Priestess enters the shop and at the sight of her all the employers fall to their knees and bow their heads. She orders Carslake to be seized and searched. Breaking away, Carslake grabs Pearl and uses her as a shield. Holding her by the arms, he backs into a trap door and pulls her with him.

Tom Carlton, who had saved Pearl's life before, calls to see her. Learning that she went to a Chinese shop and fearing for her, he leaves for the shop. By a clever trick he gains admittance into the back of the shop. Finally he discovers himself in a secret passage and, looking ahead, he sees Pearl and Carslake. Carslake is demanding a written order from Pearl, when suddenly Tom jumps upon him and knocks his revolver from his hand. A fight ensues. On the ground they fight to gain possession of the revolver, while Pearl rushes off for help. Running, Pearl falls into a deep cavern-like hole filled with water.

THE NEGLECTED WIFE (Episode No. 12—Two Parts—Balboa—July 29).—The cast: Margaret Warner (Ruth Roland); Horace Kennedy (Roland Bottomley); Mary Kennedy (Corenne Grant); Edgar Doyle (Neil Hardin); Frank Norwood (Philo McCullough).

In the last episode Mary, the wife of Kennedy, warned Margaret Warner that she must give up her husband. Margaret made an honest effort to do so, but Kennedy overcame the girl's resolve. Norwood, who has a true and unselfish love for Margaret, aided her in recovering valuable papers from Doyle.

Struck on the head, he was left in the burning house in which they had surprised Doyle and his henchmen. Margaret returns with a patrolman who, after a desperate fight with the flames, finally carries out the unconscious body of Norwood. Doyle, thinking that Norwood is safe and out of the way, begins a new plot to avenge himself upon Kennedy.

Mary receives another note from the veiled woman while eating breakfast. Kennedy demands to see it. She refuses. Forcing it from her hands, he reads: "Your husband visited the other woman's apartments this afternoon. Remember, he ruined my life, and I am going to punish him." "Who is this veiled woman? Someone you have ruined;" Mary asks him. Kennedy tells Mary that he does not know anything about this mysterious woman.

Margaret accompanies Norwood home, and after she has bathed his head he gradually gains strength. He learns that the "papers" he had helped her recover were in reality letters from Kennedy. "Do you mean to say I was aiding Kennedy by recovering those papers?" he asks. Margaret, fearful, slowly nods her head. Norwood tells Margaret that he will not forget that she has tricked him.

Mary visits Margaret and tells her that she will have to give up her husband or she will be ejected as an immoral person. Mary gives Margaret four hours in which to leave town. Margaret, really a good girl, writes Kennedy that she is going out of his life and that she does not wish to see him again. He phones Margaret, but discovers that she has gone, leaving no address.

Kennedy is followed by the veiled woman to his office and, with knife drawn, she attempts to end his life. Struggling, Kennedy overpowers her. Seeing that she will be caught, she escapes.

Who is this mysterious woman?

THE DOUBLE STANDARD (Five Parts—Week of July 23).—The cast: John Fairbrother (Roy Stewart); Grace, his wife (Clarissa Selwyn); Editor George Ferguson (Frank Brownlee); Bishop Ferguson (Frank Elliott); Mace (Hazel Page); Lily (Irene Aldwyn); Albert (Max Stanley). Written by Brand Whitlock. Produced by Phillips Smalley.

John Fairbrother's wife and her two brothers have worked unceasingly for his election as city judge. One brother is an editor, supporting the reform platform. The other brother is Bishop Ferguson. John Fairbrother's long-lost sister, living in shame, an inmate of Johnson's Cafe, the worst plague spot in the city, died a victim of the distorted social system.

The scene switches to the courtroom.

Judge Fairbrother undertook his duties with a thorough belief in the single standard of judging men and women.

The two girls before him were admittedly of the underworld. One was brazen and defiant, the other frightened and piteously appealing. They had been caught with male companions in a police round-up of Johnson's Cafe, the very one in which the judge's sister had expended her life.

The detective who had arrested them knew who the men were. One was Charlie Ferguson, the editor's son, and the nephew of the judge. The judge thought of his wife, of the bishop, Charlie's uncle, and of the editor, Charlie's father, and for an instant before he pronounced the word "guilty." He suspended sentence, pending good behavior. Then, thinking that one of the girls was not hopelessly bad, he went with them to their apartment and wrote a check for the amount the landlady said the girls owed. His visit was not in vain. He persuaded the little country mouse to return to her home, and for the more experienced girl he secured an office job. Then he looked up the agent of the apartment house, and to his amazement found that it was owned by the estate in which his wife and brother-in-law were the heirs. Even Fairbrother had never realized that the root of evil had grown so close to his own home.

A WIFE ON TRIAL (Five Parts—Rel. Week of July 30).—The cast: Phyllis (Mignon Anderson); Allan Harrington (Leo Pierson); Horace de Guenther (L. M. Wells); Mrs. de Guenther (Julia Jackson); Mrs. Harrington (Marie van Tassel); Wallis (George Pearce). Story from the novel, "The Rosegarden Husband," by Margaret Widdemer. Scenario by Lèo Pierson. Produced by Ruth Ann Baldwin.

Phyllis is in the Children's Department at the library, where some of the youngsters call her the "library teacher," and others "The pretty one that smiles." She is happy, but despairs over her slow progress. One day she receives an urgent message from Mrs. de Guenther, suggesting a new line of work. That night she learns the sad story of Allan Harrington.

One day he and Louise, his fiancee, started off in his racer. Through reckless driving the auto dropped into a gully. Louise was killed. Now Allan is a helpless cripple. His broken-hearted mother, who realizes that her death is near, wishes her son to have some one to care for him who will have more interest than a hired stranger. Phyllis must marry Allan. She is shocked at first, but thinking over her sordid circumstances and little money, she consents.

In the middle of the night Phyllis is summoned to be married. Mrs. Harrington is dying, and insists that she must witness the ceremony. It is all like a funeral rather than a marriage. Mrs. Harrington passes away that night. Phyllis sobs herself to sleep, but is later awakened by the valet of Allan, urging her to go to the boy, who is restless and despondent. She tells Allan a child's story, which soothes him to sleep. Her struggle is strenuous—trying to keep cheerful in the dark, gloomy house, with nothing but suffering about her. It is one of Allan's black days, and Phyllis tries to cheer him. When he sees Phyllis playing with and fondling a dirty child, who has hurt himself, he tells her that she has been cheated of her birthright. Phyllis sees much of Allan's friend, a young doctor, who tells her that paralysis may become merely a bad habit. Allan can hardly bear to see them playing tennis together. At last he makes up his mind to the supreme sacrifice, and tells Phyllis that their marriage must be annulled.

That night a sneak thief comes into the house. Phyllis is sitting up late, mourning her unhappiness, and Allan also is dreaming in the dark. The man enters the room where Allan is sitting, and Phyllis, hearing her husband's cry, enters. She attacks the man to keep him from Allan. The thief nearly overpowers her, and she cries to her husband to save her. With a great effort he reaches her side just as his valet rushes in and tackles the man. With the reaction, they realize what has happened, and their love for each other.

THE LIVING BOOK OF NATURE (By Raymond L. Ditmars).—The Life of a Moth.—With the beginning of warm weather the scientific apparatus at the Ditmars Studios has been turned upon the insect world. It is among the smaller creatures of Nature that the magic eye of the scientist's camera discovers the greatest wonders. Here is a picture of fragile and beautiful creatures from various parts of the world that undergo marvellous transformations and perform almost unbelievable feats. The caterpillar of a large moth of Malaysia—the typhoon country—constructs a cocoon protected from dislodgement by terrific winds, causes the cocoon to imitate a leaf to protect it from enemies, and ingenuously renders it waterproof from the torrential rain of the tropics. The emergence from the cocoon and unfolding of the wings from compact, tiny bundles, to a sweep of glorious colors is also seen. Portrayed in rapid succession are the gorgeous night-flying species of large size, and finally there is an intimate view of the most gigantic moth in the world—the Atlas Moth of India—that attains a breadth of wings of eleven inches. This spectacular creature is seldom seen alive, except in its native haunts.

THE MILLIONAIRE (Two Parts—Aug. 1—Billy West Comedy).—Billy, an eccentric millionaire, is seen walking in the park by Ethel and the Count. Getting possession of Billy's handkerchief, they decide to blackmail him. Billy has just received a telegram from his ward, Daisy' notifying him that she is coming to visit him. When Billy's mother-in-law catches him talking to Ethel in the West home, Billy is panic-stricken, but remembering the telegram, he introduces Ethel as his ward. The mother-in-law is charmed with Ethel and decides to make a match between Ethel and her son Buddy.

Daisy, in the meanwhile, arrives at the West home and Billy brings her to a neighbor's house intending to hide her there until after Ethel has gone. The mother-in-law sees Billy in front of the neighbor's house, and rushing out after Billy, gives chase. Daisy is a witness to the chase and disguises herself as a boy in order tha she may clear up the mystery that seems to enshroud West. She gets inside the West home, where she is seen and recognised by Bad Bill, a former pal of Billy's in his younger days out West. Buddy sees Daisy and Bad Bill in an embrace and begins to act like a nance in derision of Bad Bill.

West has eluded his mother-in-law and met Daisy and Bad Bill, so when the mother-in-law returns home she finds Daisy in her boys' attire sitting on West's knees. Horrified at such a sight, she phones to the insane asylum and to West's wife that Billy has gone insane. The asylum guards and Mrs. West hurry to the house where a fight occurs until explanations are in order. Just as West is explaining the situation, Buddy and Ethel enter with the announcement that they have been married. So when Daisy has proven her identity to the mother-in-law's satisfaction, Billy is received once more into the good graces of his family.

THE GREATER LAW (Five Parts—July 16).—The cast: Barbara Henderson (Myrtle Gonzalez); "Seattle" Lou (Gretchen Lederer); Anne Malone (Maud Emory); Jimmy Henderson (G. M. Rickerts); Cort Dorian (Lawrence Peyton); Tully Winkle (George Hernandez); Laberge (Jack Curtis); Basil Pelly (Jean Hersholt). Directed by Lynn F. Reynolds.

When the Widow Henderson died her son, Jimmie, was left to the care of her daughter, Barbara. He was wild and lazy, so when he decided to try his luck in the Klondyke, the girl was better satisfied than to have him at home. But when her letters to him were returned with notice that the boy could not be found, Barbara determined to go to the Klondyke and seek her brother.

In Seattle she heard that Jimmie had been murdered in Chilkoot. Barbara set out for the Klondyke to become her brother's avenger. She applied for lodgings at Basil Pelly's at a time when Chilkoot was flooded with transients and the only hotel in the camp was crowded to capacity.

Jolly old Tully Winkle offered her shelter in the shack he was using, together with his prospecting partner, Cort Dorian, and the girl accepted the invitation to enter upon a housekeeping arrangement with the two men. Cort Dorian found Barbara congenial, and the girl realized that the prospector had won her heart.

From various sources of information among [illegible]—principally from Anne Malone, a denizen of the "honkey tonk"—Barbara learned much of her brother's disappearance. "Seattle" Lou, whose "best man" was Laberge, formed an attachment for Jimmie Henderson. Laberge was away most of the time prospecting on Nenana River, and his absence gave Lou opportunity to be in Jimmie's [illegible]

On the day that Laberge returned to Chilkoot the boy was ill and Lou was nursing him in his room at Basil Pelly's hotel. Laberge surprised Lou in Jimmie's room, holding the lad's head in her lap. Tully Winkle and Cort Dorian were stopping at Pelly's hotel and heard the shooting that followed Laberge's entrance to Jimmie's room. They rushed to the [illegible] in darkness. There were many shots fired, and when the smoke cleared away Laberge had fled and Jimmie Henderson was prostrate and bleeding from bullet wounds, with "Seattle" Lou bending over him.

As the key to the story seemed to be in possession of Laberge, Barbara determined that she should learn the details from his own lips. When Laberge came to Chilkoot, Barbara feigned interest in him, and when he was intoxicated, led him to tell the story of Jimmie Henderson's [illegible]

When, in finishing the story, Laberge declared that Cort Dorian, in love with "Seattle" Lou, vented his spite against Jimmie by shooting him, Barbara fled the dance hall and ran [illegible] keeping house for Cort and Tully Winkle. She challenged Dorian to step forth and defend himself. Her accusations roused Cort's pride to resentment and he was not long in "pacing off the distance."

Cort shot straight in the air, while Barbara's bullet gave her antagonist a wound in the shoulder. Just as the shots were fired, Tully Winkle came up and told that "Seattle" Lou had just come to town, and with her was her [illegible] Henderson.

THE RESCUE (Five Parts—July 23).—The cast: Anne Wetherall (Dorothy Phillips); Nell Jerrold (Gretchen Lederer); Getty Jerrold (Molly Malone); Henriette (Claire Du Bray); Mrs. Hendricks (Gertrude Aster); Kent Wetherall (William Stowell); Thomas Holland (Lon Chaney). Directed by Ida May Park.

Having divorced her husband, Kent Wetherall, Anne Wetherall returned to the stage. The last night of the season arrived and Thomas Holland, mutual friend of the Wetheralls, came to take Anne to an after-theater lunch. She confided in Holland that she had received from Nell Jerrold a request to save her daughter, Betty, from marrying Kent Wetherall.

Nell Jerrold was Anne's girlhood chum, and Tom Holland was an intimate friend of all concerned. Holland advised Anne to go to Wheaton, the town where the Jerrolds lived and depend on circumstances that might arise to give her an opportunity to intervene between Kent and Betty.

Anne interviewed Betty and found her defiant in her determination to marry the man she loved. Anne then resolved to enslave her ex-husband by her charms, and thereby win him back. Betty essayed to match her freshness and beauty against Anne's mature accomplishments of grace and artfulness.

Kent fell under the spell of the woman he once called his wife. He declared his renewed love, expressed repentance for previous shortcomings and asked Anne to marry him again. With victory in her grasp Anne resorted to a scheme of vengeance. She married Kent (intending to forthwith leave him) that he might be stopped, by legal means, from making any other woman his wife.

Tom Holland had, meanwhile, pressed his own suit, begging Anne to marry him; but Anne, still abjectly enslaved by her love for Kent, begged Holland to abandon any hope of their marriage. In the brief time she had lived as Kent's wife, her husband's strange actions had aroused suspicions that finally led to the divorce. In the river that ran past their estate a houseboat occasionally appeared and Anne observed that when this craft disappeared Kent Wetherall always absented himself from home. She investigated and saw a woman bending over Kent as he lay in what was obviously a drunken stupor. Anne appealed to the courts and was divorced.

This incident was explained within an hour after Anne had married a second time and while she was in the act of fleeing from Wheaton. The "woman in the case" proved to be the wife of a doctor who was conducting on a houseboat a sanitarium for the cure of alcoholic addicts—and Kent had been born with a craving for drink. When the woman of the houseboat explained, Anne hurried to her husband. Betty was a witness to the reunion and when Anne smiled in triumph at her rival, Betty declared, laughingly, "Kent and I fixed up a plot to win you back and you fell helpless into the trap."

WORLD PICTURES.

YOUTH (Peerless—Five Parts—Aug. 6).—The cast: Bryan Goodwin (Carlyle Blackwell); Jean Elliott (June Elvidge); Kamura (Johnny Hines); Henry Elliott (George Cowl); Grace Van Seer (Muriel Ostriche); James Goodwin (Robert Broderick); Murray Bronson (Victor Kennard); Mrs. Van Seer (Henrietta Simpson); Dougherty (Henry West). Directed by Romaine Fielding.

Bryan Goodwin, as Don Quixote, and Murray Bronson, as Captain Kidd, go to a masquerade ball, where Grace Van Seer is the center of attraction. Bryan finds Grace in the conservatory nearly asleep. He slips an engagement ring on her finger and leaves her.

At the club Bryan discovers that the intended bride of Murray is Grace. The ensuing discussion lands Bryan in jail. His father bails him out, and decides to put his son to work on the Tennessee River Dam. Bryan pays Grace a hurried visit, and leaves town.

The construction of the dam is in charge of Henry Elliott, who lives with his sister, known as Dr. Jean because of her frequent ministrations to the sick. She is trying to get her brother to give up drinking. When Bryan arrives his face is cut from a combat on the way. Jean dresses his wounds, and they become fast friends. They find an old houseboat, which they fit up. One day Bryan is sitting on the deck of the houseboat drinking. He picks up his field glasses and watches Jean bathing. That evening he is drunk. He sends for Dr. Jean, claiming that he is ill. He attempts to embrace her, but she prevents him, and banishes him forever. Sobered, he goes to work on the dam. Grace visits Bryan at the dam. She cannot get him to go back with her. She returns his engagement ring.

Bryan, on an errand to see Elliott, finds Jean kneeling over the prostrate form of her brother. She agrees to allow Bryan to take her brother on the houseboat to keep him away from liquor. Bryan assumes Elliott's work.

Goodwin, senior, telegraphs Elliott that he will arrive to inspect the dam. Bryan notifies Elliott to come ashore and prepare for the visit. The isolation from whiskey has made a new man of him. Jean expresses her gratitude to Bryan. Goodwin arrives at the dam. He asks Jean to marry his son. She thinks he is engaged. "Not any more," said James Goodwin. "Come, be generous and give him another chance."

The most surprised man in the world that evening was Bryan, when he heard a footfall on the floor of his boathouse, and upon opening found Jean standing there. A happy reconciliation followed.

The picture tells of Mary Ellen Ellis, as irresponsible as a kitten, who meets Walter Benton, "the young man from the city." The life he opens for her is so fascinating that, when he asks her to elope with him, she is trustful and leaves with him.

Benton takes the girl to a resort run by Madame De Coeur and promises to marry her within a few days. While there, Mary Ellen effects the reformation of "Bull" Clark, burglar. Later, it is Clark who rescues her from "The Weasel," one of the worst characters in the underworld.

"The Weasel," having sworn revenge, comes upon Clark and Benton as the two fight, and kills the latter. Clark is jailed for the crime. Meantime, Mary Ellen drifts with the flotsam and jetsam of the world. She is saved from the wreckage by Jane Murray, a settlement worker. Jane introduces the girl to her friend, Dr. David Graham, who gives his services to a dispensary. Graham promptly falls in love with Mary.

One day "The Weasel" comes to the dispensary, sees Mary, and discloses her past history. Graham, who has idolized the girl, asks her if the story is true. When she answers in the affirmative, he thrusts her from him. Then the bigness of the man's heart overcomes his prejudice, and he seeks Mary Ellen and finds her, just as "The Weasel" begins his vulturous pursuit once more.

LOVE AND LOGS (Foxfilm Comedy—Two Parts—July 23).—The cast: Daisy Woods (Anna Luther); Her Father (Frank Armstrong); LaRue, Villain (Harry O'Connor); The City Chap (Hardy Gibson); Villain's Wife (Billie Bennett; Her Daughter (Doris Baker). Directed by Walter Reed.

The story is that of a lumber camp girl who must marry quickly to gain an inheritance. Daisy Woods is the miss. The villain tries to win her and goes so far as to kidnap a minister to do the job. But the villain's wife and baby from the East appear on the scene.

In the desperate hope that he will still be able to execute his designs, the villain LaRue wrecks their carriage, ties wife and the man who rescued her to a huge log saw platform and then starts the blade. As an added inducement toward their destruction, he sets the mill on fire.

The little girl escapes and rides to the home of Daisy Woods, and halts the wedding in her own quaint way. She casually informs Daisy that her mother is now on the saw platform. Daisy rushes post-haste to the mill, saves the mother and marries the chap who first attempted the rescue.

In the scene where Daisy and the daughter hurry to the mill, the two riding madly on one horse, they cross an old wooden bridge to the accompaniment of a bit of dynamite which the villainous husband jestingly places beneath it. Needless to say, the explosive accelerates their pace—first upward, then downward. The riders drop fifty feet into the water.

Pug Haddon, son of a thief, holds as his dearest possession "The High History of King Arthur and His Knights," a book left him by his mother when she died. Inspired by the great deeds of the fearless warriors in the story, Pug organizes a gang. They include the following in their by-laws: "Every guy that belongs to the W. M. K. E. S. T. (Wharf-rats, Motherless Knights Erring of the Square Table), must be brave—an' he's gotter do bloody and desprit deeds, an' he gotter stick to the rest of the gang 'till death." Pug's mother's last admonition was that he be honest, and Pug incorporated his mother's wish into the by-laws.

Not far away, the Pinetree patrol of the Boy Scouts went into camp under the direction of its Scoutmaster, and David Scudder, the senior scout leader, known as "Scud", who was allotted the task of supervision of the junior scouts in conjunction with the Scoutmaster.

Headed by Pug, the W. M. K. E. S. T. set out in quest of adventure. The Knights meet the Scouts and hurls belittling remarks at them. "Scud" orders the Scouts to keep on marching and ignore the Knights, but the Knights are in quest of trouble and continue to harass the Scouts until it is necessary for "Scud" to order his army to "scrum". A struggle ensues and Pug is slightly injured. The Scouts make use of their "first aid" knowledge and aid him. The Knights then flee to their quarters in fear of the police.

In the evening as Pug is returning home from a meeting of the W. M. K. E. S. T., he sees Billy (a young chap denied membership in the Knights' organization because he had a mother) at the point of a gun about to be forced through an opening in a window made by burglars. Pug sees a vision of Billy's mother waiting for him and offers to take Billy's place if they let his pal go, but the thieves are suspicious of Pug and hold the two until they get their loot.

When in the jewelry store Pug touched a silver cup which he imagined to be the Holy Grail. The detective assigned to investigate the case goes in search of the person whose finger-prints he found on the silver cup. While hiding in the barn where the W. M. K. E. S. T. meet, the detective overhears a conversation which reveals the identity of the real burglars and the innocence of Pug.

Meanwhile one of the Knights had been dispatched to seek "Scud", the boy scout, to lend assistance to Pug, who was suffering from a wound as a result of the jewelry store raid. The captain of the Boyscouts and "Scud" arrive, and succeed in making Pug realize the contrasting qualities of his organization and that of the Scouts. Pug's better self asserts itself and he, together with the organization he formed, join a Division of the Boyscouts, headed by Boyle, the detective, whom they select as their captain.

But he is miserable because of the disappearance of his son, whom he has never seen since the night of the robbery.

At the climax of the play the son returns repentant, and the story comes to a happy ending, leaving the old peddler with his family around him again and his struggles over.

MISS DECEPTION (Van Dyke Film Corp.—Five Parts—July 9).—The cast: Joyce Kingston (Jean Sothern); John Kingston (Jack Newton); Edward Singleton (Robert Kegereis); Genevieve Hasbrook (Mary More); Tom Norton (eJan Sothern); John Kingston (Jack Ellis); Reginald Lennon (Hal Peel). Directed by Eugene Nowland.

Joyce Kingston is the daughter of a millionaire, but she has never seen her father, having been reared by an uncle in the West. When she comes of age her father, who has neglected her all these years, decides to make reparation by inviting her to live with him. Joyce knows that he thinks her a wild and untutored Western girl, although she has really been to an eastern finishing school, so when she goes to the city she wears impossible clothes and makes absurd social blunders, keeping the household in a state of constant perturbation. Her deceitfulness proves to be rather good than bad, however, for it is instrumental in saving her father's fortune and unmasking an adventuress who desires to marry his gold. In the end the girl reveals herself in her true colors as a polished society maid, and gives increased happiness to her young lover, who was fond of her in spite of her supposed lack of culture.

GREATER VITAGRAPH.

THE STOLEN TREATY (Five Parts—July 16).—The cast: Geoffrey Wynne (Earle Williams); Irene Mitchell (Corinne Griffith); Zarl (Denton Vane); The Secretary of State (Robert Gaillard); Mrs. Leonori (Billie Billings); Riddle (Bernard Siegel); McMahon (John Ellis). Directed by Paul Scardon.

The story opens with a reception in a Fifth Avenue home at which the guest of honor is Prince Zarl, of Zorania, aparently in America for pleasure, but really the emissary of Zorania in the making of a secret treaty with the United States. Another guest is Geoffrey Wynne, apparently a society fop, but in reality a Secret Service man. Also present is Irene Mitchell, a society girl and the betrothed of Wynne.

During the reception, Wynne gets a summons to Washington. There he meets McMahon, Chief of the Secret Service, and the Secretary of State. He is told that the treaty negotiated by Prince Zarl and the Secretary has been stolen, and that a demand for $15,000,000 has been made by the thieves.

Wynne is assigned to recover the treaty, and the blackmailers are notified that he has been appointed agent to transact negotiations. Next day he is taken to a house outside the city. There he is met by three masked men, one of whom wears an unusual ring on his finger. They state their terms to Wynne, and he asks that they be transmitted to his superiors.

Arrived at the apartment, he learns from his valet, Riddle, whom he had instructed to follow the other car, that the house is rented by an Italian named Farnelli. He communicates with Miss Mitchell, who had expressed a desire for adventure, and offers her a chance to get some excitement. She accepts, and Wynne tells her to go in her car to a point outside the house of Franelli. There she is to pretend her car has broken down and seek Farnelli's assistance.

She accepts the commission, and carries out his orders. While Farnelli's chauffeur is working on the machine, Farnelli entertains her in the house. He asks permission to accompany her to New York, and she, after calling up her "father" (Wynne), grants it. On the way in, Wynne overtakes them, gets into the car and chloroforms Farnelli. He takes him to his own lodgings, rips off his disguises, and discloses Prince Zarl. He tells Zarl that he identified him by his ring, and then forces him to restore the stolen treaty which he had obtained by giving the Secretary of State a dummy package after they had concluded their deal. He sought to obtain the $15,000,000 blackmail to cover his gambling debts.

RICHARD THE BRAZEN (Five Parts—July 12).—The cast: Richard Williams (Harry Morey); Harriet Renwyk (Alice Joyce); Bill Williams (William Frederic); Jacob Renwyk (Franklyn Harna), Corrigan (Robert Kelly); Imogene (Agnes Eyre); Lord Croyland (Charles Wellesley); FitzGeorge (William Bailey). Authors, Dr. Cyrus T. Brady and Edward Peple. Director, Perry N. Vekroff.

Richard Williams, an American, and guest of Lord Croyland, an important agent of the British War Department, sees Harriet Renwyk and her cousin Imogene, American girls, in a London chop house. He becomes infatuated with Harriet.

Croyland receives orders to go to New York to buy munitions, and Richard receives a summons from his father, Bill Williams, a Texas cattleman and financier. The elder Williams, although the son is unaware of it, has been involved in business with Jacob Renwyk, father of Harriet. The two partners fall out over the contract that Croyland is to place in America, and each determines to get it for himself.

In New York, Croyland and Richard are in an automobile accident, his lordship being injured, while Richard escapes. Croyland gives the police Richard's name as his own. He asks Richard to go to Renwyk, to whom he has sent letters of introduction, and explain his inability to call. Renwyk mistakes Richard for the real Lord, and he, meeting Harriet, brazenly accepts the role. He woos Harriet, and her father woos the contract.

Richard learns that Renwyk's plan is to beat the elder Williams, and he contrives to evade the issue. He has borrowed Lord Croyland's English valet. Two others penetrate Richard's disguise: Harriet and Corrigan, a canny relative of her father. Neither, however reveals the secret.

A former admirer of Imogene threatens her if she does not buy back letters she had written him. She confides in Harriet, and at an appointed time the blackmailer, FitzGeorge, comes to collect his toll. While he is holding up Imogene, his confederate takes the diamonds from the Renwyk safe. The burglar gets out of the house, but Corrigan, who had seen him climbing out of the window, overpowers him.

Meantime, Richard has come downstairs and hears a heated argument between the two women and FitzGeorge. Harriet has grabbed the letters from him and defied him. A struggle ensues, and Imogene, in terror hides in a corner. Richard does not see her as he grapples with FitzGeorge. He imagines that Harriet is guilty of a clandestine affair, which impression is increased when Harriet begs him to let FitzGeorge escape. This he does, and leaves the room. Aroused by the noise down stairs, Renwyk comes down, meets Richard, and sees that his safe has been robbed. He suspects him of the crime, and has the police summoned.

The elder Williams arrives from Texas, and resents Renwyk's branding Richard a thief. The two elder men are joined by Corrigan, fresh from his encounter with the burglar. Richard explains to his father why he was in the Renwyk house.

Corrigan hands Renwyk the jewels he recovered from the burglar, and when the police arrive they find the prisoner, and also capture FitzGeorge.

Corrigan then informs Renwyk and Williams that he has been to the hospital and obtained the munitions contract from Croyland, and that he intends to give it to Richard and Harriet as a wedding present.

A CORRECTION.

On page 695 of last week's issue a description of "The Little Boy Scout" was published under the head of K-E-S-E. This picture is a Paramount release, and should have been published under that head. Exhibitors will please note this in making use of this synopsis.

THE LATEST KINKS IN CANNING.—This subject deals with the various methods of canning and preserving foodstuffs, and in view of the fact that the food question of today is occupying a prominent place in the minds of the American public, it is sure to be a highly interesting subject.

Madison Hale, wealthy American financier, and Govrian Texler, financial advisor of the King of Maritzia, are bidding against each other for the concession to run a transcontinental railroad through the country.

The American in New York is operating through agents in the kingdom. Young Dick Hale, having just completed school, desires to make a trip and visit Maritzia, the birthplace of his mother's grandfather. Arriving there, Dick meets the Princess, who is under an assumed name, and the two young people fall in love much to the chagrin of Ferdinand Vaslof, a young military officer and nephew of Texler.

The Princess induces Dick to accept a lieutenancy in the Maritzian army. Hale, Sr., hearing that he is not apt to get the railroad concession, boards his yacht and personally goes to the principality. He does not approve of the marriage until he meets the young Princess.

Although Dick is an officer he refuses to deny allegiance to Uncle Sam, and when he is insulted by Ferdinand he promptly resigns from the army. Texler has his resignation ignored, and the young American is sent to prison in Ferdinand's custody. The Princess hears this, but is unable to obtain his release with her father. She goes to Madison Hale, with her two brothers, and induces him to take them captive on board his yacht.

The senior Hale then enters the Council Chamber, takes up the loan with which Texler has held the King in his power, and forces him to sign an order for his son's release. He reaches Ferdinand's castle just as Dick is about to be brutally treated by Ferdinand, makes him captive, and then, with his son, returns and sends a message to the Princess to return from her yachting trip. The nobility of Dick's great grandfather is established, and he and the Princess receive the blessings of their two fathers.

Were You at the Chicago Exposition?

Then you know how hot and stuffy the last few days were—outside of the Coliseum. But inside was cool and comfortable, thanks to the Typhoon Cooling System. How the sweltering crowds thronged in from the streets to enjoy the cool, refreshing Typhoon Breezes.

The Typhoon apparatus was only a temporary one—installed in two days, which was all the time that could be allowed by the Exposition management.

In your theatre a Typhoon Cooling System can be installed just as easily and quickly. It will pay you to let your patrons enjoy the fresh - as - sea - air Typhoon Breezes, while you enjoy the extra profits.

Our summer this year has been a record-breaker for cool weather. But if you will look up Government weather reports you will find that the average of warm weather, year in and year out, is the same every summer. This is the way Nature balances her books.

This means that we are due for a long-drawn-out spell of real hot weather. It means, too, that a Typhoon Cooling System placed in your theatre now will pay for itself long before the end of summer—easily. And then you will have a perfect system of ventilation for your cold weather months.

Give us full information about your house and we will tell you how easily and for how little Typhoons will cool your house and make money for you.

Every warm summer's day means money in your pocket—so write us NOW.

Simplex

Clatter vs. Music

(A short story of two Projectors)

The Machine was installed.

The picture was satisfactory.

But the Operator said:
"I don't like that clatter. Where there's so much noise there must be rapid wear."

Time told.

It wasn't long before the picture began to show the results of wear, especially at high speeds—

—and the clatter was worse than ever. That constant pounding made perfect projection impossible.

The Simplex was installed.

The picture was excellent.

And the Operator said:
"That's what I call a smooth-running machine. It's bound to last a long, long time."

Time told.

The picture remained rock-steady, no matter whether a reel was run off in sixteen or in eight minutes—

—and the sound of the Simplex continued as pleasant to the ear as the picture was kind to the eye.

The Fourth of July has again reminded us that some things are intended for making noise—and the more noise the better.

But a Projector is bought for another purpose. And time has proven that the quiet-running Simplex accomplishes this purpose as no other Machine can, and continues to do so for a very long time.

Any of our Distributors will be glad to tell you about the quiet-running Simplex.

THIS ANNOUNCEMENT WILL INTEREST YOU

AFTER years of exhaustive research and experimental work by some of the biggest men in the industry, we announce the perfection of some inventions that will revolutionize the method of projecting motion pictures.

℄ With his many years in the industry, and closely co-operating with the engineers in the MAZDA Lamp research and development laboratories, he has perfected the Oscar Sheck Universal Projector Lamp Appliances, with which MAZDA Lamps are used to project motion pictures on the screen in place of the carbon arc-lamps now used. Present arc-lamp equipment may be changed quickly and economically to use the MAZDA lamp. We are the manufacturers and general distributers.

℄ These inventions have many advantages—the elimination of "flicker" on the screen, better illumination, the elimination of eye strain, make the operator's work easier, and the cost to operate with MAZDA Lamps is very much less than with arc-lamps.

℄ These inventions will revolutionize the method of motion picture projection, and save exhibitors many thousands of dollars annually in operating cost.

℄ Mr. H. H. Cudmore, for many years identified with the MAZDA Lamp Industries, is General Manager of the company. We are well organized, with thoroughly experienced and capable men, and we will soon be ready to make deliveries of the new equipment.

℄ We suggest that you write now for descriptive literature, prices, etc., so you may be one of the first exhibitors to install this modern improvement.

The One Best Bet of the Week

Neal Hart in a Powerful Western Drama—"Squaring It"—Thrilling 101-Bison—Released Week of August 20

NEAL HART won the admiration of the fans by his splendid work in that glorious serial, "Liberty," and he has been adding to his reputation ever since. That means that in the current 101-Bison, "Squaring It," you can give your patrons a real treat—splendid entertainment in one of the most fascinating three-reel Westerns ever filmed. Neal is a bad man, badly wanted. He is wounded by a posse and takes refuge in a settler's cabin. These people are kind to him and he remains in hiding in their cabin. Joe Ramon, a gambler, befriends the settlers, thinking to win the pretty little wife. He learns that Neal is hiding there, and as Neal leaves, holds him up and proposes that if he will rob the stage that night he will let him go free instead of informing the sheriff of his whereabouts. He tells him another man will meet him to divide the spoils. Joe tells the settler he has a job for him and tells him to go to the meeting place. When Neal and the settler meet they realize they have been double-crossed. Telling the settler to hide out, Neal rides to town, learns that Joe is at the cabin and arrives to find him struggling with the wife. He shoots Joe, the shot calls the sheriff and his men—and then comes the surprise climax and the punch that will fascinate your fans. Book this quick and boost it hard.

Two One-Reel Joker Comedies

Wm. Franey in "Behind the Map" and Gale Henry in "Madam Manager" —Released Week of August 20

Wm. Franey

DJA ever see Bill Franey teach school? Some teacher, believe me! He makes two mistakes. He makes love to the town bully's best girl, and the reason for his disappearance "Behind the Map," as the play is titled, has to do with a little black bottle Bill makes too frequent use of. When the map falls down Bill is sure in bad. This is a scream, with laughs every foot.

Gale Henry

EVERY one who has ever seen Gale Henry on the screen knows how fast she works, but she beats her record in this one-reel Joker—"Mrs. Madam Manager." She runs a theatre; bosses her hubby who leads the orchestra, sells tickets and collects them at the door; is stage hand and bill poster and usher and scrubwoman. What she does when hubby falls for a chorus girl makes good fun.

"A Five Foot Ruler"

Good Entertainment in this Two-Reel Victor—Week of August 20

CARTER DE HAVEN is a master of clever comedy drama. He is the "Five-Foot Ruler" in the Victor of that name and he rules a South American country as prime minister, having been given the post by his prospective father-in-law in gratitude for services. His father has disowned him. The old man owns mines in the little republic, and gets in bad with the natives. He comes for protection to the president who refers him to the prime minister—his own disinherited son. There is all kinds of comedy punch stuff thruout and the ending is a scream. Everyone will enjoy this hugely.

UNIVERSAL CURRENT EVENTS

OVER seas news is specially interesting just now and thousands of Exhibitors are taking advantage of the fact by booking Universal Current Events, the news weekly release that is featuring subjects which "are making the world's history" at the present day. American soldiers in France; the 4th of July celebration in Paris, with intimate views of Pershing, President Poincaire, Generals Pellatier and Petain; Marshal Joffre—such views as these, together with pictures of the activities of the Government in preparing for war are the sort of subjects that will pull the crowds into your theatre whenever shown. Book Current Events and popularize your house.

It is never possible to more than hint at the many fascinating subjects in this weekly review, because the Animated is live news that comes to you hot from the scenes of action, the same fresh news you get or expect in your morning paper. "Move Over"

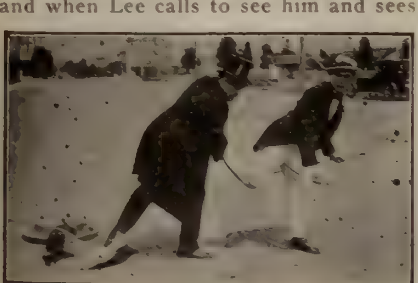
Nestor Comedy Released Week of Aug. 20 Reel of Good Fun

YOU have to hand it to the Nestor company for an unbroken line of successful one-reel comedies. They are sure fire—Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts—and contribute more than their share to the world's gaiety. In "Move Over," Eddie is in a hospital and when Lee calls to see him and sees how Edith and the other nurses make life delightful for Eddie, he changes places with that young man, who is convalescent and wants to go to the bal' game. They start to operate on Lee, and then the deception is discovered. It's a merry story, full of laughs. Grab it.



Eddie Is Caught on the Fly

Zoe Rae Feature Week of Aug. 20 — a Brilliant Smiles and Tears Drama

"The Golden Heart"

LITTLE ZOE RAE is one of those rare specimens—a child actress who can act. Real dramatic ability marks the work of this beautiful and popular little girl, who for more than a year has been a star in her own right. There is the real heart touch in the dramatic two-reel picture, "The Golden Heart," in which Little Zoe plays the lead. She is left an orphan and adopted by wealthy people, but her heart is with the friendly old pawnbroker down among the tenements and there is ample chance for her brilliant work. This will play to capacity. Book it.

CRUCIBLE OF KNOWLEDGE

ALLIGATOR catching is some sport according to the Screen Magazine which shows the chase, the capture and the skinning and mounting of these queer reptiles for the market. Other interesting subjects include a cooking lesson that will make the fans' mouths water; glass blowing (marvelously entertaining); the famous sculptor, Willie Hopkins, and his popular "miracles in mud," and many others. The fans have a very nice habit of demanding the Screen Magazine every week after they have once seen it, and it is good for capacity any day you book it. It has proven the most popular one-reel feature of the season.

An Alligator Farm

Fun on a Street Car

L-KO Release—Week of August 20 Has Prize Car Crew

THOSE L-KO comedians must get a lot of fun out of life, judging from the quantity of laughs they pass on to the public thru the medium of the screen. If you want a roaring two-reel comedy book "Street Cars and Carbuncles," featuring Eva Novak, Chas. Ryckman and Eddie Barry, directed by Dick Smith, under the supervision of J. G. Blystone. The rivalry between a horse car line and a jitney bus driver furnishes some of the funniest stuff you ever saw and some typical L-KO stunts add punches that are bully entertainment.

L-Ko's Daring Stunt.

POWERS

Give your fans the time of their lives by showing them the Powers Split Reel of the week of Aug. 20. The comic cartoon is "Col. Pepper's Mobilized Farm," and it's a real novelty. "The Home Life of the Spider" (Ditmar Educ.), is a marvelous study of insect life, a wonder that only moving pictures could show.

A serial that is very much alive, with a great box office star, a fine cast, perfect direction and attention compelling story, say expert trade paper reviewers of

PEARL WHITE

THOSE WHO SEE THE FIRST EPISODE WILL SEE THE REST, SAYS THE "MIRROR": "A serial to develop continuous patronage must contain a number of things: first, a story that holds the interest; second, a star that is popular, and lastly, action. 'The Fatal Ring' fulfills all these rules. It contains a strong amount of mystery and certainly a large amount of action. If an exhibitor can get a house full of patrons to see the start of this serial the ones who will not follow the serial thereafter will not be in a minute minority if there are any at all."

A TREAT IS IN STORE FOR LOVERS OF SERIALS, SAYS THE "TRADE REVIEW": "'The Fatal Ring' gives promise of being one of Pathes best serials. A treat is in store for lovers of the continued story. The most noticeable point in the opening chapters is action and this is continued with a vengence until the very last. There is not a moment's drag. The staging and direction are well nigh perfect in every detail. The acting is exceptional. Pearl White is seen in one of her best roles and that her name is a drawing card is unquestioned. 'The Fatal Ring' can be placed in the class of box office attractions."

IT IS VERY MUCH ALIVE AND THE ATTENTION IS FIRMLY CAUGHT, SAYS THE "WORLD": "'The Fatal Ring' starts off with every indication of possessing the qualities beloved by the followers of the continued-next-week picture. It is very much alive at the beginning and before the first installment is over the attention is firmly caught. The cast is a fine one. Aside from the one and only Pearl White, Earle Foxe, Ruby Hoffman, Warner Oland, and Henry Gsell have important parts."

PEARL WHITE RETURNS TO HER OWN AGAIN WITH STUNTS, THRILLS AND MYSTERY, SAYS THE "MOTION PICTURE NEWS:" "Pearl White returns to her own again —her own being, of course, a serial via 'The Fatal Ring'. There are stunts in it, thrills in it, and there is mystery in it. The fearless Pearl, swinging around on chandeliers and bowling over swarthy men as if they were so many ten pins, behaves very much like a female Fairbanks. A fine cast."

Goldwyn Pictures

Measuring Goldwyn Pictures in Dollars

EVERY exhibitor in America knows the tremendous box-office value of Goldwyn's first four releases, besides having this organization's pledge of still greater productions for the future.

"POLLY OF THE CIRCUS," starring Mae Marsh, is Margaret Mayo's greatest play—a play that made a fortune in the theatre for its author and producers. Here you have the combination of a world-known author and star in a production that proved its value across a continent.

"BABY MINE," starring Madge Kennedy, is the greatest farce comedy success in the history of the American theatre. Again you obtain the value of Margaret Mayo's popularity and see for the first time on the screen the most brilliant comedienne of our generation.

"FIGHTING ODDS" brings to the screen for the first time Maxine Elliott, America's most famous beauty and a stage favorite on two continents. Goldwyn has added to her attraction value by providing her with a powerful play by Roi Cooper Megrue and Irvin S. Cobb, two of the world's most popular authors.

"THE SPREADING DAWN," a famous Saturday Evening Post story, introduces Jane Cowl as a Goldwyn star, thus combining the assets of the greatest emotional actress in the American theatre with a tremendously advertised literary success.

These and all other Goldwyn productions will be advertised and promoted on a larger scale than has ever before been attempted by any producing organization. Every exhibitor knows what this means to his box-office

Two Goldwyn Pictures Win $728,000 in Contracts

GOLDWYN'S only trade showing in all America to date is the one held last week in Chicago when an invited group of exhibitors saw Madge Kennedy in "Baby Mine" and Mae Marsh in another production not yet announced by name to the public. As a result of this one Chicago showing Goldwyn booked contracts in a single afternoon aggregating $728,000.

In other words: Goldwyn Pictures sell themselves on sight to the biggest and ablest exhibitors of the nation; sell themselves through sheer merit, through their strength and beauty, and because they reveal in every foot of their length the fact that skilled producers have put their hearts and brains into the making of them.

When, within the next few days, Goldwyn Pictures are revealed at trade showings in our twenty-five offices in North America even you cannot conceive of the sensation they will create, or estimate the volume of bookings these showings will induce.

We have been truthful and accurate about Goldwyn Pictures. We have awaited their completion before announcing their virtues. . . . And Robert Lieber, the great Indianapolis exhibitor, voices the opinion of hundreds of exhibitors when he says: "Goldwyn Pictures are better than you ever said they would be."

MABEL NORMAND

A screen celebrity without an equal; a personality unduplicated in the great, wide world of the screen and now an exclusive star in Goldwyn Pictures. She is an artist of international reputation and drawing power and destined, in Goldwyn Pictures, to be an even greater favorite than at any previous time in her career.

The greatest newspapers throughout the world pay tribute to her charm and personality in the following manner:

KANSAS CITY STAR: "Nowhere is there a comedienne who, on the screen, possesses one-half as much humor and appeal as Mabel Normand."

ST. LOUIS GLOBE-DEMOCRAT: "Mabel Normand's return to the screen will be a big event * * * here is a star who counts her friends by the million."

LOS ANGELES TIMES: "It will be interesting to see how much greater popularity Mabel Normand can achieve, for already her popularity has passed beyond the limits of measurement."

MANITOBA FREE PRESS: "In all Canada there is no bigger favorite than Mabel Normand. Where can one look to discover her equal?"

CHICAGO EVENING POST: "Mabel Normand joins Goldwyn's imposing array of stars. * * * Each new Goldwyn artist brings new delights for the screen audiences of the country."

PITTSBURG LEADER: "Goldwyn, like most mortals, worships at the shrine of the great god, Personality—Mabel Normand is its latest star and its others, of great fame, are Mae Marsh, Jane Cowl, Madge Kennedy, Mary Garden and Maxine Elliott."

These comments, taken from hundreds, represent the opinions of 10,000,000 of America's vast motion picture audience.

TRIANGLE

Our Reasons for Reissuing Fairbanks and Hart Pictures

These pictures were originally sold on the TRIANGLE program at equitable prices. Our exhibitors appreciated this and have requested us to reissue them. They know TRIANGLE and believe in its policy.

How many film corporations bear this same reputation today? How many have given you consistently good pictures at equitable prices? How many stars whose reputations you have established have continued to be offered to you at the same prices that you were paying while helping to make these stars?

Some producers claim that exhibitors are a "BUNCH OF SHEEP". To them the picture business is not a real business, but a game.

Do you know that arbitrary prices have already been placed on your house? How long will you stand this treatment? Have you figured how much will be left FOR YOU after paying your film bills for the privilege of showing certain stars?

Now here's the question for you to answer—ARE YOU GOING TO BECOME A PARTY TO IMPOSSIBLE PRICES?

Some producers say that TRIANGLE is the stumbling block in their path. They may be guessing today but they will know tomorrow that TRIANGLE went into this business to make it a real business and not an old-time Western stage-coach fiasco. TRIANGLE has nothing to conceal—our cards are all on the table and our hats in the ring.

You can buy TRIANGLE service at equitable prices. It will consist of the best productions that we are able to make. Yes, and you can buy Hart and Fairbanks pictures, but you can't buy them on the open booking plan. You must take the entire series. There is no "joker" in this.

former confidant of Rasputin, the Czar and Czarina

PHOTOGRAPHED BY J. ROY HUNT

Gregory Rasputin, the uncouth peasant and sham saint wormed his way into the Czar's court by playing on the superstitious credulity of the Imperial pair. He won their confidence by predicting the long-desired birth of a son, and then cruelly victimized the Czarina by pretending that the life of her child depended on him, and fostered this delusion with greater cruelty by alternately poisoning the Czarevitch and letting him get better.

A COMEDY ACTRESS possessing all the charm and ability of a big-feature star is indeed a rarity. But it is the rare cleverness of the Christie scenarios, the rare youth and capability of the Christie casts and the rare directing skill of *Al. E. Her individual superiority combines happily with the superior stories, casts and direction that make the very name CHRISTIE COMEDIES identical with the word superior.

Facts and Comments

THE insinuations and intimations of President Ochs and some of his friends regarding the split at Chicago, through which they are trying to spread the idea that it was engineered by and carried out in the interest of the trade papers, are most laughable and absurd. To say that men like Messrs. Wells, Varner, Rembusch, Momand, Wonders, Fait, Crandall and others were the tools of trade papers or of any other outside interest is so ridiculous and nonsensical that it seems foolish to even refer to it. It does serve, however, as another shining example of those tactics and methods of the league president to which we already have called attention in several previous issues.

IF FILM manufacturers and producers would only do a little direct and personal interviewing among intelligent theater patrons they would be convinced for all time to come as to the necessity for clean and wholesome pictures. A prominent business man put the matter very clearly the other day when he said that a couple of years ago he used to go to see pictures as often as twice or thrice weekly, but now he does not go that often in a month. He and his family have become disgusted with the present day run of films depicting almost exclusively marital infidelity and conditions that undermine the home life. A few weeks ago the writer heard practically the same criticism from another gentleman when he said that he had reached that point where he was afraid to take his wife and daughters to their neighborhood picture theater until he had first seen the program himself. And the theater referred to was in a first-class suburb and ran the highest class of present day realeases.

THE advisability of organization on a sound basis among exhibitors is becoming more and more evident. That the Exhibitors' League has been cursed by so much inside politics for practically all the years of its existence, and never more so than at present, is to be regretted. This condition is the one thing more than all others that has handicapped the exhibiting end of the industry and prevented it from assuming its rightful place in trade representation. Not only this, but organizations representing other branches of the industry have been so far unable to consult with any really representative organization of exhibitors. This is a condition that should be remedied without further delay, and we hope it will.

* * *

JUDGING from our correspondence and from actual conditions in the east here it is quite evident that the hot weather slump in the exhibiting end of the business has not been so severe as last season. The epidemic of last year had much to do with the drop in theater attendance and fortunately we are, as far as can be seen at present, to be free from this pitiful scourge of the children this year. All of which would seem to indicate that the resumption of business this fall will be more rapid and undoubtedly in larger volume. Exhibitors everywhere should, in our opinion, anticipate a season of good business.

* * *

ELSEWHERE in this issue the plans of the new American Exhibitors' Association are outlined. We recommend these to the careful consideration of all exhibitors throughout the country.

* * *

THERE is another angle on the question of exhibitors' organization that we would like to call attention to at this time. There is a good deal of truth in the claim that heretofore a large proportion of the bigger men representing the larger interests in the exhibiting end of the business have not taken any interest in the cause of exhibitors' organization. It is probably true that only a few of the more prominent exhibitors have so far identified themselves with the cause of the exhibitor. We believe this is a condition that should be remedied, as the smaller exhibitor and the large number of smaller houses throughout the country are a most necessary and integral part of the business. For this reason we hope to see exhibiting interests, such as represented in the First National Circuit, more actively interested in the cause of exhibitor organization in the immediate future.

High Class Exhibition

By Louis Reeves Harrison

GIVE the ordinary man a choice as to where he may live and he will instinctively select surroundings of beauty in preference to those of ugliness, but utility counts heavily with him. It is not from choice, but from necessity, that he often plants his home where environment affords him little pleasure. The positive character of daily occupation thus harshly limits his enjoyment of life. He gets so sick of hideous monotony on all sides of his dwelling place that he goes to the picture show for a refreshing glimpse of existence in its more attractive aspects. Still more do decent women, with their inborn desire for cleanliness, love what delights the eye.

Back in the days of the one-reel photoplay, with a few exceptions, the indoor settings were disgusting when not ridiculous, and the outdoor backgrounds so revolting and out of the mood of the story that only the new art's novelty saved it, but there has been a gradual change for the better—it is no longer a question of photographing something, but of having something worth photographing before beginning to turn the crank of a moving picture camera. There are today some veritable pictures presented on the screen, thrilling the spectator with their beauty instead of dulling his senses with mechanical repetition.

First-class producers have come to recognize the necessity of true artistry in an entertainment, and many struggling little exhibition enterprises would gain a solid underpinning if more thought was devoted to artistry of presentation. Conceding that interest in the pictured story is of first importance, people attending the place where it is shown are affected by their surroundings from the moment they enter the theater.

Most of the theaters first provided for the exhibition of moving pictures were makeshifts, mere alterations from store buildings or other business structures, from which the audience was glad to get away as soon as its members had seen all they wanted on the screen. This might seem desirable at first thought, but it is bound to leave an unfavorable effect in the end and lead people to go where they get the most comfort, the most courtesy and the most satisfactory accommodations. Audiences leave the sordid and ugly vulgarities of life for mental refreshment, and they are insensibly affected by their immediate surroundings when they go out for a pleasant evening at the show place.

Some of the theaters which have been especially constructed for the exhibition of pictures have had dumped into them whatever the contractor could purchase at the lowest possible cost to himself, with a lot of ginger-bread decorative schemes vulgarizing, rather than beautifying the edifice. No matter what the structure for public entertainment, its artistic fitness, quite as well as its general utility, should be reflected in its design—it should suit the ideals for which it is built.

Going into a "dump" of any kind, whether a gloomy hall of Puritanical severity, or a receptacle for discarded theatrical rubbish, the people get an effect which is bound to influence them and their judgment of what is shown on the screen. Many a fine painting has been unappreciated from the lack of a suitable frame or from the absence of any at all. If our products are to be greatly improved, reflecting a progressive public taste, the places of exhibition might as well keep pace with that spirit of progress. Nothing would be lost if they led the way with houses of dignity, refinement and good taste.

It goes without saying that locations count, especially in large cities. I happen to know of an interesting case. A large theater in a populous center, accessible because of converging lines of travel, on a street filled with passers-by flourished in spite of poor shows, bad ventilation and a brutal indifference to the comfort of patrons. The old trick of keeping the people in line at the box office was worked every evening and a complaint of discourtesy on the part of an attendant was laughed to scorn. Neighborhood people became disgusted and wondered in mild good nature how the management of such a place got away with it.

A lot of mysterious work went on a block away and one night a new and rival theater opened with high prices, but with fine ventilation, courteous attendants, comfort rooms for both sexes, and an auditorium built and decorated on lines sincere, pleasing and based on true artistic principles. It drew tremendous patronage from the outset and closed the old house in little less than one year. There was nothing about the place to give a man of intelligence mental indigestion, and its good cheer appealed to the less discriminating mass of motion-picture fans.

Neighborhood people, especially those of good taste, gave the new place their solid support, and the others followed like sheep—the easily pleased goes where the crowd goes. They gradually abandoned the hideous old theater—they followed where quality led the way. An exhibitor in a favorable location thus increases his support, and one less fortunately placed may overcome the peril of limited patronage by drawing from other neighborhoods through the steady fame he is bound to gather when he proves his superiority of presentation, his finer selective taste in subjects and his sincere desire to please the public.

There are many such cases, really beautiful houses, superior to the average theaters, affording a sense of charm by themselves and conferring dignity on the pictures shown. To generally realize the ideal presentation of our best releases, thus winning the lasting respect of a patronage very much to be desired, these best examples should be studied. They are designed to put almost any audience in a state of pleased receptivity. They foster good feeling toward the splendid young art in whose evolution we are privileged to participate; they are educational in the matter of public taste, and they evoke a response from the public wherever they exist which is a source of pronounced financial satisfaction to their owners and managers.

MARK THE PROPHECY—It is only a question of time when the best of such houses, especially those avoiding meaningless and rank sensational releases, will reach out so strongly to the real spirit of our people that they will become social centers in their way, entertaining while enlightening, a source of such fine happiness to those who attend, that intermissions and ample lobbies will come into vogue, with a neighborhood commingling which will make each such place a social factor in our daily lives.

To this end delightful music and sincere courtesy on the part of attendants will materially contribute, as they are already doing in first-class exhibitions. The keynote of exhibition is almost exactly that of successful production—SINCERITY. Even when a man does not know exactly how to suit his patrons, he becomes a winning personality himself when he shows he is really trying his best. The average American has, what the European rarely has, an amusing sense of his own imperfections, hence his generosity to the man of honest effort.

Through the Periscope

By Sam Spedon

NOW that we have returned from the "firing line" to the quietude of our sanctum-sanctorum, we are pondering over the many things we heard and saw in Chicago. We heard and saw so much it is impossible to say all we would like to at one sitting. We offer for your consideration just a few optimistic and philosophical thoughts that may be worth your while.

Who Knows?

Any man or body of men has a perfect right to start a trade paper, a new exhibitors' organization or anything else if it is done on a business basis, fairly, squarely and above board. If an enterprise or organization succeeds on its merits and proves itself superior to others it will and must gain the respect, approval and support to which it is justly entitled. Any organization formed for the betterment of the industry, founded and grounded on right policies, has every chance in the world to establish itself, all things being equal.

There is a division in the National Exhibitors' League of America, and now we have with us the American Exhibitors' Association, which promises to show us what a national exhibitors' organization should be. We hope it will, and we shall watch its progress with much interest, not because we love the old league less, but because we love the exhibitors more; if it benefits them more it will be for the good of all.

All advancement in the progress of the world has been punctuated by wars or upheavals of some kind, and who knows what this recent disturbance in the National League may presage for the good of all concerned. Surely those who have the interests of the exhibitors at heart cannot be jealous or disgruntled if the new exhibitors' association helps the exhibitors and accomplishes things for their betterment, any more than a parent can be jealous of his own offspring if it surpassed him in its usefulness and success. We gave the old man a chance; why not give the "Kid" a show?

We Must Admit It.

At all conventions and assemblies there are a certain few who are prone to antagonize, right or wrong. These few are a disturbing element for some reason or other. The very sound of their voices is discordant, and they always try to impress others with a sense of their self-importance.

If they were sincere in their purposes and displayed judgment and logic in voicing their opinions instead of airing their sentiments and grievances like a lot of spellbinders or ward politicians we might regret their silence. Men of this type should be quieted in all conventions and assemblages, or persuaded to make their sentiments and grievances known to some other member who might speak for them, for the sake of harmony, even though it be at the great self-sacrifice in not hearing themselves talk.

Not a Plaything.

Let us put away childish things and act after the manner of men, full grown and of lawful age. We are no longer in our infancy. We have ceased to crawl; we are at last able to stand on our hind feet, upright and man fashion. Put away petty jealousies, criminations and recriminations. We have among us a lot of big men who are trying and doing things for the industry. We also have in our midst a lot of "boobies" who are envious of those who succeed, where others have failed, accusing the successful ones of depriving them of the credit of accomplishing what they found impossible to do. The motion picture is no longer a plaything in the hands of "children." It is time we sustain the dignity of the industry and conduct ourselves as men of business and business affairs.

An Acknowledged Compliment.

We attended a luncheon at the Hamilton Club given to a party of representative stars and press people, on Friday, July 20. It wasn't the first time the motion picture players have been received by this great organization of Chicago's leading business men and one of the strongest republican units of the United States. The representative of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD was invited to a seat at a table with members of the club, which was accepted with much appreciation as a compliment to the motion picture industry, as an evidence that it was recognized as a business by business men, and your humble scribe so acknowledged it when called upon to speak.

Come Again.

The recent convention at Chicago revealed among the delegates a whole lot of good material and ability that ought to be cultivated. Never before has there been seen at a convention such a personnel of keen and smart looking business men; many of them from the West and South had never before attended a national convention of exhibitors.

Veni, Vidi, Vici.

No one attended the national convention in a fairer and more neutral state of mind, entirely impersonal and impartial in our views and devoid of all prejudice. We must admit, however, that we recognized from the beginning a suppressed determination on the part of both factors to carry out their intentions at any cost. We learned afterward that the supporters of the president were determined to re-elect him to vindicate his last year's administration and secure the convention's indorsement of The Trade Review as the piece de resistance of his administration. On the other hand the opposition was diametrically opposed to Mr. Ochs' re-election, and did not recognize the Trade Review as a factor in the affairs of the exhibitors' league, in fact did not think that any trade paper should enter into its business affairs. Mr. Ochs' supporters accomplished their objects; elected their candidate, and indorsed his trade paper, and these were the only tangible things done at the convention during the three days it was in session; everything else went by the board.

Ponderings.

"No man is bigger than the organization." The fellow who said this said a mouthful.

No man is sufficient in himself. Without organization and co-operation he is helpless.

"A house divided against itself cannot stand." Truer words were never spoken.

"Back!" said the king to the incoming tide, and then he was submerged by the onrushing waves. He was over his head, and they didn't have a pulmotor to revive him.

In the Interest of the "Square Deal"

WHEN the official document known as the president's annual address is presented before an exhibitors' convention and made a part of the proceedings of that meeting it has been the custom of the Moving Picture World to print said document in full, provided it presented a record of genuine achievement or contained information of real value to the trade. Unfortunately the paper alleged to be the "president's address," which was read at the recent Chicago convention of the Exhibitors' League, did not measure up to the requirement, so it was given only passing mention in what is generally conceded to be the best story printed of the Chicago fiasco.

We refer to the aforesaid document as the "alleged president's address" for the reason that we do not believe it was written by the president, Mr. Ochs. Whatever objections we may have to Mr. Ochs in his capacity as president of the Exhibitors' League we have never included in that category such manifestations of moral obliquity as lying or unfairness. Whatever else Lee Ochs may have done that has not appealed to us as the proper thing to do under certain circumstances, we have never believed that he would tell an untruth. He has been hailed as the apostle of "The Square Deal" by his friends; he admits it himself and we do not deny that he is such—from his point of view. Hence we say he could not have written the said "address."

We wish to record the belief in all sincerity that if Lee Ochs had written the "address," credited to him and read at the convention by another person, he would have written a true story of his year of effort and it would have been the more forceful by reason of being truthful—and of no discredit to him.

A further and last reason why we believe Lee Ochs did not write the said "president's address" is because it is, in certain particulars, untrue. That portion of it which is not pointed falsehood is the mere vaporing of an optimistic brain to which the wish is the father of the thought expressed—written of things as one would like them to be, not as they are. So we say again: Lee Ochs did not write the "president's address" attributed to him because he is an honest man and always for "The Square Deal."

Now, we have said that the aforesaid "president's address" is, in certain particulars, untrue. Our reason for mentioning these particulars is that they concern the Moving Picture World, so let us see: In the fourth paragraph of the written report a statement begins as follows:

> The outstanding achievements of the administration was the founding of a publication devoted to the interests of the motion picture exhibitor. As the exhibitor grew to be a more important figure in the industry he found it was necessary to voice his needs and grievances in the motion press. This meant more than the mere writing of letters to the editor. It was felt there should be a publication avowedly in the interest of the exhibitor, protecting his rights and aiding him in the successful prosecution of his business. How weak the position of the exhibitor really was through the lack of a journal courageous enough to represent him and his interests was plainly shown when the Motion Picture Board of Trade, an organization of manufacturers, decided to fight the annual exposition which had been held by the exhibitors' organization in the city of New York for a period of seven years.
> In order to ruin the prospects of the exhibitors' exposition the Executive Secretary of the Board of Trade bought a good deal of space in the Moving Picture World and the Moving Picture News, and both these journals permitted the unrestricted use of their advertising columns by the agent of the Board of Trade in furtherance of his plans. The advertisements published by the Board of Trade in these papers were controversial in character, directly aimed at the exhibitors' exposition, partisan and biased. When the exhibitors, acting through their committees, sought space in the same publications they were met with ridicule and opposition and the chairman of the Press Committee, Mr. Jack Koerpel, was ordered out of the office of the Moving Picture World.

The statement that the Moving Picture World granted unrestricted use of its advertising columns to the Board of Trade is untrue; the statement that the advertisements of the Board of Trade printed in the Moving Picture World were "controversial in character, directly aimed at the exhibitors' exposition, partisan and biased" is untrue.

The statement that "When the exhibitors, acting through their committee, sought space in the same publications they were met with ridicule and opposition and the chairman of the press committee, Mr. Jack Koerpel, was ordered out of the Moving Picture World office" is untrue.

The facts concerning the above untruthful statements are: The Board of Trade contracted for a certain amount of advertising space in The Moving Picture World at the regular rates and paid for it; its advertising copy was straight advertising for the Board of Trade show, as the files of The Moving Picture World will prove.

The Exhibitors' committee contracted for a certain amount of advertising space in The Moving Picture World, and a substantial balance of the account remains unpaid to this day. Mr. Koeppel entered The Moving Picture World office and attempted to bluff the advertising manager into accepting an objectionable advertisement. He was informed that his boisterous manner was resented and that the copy he submitted would not be printed in the form it was written. He departed, but returned the next day in a calmer frame of mind and with suitable copy which was accepted and printed.

In the next paragraph of the "address" will be found this sentence:

> The Moving Picture World, in its news columns, resorted to actual misrepresentation. The Moving Picture World stated that Richard G. Hollaman, manager of the Grand Central Palace, had declared that the exposition of the exhibitors had been abandoned because "Binder was too strong for the exhibitors." Richard G. Hollaman, manager of the Grand Central Palace, immediately repudiated the words that had been put in his mouth.

The facts are that a reporter of The Moving Picture World was sent to ask Mr. Hollaman if a report that the exhibitors, as a result of negotiations then pending with the Board of Trade, had decided to abandon their exposition. Mr. Hollaman confirmed the report in the presence of a mutual friend who had previously introduced the World reporter to him. Subsequently, following the publication of the conversation of Mr. Hollaman, the World was requested by him in a telephone conversation to deny what he had told our reporter Replying to this request Mr. Hollaman was told that if he would write The Moving Picture World a letter signed by him to the effect that the story was untrue the World would print his letter.

Mr. Hollaman never wrote that letter of denial.

We pass over the remainder of the "address" as the mere expression of a hope, until we reach the final paragraph, which reads:

> The president begs to point out that through the creation of the Exhibitors' Trade Review every other publication > in the field has been compelled to devote more space and more thought to the welfare of the exhibitor, and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League in consequence has within the last six months received more publicity than in all the years before.

To all of which we may say: Bushwah.

Knowing Mr. Ochs to be honest, upright and square in all his business dealings our wonder is that he permitted such a document to be issued in his name.

Reviews Both Grave and Humorous

By EDWARD WEITZEL.

MUCH water has flowed under the bridges of the world since it was first set down that unconscious humor is of the superior grade. Many examples of this fact are to be found upon the headstones scattered among the cemeteries of the earth, and a surprisingly large number of gravediggers have been known to deliver themselves of solemn remarks that afforded the hearers an inward chuckle of deep and abiding mirth. In his admirable book, "Shadows of the Stage," the late William Winter tells of a visit to the graveyard where the celebrated American tragedienne Charlotte Cushman was buried. The aged gravedigger that accompanied Mr. Winter to where the finest Lady Macbeth of her day was sleeping her last sleep stood quietly by as the poet-critic read the inscription on the headstone. The follower of Adam's profession then delivered himself of this brief eulogy of America's greatest tragic queen: "She was considerable of a woman for a play-actress." Mr. Winter's comment on the eulogy was quite as brief and equally comprehensive: "Well, she was."

The writer had an experience with an ancient maker of graves of much the same type in Trinity Cemetery, New York. Entering the gate at Amsterdam Avenue he strolled along the well-kept paths and let the quiet and the beauty of the place refresh both mind and body. All the noise and unrest of the city seemed miles away, and his most remote thought was of an adventure that would be fraught with humor of any description. But such was the case. After half an hour's stay something of the peace of the place was communicated to the stroller under the trees, and he looked about for a gate that would save the retracing of his steps. None was in sight, so he applied to an ancient gentleman who was slowly and painstakingly clipping the grass on a nearby mound. When asked if there was a gate in the vicinity the bent old man spoke no word but laid down his shears, rose painfully to his feet and shuffled off down a winding path, his questioner following doubtfully behind. Finally the guide stopped, pointed solemnly to an exit near the lower end of the cemetery, and gave this interesting information: "There's a gate, sir, but it's locked!" He then turned away without a smile and shuffled back to his task. The writer also returned the way he had come—but no longer in a serious mood. That evasive but ever recurring thing, unconscious humor, had pursued and overtaken him even in this hallowed spot.

And it is just so in the big outside world. We take ourselves and our work seriously, all of us, and expect other people to receive it in the same spirit. But a touch of unconscious humor creeps into our efforts and a smile is born when we intended to engender nothing but grave thoughts. Reviewers are not exempt from this, try they ever so hard. And it surely is to laugh when one reads a laudatory review in a certain trade publication of a picture that was hurried back to the studio after the first public showing and many radical and needful changes made in it after the trade paper's reviewer had accorded it high praise. There is unconscious humor in such a bit of writing, be the scribe ever so grave and his editor the firm foe of any touch of levity in the reviews of the entire staff.

Hitchcock Presides at Screeners' First Reel

Comedian Makes Fun in Introducing Acts at Enjoyable Initial Annual Affair of the Club.

RAYMOND HITCHCOCK was a large part of the show at the First Reel of the Screen Club at the Casino theater on the evening of Sunday, July 29. It had been arranged that the comedian should alternate with James J. Morton as announcer of the acts. Mr. Morton's failure to appear provided Mr. Hitchcock an opportunity to tell the audience what he would say when Mr. Morton should arrive. It was the opening remark of a steady flow of banter and Hitchcockian chatter and story which kept the house in an uproar between acts. And it was a good show, too.

Among the entertainers was John Thomas, who sang two songs in fine voice and found the audience most loath to permit him to retire from the stage. Mr. Thomas was not on the printed program, but the keen eye of Hitchcock lighted on him out front and demanded his appearance on the stage. It was one of the enjoyable events of the night. Hal Crane and company, in "An Episode of the War," written and staged by Mr. Crane, made a distinct hit with their dramatic and moving sketch.

Gus Edwards' springtime review, "Around the Circle" was a dainty bit and loudly applauded. Alice Brady was introduced as the daughter of a famous father with whom the announcer was under the impression he had longer been acquainted than had Miss Alice. Miss Brady spiritedly sang two songs, the latter of which, the "Marseillaise," brought the house up standing. Harry Benham, accompanied by Sydney Bracy, finely sang two songs. Edna Whistler was given a hearty reception when she returned to the side of the stage after finely executing two songs.

Jean Sothern sang and danced and made a hit. The five Mazettis, in acrobatics, put over stunts that thrilled as well as entertained. Frank Bushman made a short talk, which afforded Mr. Hitchcock an opportunity to free his mind on what had been accomplished by legislators and women's organizations in the way of temperance. "The W. C. T. U. is always wrong," said the comedian. "The movies have done more to kill liquor than they have. The most potent factor in this temperance movement has been the movies. They have 'busted' more saloons than has the W. C. T. U. or whatever you call it. Legislative efforts to reform things are not worth a tinker's dam. They are only another form of political highway robbery."

Other entertainers were Josephine Earl, Mr. Miner, Frank Holland and John Davidson. The First Reel was declared to be a success. In charge of the arrangements were Edward C. White, as general manager; Frank Beresford, stage manager, and Albert Roccardi, assistant stage manager.

J. B. MAXWELL, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF PARALTA.

Carl Anderson, president of Paralta Plays, announces that Joseph B. Maxwell has been appointed to the recently created office of executive director of that company. Mr. Maxwell is widely known in the theatrical profession as a producer of vaudeville acts.

FIVE MEN FROM STUDIO NOW WEAR KHAKI.

Mobilization of the National Guard and Enlistments Find Five Paramount Men Answering Call at Once.

MOBILIZATION of the New York National Guard and the activities of the various recruiting agents have accounted for the donning of khaki by five men at the Famous Players studio. One of the five is an actor and the four others are engaged in technical or manual work.

Adolphe Menjou, who appeared most recently in support of Marguerite Clark in the screen adaptation of "The Amazons," has joined the American Ambulance Corps, Cornell Unit No. 90, and expects to sail for France in a short time. From the ranks of the cameramen two recruits have been drawn, Paul Vogel, assistant cameraman to Joseph Kaufman, having joined the Eighth Coast Artillery, and Joseph Goodrich, assistant cameraman to Robert G. Vignola, having joined the United States Signal Corps, with the rank of sergeant. George Vandermunder, chief of the property corps, joined the Eighth Coast Artillery, and George Jason is a member of the First Field Artillery.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

WRITE US EARLY AND OFTEN

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD carries the most complete record of Exhibitors' News. This department aims at being the fullest and fairest chronicle of all the important doings in the ranks of organized exhibitors. To keep the department as complete and as useful as it is now we request the secretaries of all organizations to favor us with reports of all the news. Coming events in the ranks of the organized exhibitors are best advertised in this department of the Moving Picture World.

Principles of American Association Stated

Frank J. Rembusch, as Chairman of the Committee on Organization Gives General Ideas and Purposes of New Exhibitors' Organization.

THE Moving Picture World is in receipt of a statement from Frank J. Rembusch, president of the Indiana Exhibitors' League and recently appointed chairman of the committee on organization of the new American Exhibitors' Association, which states tersely the general ideas and principles upon which the new organization is based and something of the plan of organization to be followed. The statement reads as follows:

"The purpose of the organization is to improve and protect the business interests of its members, and to care for the interests of the exhibitor first but work in harmony with all branches of the industry.

"Only bona fide motion picture exhibitors can obtain membership, which means theater owners or accredited managers. A member discontinuing in the motion picture theater business will immediatly forfeit his membership.

"This National body shall work to assist the United States Government in times of war or great crisis; to demand and encourage the production and showing of pictures of a high moral character; to adjust and arbitrate differences between different branches of the industry; to work against adverse legislation and legalized censorship and in every way to be a medium that will uplift and promote the prosperity and best interests of the motion picture industry.

"This organization shall be incorporated in regular business form and shall not be used for any money making schemes or profit. It shall depend for its support upon its members through subscriptions and donations.

"The plan of organization is such that the National body can never be controlled by a few and a packed convention will be impossible.

"The plan will be such that the organization will be more representative and large cities will not be able to control delegations as they have in the past because the very large cities will be given a charter and must operate under separate charter from the balance of the State.

"For example, the city of New York will have a separate charter and the State of New York will have a separate charter. Past experience has proven that the conditions under which an exhibitor in smaller cities and large cities work are different, therefore both work better and more efficient as separate bodies, and the larger cities have been able to bring an immense delegation to conventions and in that way control the organization. At the same time we are giving the larger cities the proper power and consideration by giving them a separate charter equal to the State.

"Delegates to the National convention will be more evenly distributed because representation will be based on the following plan:

"Each charter shall be entitled to two delegates, one the State president and the other a delegate elected by the charter, and then each charter shall be allowed one delegate for each one hundred members.

"On this plan it will be impossible for one charter to have the power of selecting all of the committees doing the work of the convention with enough delegates to control the convention such as a few states did at the last convention of the old organization.

"The executive committee shall be composed of the presidents of the chartered branches and a plan will be inaugurated by which a referendum of votes by mail may be taken on urgent questions."

Wisconsin Goes to American

President Grauman of Milwaukee Association Says State Will Espouse New Organization at Once.

SEVERANCE of the Wisconsin and Milwaukee exhibitors from the national association was announced by Pres. Jack Grauman, Milwaukee Exhibitors' Association, who returned from the Chicago convention.

"All Wisconsin exhibitors will be organized along with plans suggested by the American Exhibitors' Association and will in a few weeks have formed the strongest exhibitors' organization in the entire country," said Mr. Grauman. "We have found that we cannot depend upon the National Association for help or protection which is now being governed by a small clique which runs the association for its own selfish interests. We are going to organize Wisconsin so that it will be absolutely independent of outside assistance. We will affiliate with the American Exhibitors for the handling of national questions. When these plans materialize, I am sure Wisconsin exhibitors will find that they do not need the national crowd. However, the Wisconsin members intend to hang on to their charter in the old association unless they are expelled.

J. E. Sherwood, Madison, Wis., was appointed as national director to the American Exhibitors' Association. This appointment will hold until the Wisconsin organization has been effected.

"It has been said that Wisconsin exhibitors are divided," continued Mr. Grauman, "but that rumor was put to naught in the Chicago convention by the solidity of the Wisconsin delegates. It makes little difference to us whether we retain our national charter or not. We never had a voice in the management of the old association and it is for this reason that we are forming the new and representative organization."

Brandt Talks on League Plans

Executive Secretary Says Organization Will Strive to Form Branch in Every State.

THERE were no important developments in New York last week in the breach between the factions of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America which resulted in the formation of the American Exhibitors' Association. David G. Rodgers of Minnesota has been appointed organizer of the former body and will develop the plans of the executive officers. William Brandt, the executive secretary of the League, already is at work on his new job. During the week Mr. Brandt has sent out to all state presidents the names of ten music publishers not affiliated with the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers. These ten firms will permit the use of their copyrighted music without license fee by any member of the League upon request. Each state president has been asked to notify all members of his state.

"I think by this time the wise men in both elements have come to realize that nothing can be gained through division of strength," said Mr. Brandt at his theater Friday night. "Whatever benefits accrue to exhibitors through the efforts of the League also will accrue to the men who walked out of the convention. Officially I have no knowledge such a thing as a split has occurred. To be sure, there has not yet been time for the holding of any state gatherings.

"Some of my best friends are on the opposite side of our house, and I cannot believe that when calmness prevails these men will continue to remain out of the League. My belief is that if you have a complaint against conditions the right thing and the most effective thing to do is to stay along and fight from the inside.

"We have some great plans maturing to bring into the League every state not now represented. I have even written a letter to the Philippines in an effort to bring in the picture theaters there. To Alaska has gone a letter to every exhibitor.

"Several very important questions affecting every exhibitor in the country will come up for consideration in the near future. These questions should be decided by a united exhibitors' body, not by a divided one. Already I have started to provide a business system for the League, and in the furtherance of this idea I have written to officials and to every prominent member asking suggestions. We are going to have a business administration. We have got big men among our officers. With the active cooperation of a board of directors such as we have if the organization does not become bigger and better during the year it will not be the fault of the officers."

Predicts Downfall of League

Percy W. Wells, President of North Carolina League, Gives It Twelve Months.

(From our regular N. C. correspondent.)

"I BELIEVE that the old National League will cease to exist within the next twelve months," declared Percy W. Wells, state president for North Carolina in the recently formed American Exhibitors' Association, to a representative of the Moving Picture World upon his return from Chicago this week.

"The kind of men we want in the American Exhibitors' Association—bona fide theater owners who have substantial investments in the industry and are therefore vitally and personally interested in the growth of the industry in a degree that would overshadow any selfish motives—cannot but see the necessity sooner or later of aligning themselves and their business with an organization that actually accomplishes things, and just as soon as we effect permanent organization, get National headquarters opened in New York and put an expert organizer in the field, I predict that they will all come a-running. They are bound to do this.

"We returned home well satisfied with the Chicago trip," continued Mr. Wells. "Although we spent much time and money on Mr. Varner's campaign for the presidency, this became of secondary importance when we arrived in Chicago and witnessed the opening sessions of the farce which was pulled off at the Coliseum under the respectable title of a 'convention.'

,"We were glad indeed to voluntarily sacrifice Mr. Varner's prospects as a presidential possibility in order that every possible obstacle to the forming of a new and effective organization might be swept away. Our fight, to begin with, was not for political or personal aggrandizement or domination of the exhibitors of the nation, and Mr. Varner's candidacy was launched with the sole purpose of trying to obtain relief from the dominating selfish interests back of the league as formerly constituted.

"The American Exhibitors' Association, I believe, has been launched along lines that are psychologically right and which will insure its becoming a power in the interest of the exhibitors of America. That bunch of earnest, conscientious business men who helped form its nucleus in Chicago last week augurs much for the ultimate success of the organization, and the more I think about its future prospects the more enthusiastic I become. The directors will meet within the next thirty days at a point yet to be determined and will then perfect all arrangements for permanent organization." D. M. BAINE.

Indiana Getting in Line

President Rembusch of the State League Advises Indiana Exhibitors of Plan to Aid Government and Urges Action.

AMONG the various activities of the United States Government in prosecuting the present conflict is that of food conservation. Various state committees have been formed to prosecute the work of conserving the country's market basket, but those committees are of a voluntary make-up and have no source of revenue beyond local contributions. In Indiana the committee on conservation has appealed to the motion picture exhibitors for aid in disseminating information and instructions. In response to this appeal President Rembusch of the Indiana League has issued the following letter to Indiana exhibitors:

Shelbyville, Int., July 24, 1917.

Dear Brother Exhibitors: The President of the United States has honored and recognized the motion picture industry as a great force in assisting the United States Governmemnt in the present world crisis. The exhibitors of the United States have been asked to work especially with the Committee on Public Information, Wm. A. Brady, chairman, and there will be two methods of distributing information. First, our screens (showing slides and short films). Second, four-minute talks in our theaters.

On Monday, July 28, your state president was called to Indianapolis by Dr. Barnard and other members of the Food Conservation Committee. Our first work is to assist this committee in enrolling the housewives of America. (Enrollment date is August 15.) Slides will be sent you this week. You are to begin showing them at once continuously until August 15, and then return the slides to Box 176, Shelbyville, Indiana.

The Conservation Committee has no funds to carry on this work and our organization is asked to finance same. These slides will cost about $250 for Indiana. Therefore, each and every exhibitor in the state is earnestly requested to immediately forward his dues of $12 a year, so that we will have available funds. (These dues may be paid $1 per month.)

In view of the fact that the United States Government has been lenient with the motion picture exhibitors on the recent proposed tax of 10 per cent. of gross receipts, which will probably not be passed because Congress appreciates the fact that this tax would undoubtedly ruin and bankrupt many theaters and put many theaters out of business, the same as it has in Canada, every exhibitor in Indiana and in the nation should show his appreciation and patriotism on this occasion by doing his bit in financing the work now required by the Government.

Your president will advance money to pay for these slides and trusts that a generous response will be forthcoming from all Indiana exhibitors, in the way of dues and donations.

A prominent member of the Food Conservation Board stated: "The motion picture industry has been under severe criticism in the past—perhaps oftimes rightly. The industry is asking for special consideration by the people in the way of liberal legislation. I believe everything asked for in reason will be granted if the motion picture industry shows itself worthy."

Therefore, please, 1st, run the slides; 2nd, on August 16 return the slides; 3rd (of greatest importance), "Do Your Bit Big" and help finance this splendid work. Fraternally yours,

INDIANA EXHIBITORS' ASSOCIATION,
F. J. Rembusch, President.

OREGON LEAGUE IS INCORPORATED.

Abraham Nelson, of Portland Oregon, attorney for the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oregon, has completed the incorporation of the organization and a plan has been worked out whereby each member will hold but one share of non-assessable stock, thus giving every theater equal voting power with the others in the League.

The officers of the new incorporation are the same as the officers of the association elected when it was first organized and the Portland members of the board of directors so far selected are C. W. Meighan, J. P. Parker, E. J. Myrick, J. B. Washtock and W. A. Ayres.

VIRGINIA CONVENTION DATES CHANGED.

Chesley Toney, secretary of the Virginia Exhibitors' League, announces that on account of conditions that have arisen since the Chicago convention the dates of the Virginia convention have been changed from August 27, 28 and 29 to August 30, 31 and September 1. The meeting will be held at Ocean View, Richmond, Va.

C. K. Y. Film Corporation Formed

Adolph Zukor Prime Factor in Company Which Will Purchase Clara Kimball Young's Productions.

A NEW distributing company, of which Adolph Zukor is the prime factor, has been organized under the laws of New York to market and distribute all Clara Kimball Young productions. It will be known as the "C. K. Y. Film Corporation," and has contracted to purchase outright eight or more pictures a year from Miss Young for four years.

Miss Young heads her own organization and dominates it completely, selecting her own stories and plays, her own directors and her own supporting company.

The first picture "The Marionettes," is being made in the Thanhouser studios at New Rochelle, and will be finished by September 1. In this connection an erroneous statement was made last week, to the effect that the Thanhouser studios had been leased outright. This is a mistake. It has been decided to make only the first one or two pictures in the east, and Miss Young contemplates making one picture in Porto Rico, some in California and two or three in other locations not yet decided upon.

"The Marionettes" is a play first produced in Paris, had a long run there and was later produced in this country under the name of "The Puppets," with Mme. Nazimova as the star.

Executive and publicity offices have been opened in Aeolian Hall, where Miss Young will transact all her business interests outside of the engaging and casting, which will be done at the studios.

Hart Controversy Reaches Court

Triangle Seeks to Prevent Artcraft from Employing Player and Thomas H. Ince from Making and Distributing Hart Pictures.

THE controversy over the services of William S. Hart reached the Federal District Court on Thursday, July 27, when the Triangle Film Corporation sought an injunction restraining Artcraft from employing Hart and also to prevent Thomas H. Ince making or distributing any pictures in which Hart appears.

The vital clause in the Hart contract with Triangle reads as follows: "This contract is made upon the condition and with the understanding that the employe will be supervised in his acting and work hereunder by Thomas H. Ince, the present managing producer of the Triangle studios at Culver City, Cal."

Triangle counsel claimed the Hart case was entirely different from the recent Fairbanks controversy, that the present case was a matter of malicious interference of Ince and Artcraft in the performance of the contract, and charged the two parties named with conspiracy to take away a property right. "Hart's services cannot be supplied by any one else." counsel declared.

Counsel for Artcraft insisted Hart's contract with Triangle was made upon the condition and understanding the player was to be directed by Ince. It was declared that Hart had declined an offer of $100,000 by Triangle to abrogate the clause, the player contending it was not a question of money, but of his artistic standing and his reputation

Counsel for Artcraft submitted affidavits and Triangle was given permission to answer these. Judge Manton reserved decision on the application for injunction.

Richardson Still on that Last Lap

He Makes Duluth, Minneapolis, St. Paul and Winona and Is Getting Nearer Home Every Day

Duluth, Minnesota.

FROM La Crosse, Wis., I went right through to Duluth, Minn., and at the depot found W. E. Hammond, business agent, Local Union 32, I. A. T. S. E., waiting with a buzz wagon, and very soon we had located our individual hay pile in the Spalding Hotel. One of the first items of information vouchsafed the editor by Brother Hammond was to the effect that what rest we would get in Duluth could be placed in our editorial eye and looked through without any trouble at all. And immediately he started out to put the threat into execution by buzz-wagoning us up around the boulevard which mounts the hills back of the city and circles around, disclosing a truly wonderful view.

When this was finished, we gathered Brother J. P. Shanahan, business agent for the stage-hand end of Local 32 into the midst of our gasoline cart and proceeded to inspect sundry theaters. Broadly speaking, auditorium lighting conditions in Duluth are "not so bad"; also in most instances they could be materially improved. Screens are almost invariably bordered with wide bands of black, and the pictures do not run to excess in size, all of which is good, and to the credit of the fair city of Duluth. Operating rooms vary from good to very poor, and equipment from good to just about the limit in the other direction.

At the Star Theater I found my old friend, Brother Clock, in a new guise. It sat on the right hand front corner of the stage. Its face was covered with black paper, upon which manager Nelson had pasted numerals cut from white oilcloth; also he had covered the hands with white oilcloth. About four feet in front of friend clock sat a baby spot, which projected red light to the clock face. It was an ideal arrangement. The effect was that of illuminated hands and numerals, with nothing else visible. My hat is off to Manager Nelson. It was a clever stunt. It was in this theater, too, that I found a portion of the house lighting to be designed on what was very nearly correct principles. Brother Nelson had the right idea, but had not carried it far enough. At the rear end of the auditorium, however, the thing was not so good, and I suggested that changes be made, which, if carried out intelligently, will give the Star excellent lighting, and lighting which will be along correct principles from the projection point of view.

In the operating room I found a unique stunt in the form of a regulator for machine speed where the machine is driven by a variable speed motor. In addition to the variable speed regulation, or rather as a refinement of or for it, Nelson has rigged a brake, as follows: To the base of his Powers Six mechanism, about one-quarter of an inch in front of the front edge of the fly wheel, he has attached an upright standard, of steel, about three-quarters of an inch wide, by one-sixteenth thick, reaching almost as high as the top of the fly wheel. To the upper end of this piece he has attached a brake shoe, which acts on the fly wheel. About one inch from the bottom he has passed a long threaded bolt through the metal of the brake staff, with a collar on either side of the brake staff. Back about two inches toward the lamphouse is another short standard, attached to the mechanism head base, near the top end of which is a hole, threaded, to receive the threads of the bolt. At the back end of the threaded bolt is a thumb wheel. The net result is that by giving this bolt a turn, the brake is made to exert more or less pressure, according to which way the bolt is turned, upon the fly wheel. This supplies a very minute regulation of machine speed, especially when taken in conjunction with the variable speed motor control.

At the Alhambra, in West Duluth, the operator, so the manager said, complained that, due to the glare of the rear inverted auditorium lighting fixtures he could not see his picture properly. I showed friend manager how this could very easily be overcome, and at the same time the lighting of the aduditorium be decidedly improved. Crossing over into Wisconsin we visited the Palace Theater in Superior. This is a nice house, and has an operating room which is in some respects "different." The room is large, and the machine is set about 3½ feet from the front wall. The projection ports are cut down to eliminate stray light, and most of the other things are as they should be, with the exception of too much light. R. J. Ellenson is operator.

Back over to Duluth we plowed, through nice soft, squashy Wisconsin mud, and made a call at the Strand, which has a good operating room, though badly located—too high. The observation ports are large, and the walls of the room are black. But the equipment—well, let us draw the curtain quickly after peeping at one Simplex, serial No. 918, and one Powers Six head, with a home made table supported by Powers Six legs, and a Motiograph lamp house and lamp. The lamp was so loose that it moved ⅜ of an inch sidewise. Fred Danciko was operator, and to his credit he was coaxing fairly good results out of this antiquated outfit.

The Lyric Theater has a good operating room, located opposite the screen. Its equipment is O. K., the ports are all right, and the screen result very good, though I have noticed a tendency on the part of most Duluth operators to be a little careless in the handling of their light, mainly, I think, due to an inclination to carry too small a spot, helped out by being obliged to give attention to other duties, such as rewinding, trimming lamps and threading machines, while the picture is running. B. Halloway is chief operator at the Lyric; J. D. Trembeth, assistant.

The Rex theater has splendid auditorium lighting. My compliments to its manager. One can see plainly the whole length of the house. The lighting is by means of amber colored bowls of leaded glass set into the high ceiling. It is about as satisfactory auditorium illumination as I have seen in a long time, and doesn't seem to affect the picture in the slightest degree. The glass is, of course, of a kind which gives diffused light. The piano sets at the left, and sidewise to the screen, thus minimizing the effect of its light upon the audience. I would like also to compliment the piano player, who was rendering real music, not merely pounding out a noise. There was no clock, and the exit lights were O. K. The operating room ventilation in this house was very, very bad indeed. This item should receive immediate attention. It is not exactly the correct thing to ask or expect an operator to work in an oven, particularly when that oven contains poisonous gases generated in the volatilization of carbons, plus foul air pulled in from the very hottest part of the auditorium.

I would like to compliment the Sunbeam Theater. Its operating room and equipment is in the nature of a classic. It ought to be presented, in its entirety, to some museum of antiquity. Its ceiling is approximately five feet eight inches from the floor. One machine consists of a Power's Six 114 head, upon which is a Motiograph 2,000-foot upper magazine, the lower one-fourth of which has been sawed off, presumably because the operating room was not high enough to accommodate the magazine in its entirety. The hole thus made had of course been stopped up with a piece of metal. This aggregation was helped out by Powers Five lamphouse, inside of which was a home-made lamp. The other machine was a Powers Six. Operator Walter Quick was actually getting reasonably fair results on the screen with this antediluvian equipment, which was supplied current by a new Wotton Twin Rexolux. Charles Harding is the other operator. The auditorium lighting of the Sunbeam is very bad, from the projection point of view. At the left of the screen, and very close to it, is an illuminated announcement board, and at the right is a bright exit light.

At the Zelda, Henry Gunther operator, there are a lot of red side lights, which are very bad, indeed. Red lights should never be allowed in an auditorium, except as exit signs. The Zelda has a good operating room. It is roomy as to size, its walls are black and its observation ports eighteen inches in width. Equipment O. K.

At the Grand I found something new, in the form of a child's playroom. This room is in charge of a nurse, and has a merry-go-round and a slide for the children to play upon. The operating room is excellent, and its equipment is up to date. Current is supplied by a Wotton Twin Rexolux. This room has really genuine, honest-to-gosh ventilation, fresh air being forced in by the intake fan and pumped out by the exhaust. The port shutters are hung by means of film links, located at the top of the inside of the upper magazines of the machines. Projection is in charge of Roy Brainerd, chief operator, and E. Poling, assistant. Brother Brainerd is the inventor of a most remarkable spotlamp, which same will be described in the projection department a little later on.

The Duluth boys had planned to have the banquet and address at the Duluth Auto Country Club, 12 miles north of the city, and about ¾ mile straight up. When the multitude had assembled in front of the Spalding Hotel at the grave-yawning hour of midnight, and the cars were loaded to the gunwales, preparatory to mounting the giant stair by means of which one crosses the hills back of Duluth, it was found that a fog, considerably more dense than the smell of limburger cheese, had fallen.

The trip was, however, accomplished in safety, and practically every operator in Duluth, several of those from Superior, and most of the Duluth managers pushed their feet under the banquet table at 1:30 A. M. and proceeded to work devastation and utter ruin upon the goodies provided by Mine Host, after which your humble servant promenaded around over the cornfield of both operators and managers until broad open light of the day.

After the lecture there were many expressions of appreciation, and the boys agreed that it was more than worth all the trouble of preparation. Business Agent Hammond expressed the sentiment of Duluth operators when he said: "Well, Richardson, you put me up against a fine, large mess. I have got to, and by the eternal Green-toed Lizard of Oz, I am going to, pull certain books out of my library which haven't been looked at in quite some several moons; also I am going to stick my nose into them and do the tallest grubbing I have ever done in all my young and more or less innocent existence."

The editor crawled into his straw pile at 5:30 A. M., tired but happy in the knowledge of another day's work well done.

The Twin Cities.

At the Minneapolis depot L. G. Cowan, W. H. Smith, O. H. Dotton and Paul Quint, Business Agent, Past President, Vice-President and Chairman of the Examining Board of Minneapolis Moving Picture Operators' Union 219, I. A. T. S. E., held aloft the flag of welcome and spoke words of kindly greeting, also informing the editor that the proudly displayed gas wagon standing at the curb was at his disposal during his entire stay in the city.

The Minneapolis operators had written that they intended joining with the St. Paul local, and making our visit to the city a gala occasion which would be long remembered by the industry in Northern Minnesota. At Salt Lake City, however, I received a letter saying that, due to the legal battle the union had been waging for more than a year, which now had to be renewed and carried to the Supreme Court, it would be compelled to dispense with entertainment, as every available dollar would necessarily have to be devoted to the winning of the legal battle.

I promptly replied to this communication to the effect that, so long as they secured a full attendance of operators and exhibitors, I would far rather be spared the entertainment, my life having been almost one continued round of entertainment during the past four and one-half months. However, in this particular matter I re-learned a lesson which has already been taught me upon two or three other occasions, namely, viz.: Cut out the smoker, luncheon or banquet and friend manager's wife or child immediately becomes dangerously ill or his grandmother suddently lies at the point of death, so that usually, to his deep regret, he finds he cannot possibly be present, and, what is more, individually and collectively he for the most part is not present.

The Minneapolis boys assured me that there would be a full attendance of operators and nearly full attendance of exhibitors, but when I heard that operating room conditions were, as a general proposition, extremely bad (prima facie evidence that Minneapolis and St. Paul exhibitors attach but little importance to the presentation of photoplay upon the screen), I winked the other eye, because all that had been done was the sending out of invitations, backed up by a number of personal invitations. Under this condition my experience has been that in cities where friend manager does not understand the importance of excellence in projection (the fact that operating room conditions are none the best in the Twin Cities is proof that the managers in that city do not attach importance to projection), he is not likely to take the trouble to come out at midnight to hear an address on the subject, particularly when that address falls on Saturday evening, one of the heavy days of the week. And friend manager most emphatically was not there. There was, however, a large attendance of Minneapolis and St. Paul operators.

After the address the officers of Local 219 were loud in the expression of regret that more energetic action had not been taken to get out the managers and exhibitors. The statement was made, and made very emphatically, that next time I came to Minneapolis there would be a full attendance, or they would know the reason why. Too bad, gentlemen, too bad! But it can't be helped now.

The morning after the lecture I took a little walk for myself, and dropped in at two of the Minneapolis moving picture theaters, viz.: The Crystal and The Gateway. I entered the Crystal at 10:25 A. M., paying an admission of 15 cents. The front of the Crystal was very pretty, but the interior was, in view of the ornate front, rather disappointing, a condition which, I am told, upon what seems to be thoroughly competent authority, prevails in a considerable number of Minneapolis and St. Paul theaters. The Crystal had a distinctly poor result on the screen. It would have been poor even for a 5-cent house, and I had paid 15 cents. The illumination was dim, and the light was very poorly handled; also the screen result apparently gave evidence of poor equipment in the operating room, though that I did not myself see. There was discoloration of the light on the screen during the entire time I remained. There were bright side lights, both on the right and left, which makes for heavy and entirely and unnecessary eye strain for that portion of the audience seated near the sides of the auditorium. To the right and the left of the screen were partly-open doors, admitting bright daylight. Nor was this the sum of the sins of the Crystal manager, for both to the right and left of the screen were unnecessarily brilliant exit lights. The picture was very unsteady, which might and might not have been due to film fault. There was no evidence of any attempt to control the speed of projection.

At the Gateway Theater, a 5-cent theater, the show was being "dragged out," with resultant literally frightful flicker —an outrage upon the eyes of the audience. There were objectionable side lights on both sides, and a ventilating fan let in bright daylight near the upper left hand corner of the screen. At the rear of the auditorium was one of those enjoyment-murdering automatic pianos, pounding away for dear life, creating enough din to supply a first-class Fourth of July celebration to a medium-sized town. The way I put that particular down in my note book was: "Automatic piano raising hell just inside the entrance," which is both descriptive and expressive. Also it shows how it impressed me. Conclusive evidence of the value this "manager" puts on his screen result is found in the fact that at the reel a slide was run reading as follows: "Change of picture every day: 5 to 7 reels 5 cents." Far be it from me to suggest that a lecture on projection would be of any possible benefit to the managers of these two theaters. If these are not fair samples of the Minneapolis theaters, they are the ones I saw, and the Minneapolis Exhibitors' League didn't trouble itself to show me anything better. In fact that distinguished body didn't even bother to say "hello," either through its officers or otherwise, though I had come to their city mostly with view of benefiting them and their business.

In the afternoon of the second day, Brother L. G. Cowan, Business Agent, and W. H. Smith, Past President of Local 219, bubbled me around the city, out to Fort Snelling and over to St. Paul, where we visited several theaters and met a number of the St. Paul operators and managers.

At the Strand, St. Paul, I found Blaine Day, formerly of Sherman, Texas, an old-time projection department correspondent, in charge of some excellent equipment, in a very good, but poorly located operating room. The Strand is a beautiful theater, but the operating room is at the extreme summit of the second balcony. I met the Strand manager, G. W. Grandstrom, a very pleasant gentleman, who accounted for his absence from the lecture by saying, if I rightly remember, that his wife was sick.

And now here is a puzzle for you to solve. Answers with sketches may be sent the Projection Department. At the Alhambra Theater, James Jillowski and William Sobleman, managers (also kept away from the meeting by sickness in family), Frank Ehler, operator, I found an operating room of the following dimensions: 3 feet 11 inches wide, 8 feet long and 7 feet high. In this "operating room" were two Power's 6A Machines, a separate Stereopticon, a rewinder and a film tank. The room was light-flooded, and was considerably off center, sidewise, with the screen. Mr. Jilosky, one of the owners of this aggregation, is president of the St. Paul Exhibitors' League, so I am told. The puzzle is to get the equipment I have named into this operating room and still have room left for the operator to handle his machine. See if you can do it? The operating room was not the sum of the evil of this house, for there were 16 brilliant side lights, located 5 feet 6 inches from the floor. Also there was a bright exit light to the right of the screen, and the white light on the sheet music on the piano was unprotected. That is to say, the reflected light from the music shot right back into the eyes of the audience, there being no screen to prevent. The light was, however, confined to the sheet music, and that much was good.

At the Gem, managed by the same people who run the Alhambra, I entered the "operating room" by means of an iron ladder seven whole, great big inches wide, which led to a trap door of diminutive size, located under the slope of a stairway, which same formed the ceiling of the back part of the operating room. This room was about 3 and one-half feet wide, by 6 feet high for 3½ feet at its front end. The rest of its about-8-feet-of-length sloped down almost to the floor. There was one Powers Machine. The walls were black. I had to back out of this room, and down through the trap door knot-hole, using due care in negotiating the seven-inch-wide grand stircase.

At the Blue Mouse Theater the auditorium lighting was fairly good; also there was a fairly good operating room. To show how lax operators in all too many cases are, the man in charge of projection in this theater has had permission to have a fresh air intake opening cut through the outer wall at the floor line for a considerable time, but, through his own neglect, has failed to have it done.

In the Princess the auditorium lighting was from a projection point of view, distinctly bad. Red lights are used for decorative purposes, which, from the point of view of safety, is absolutely wrong, and there are bright side lights, with a great blare of light at the music stand of each one of the three musicians. I spoke to Manager Goldman about this, and he informed me that the musicians object to confining the light to smaller space, or to the use of smaller candle power or light green globes, claiming that it is hard on their eyes.

Well, friend musician, you may convince Brother Goldman of that, but you would have had a hard job convincing me that there is any less strain on your eyes because you have the whole front wall of the auditorium or stage, plus the woodwork of the piano, illuminated, or because you use a light twice as bright as you have any real need for. But even supposing a light green globe or less candle power were hard on your eyes, what about the eyes of the audience? Don't you really think the audience have some right in this matter? If you haven't a pair of optics of ordinary strength (if you have .there would be no need for you to object on the ground of inability to read your music) then you had better go back to the manicuring of soiled dishes.

Manager Goldman tells me that the musicians carry this outrage to the point of threatening to quit if there is any diminution of illumination at their music stands. However, Brother Goldman, you can squelch friend musician by making a curved screen which will come right up between them and the audience, and thus eliminate all the light, without interfering in the least with the audience's view of the screen, even from the front row of seats. But, suffering toes of the prophet, what a howl there would be from the music if this were done. What friend musician wants, when we squeeze the bull out of it and get down to brass tacks, is the privilege of posing before and being admired by the audience. Harsh words, yes, but I have no patience with men and women who absolutely disregard the rights of everyone else, rather than in the least degree discommode themselves.

Manager Goldman impressed me as a very pleasant gentleman, and a capable theater manager, but one who needs to delve a little deeper into some of the phases of his business.

At the Starland I found operator E. R. Hoffman in an operating room 15 by 20 in size, having an eleven-foot ceiling. The lamp houses were piped to the vent flue, but the ventilation of this room was, viewed from the standpoint of healthy conditions, rather poor, there being no glass in the ports and, if I have my notes correct, no fresh air intake.

I am informed that the Minneapolis fire marshal has secured the passage of a law prohibiting the operator from keeping his clothes (presumably his spare garments) in the operating room. The excuse for this is, I am informed, that in case of fire the clothing would be destroyed. Dear me, Mary, how our chewing gum does squeak. I would suggest to this dear soul, the Honorable Fire Marshal, that he might be still more considerate of the operator and compel him to disrobe entirely before entering the operating room, donning, in lieu of his ordinary raiment, garments made from thread asbestos. It is to be noted that this perfectly charming law makes absolutely no provision for a lockable closet, or for that matter, a closet of any kind whatsoever, outside the operating room, in which the operator may keep his clothing. For the benefit of the Minneapolis Fire Marshal I might say that in the heat of the summer, with the utterly outrageous lack of proper ventilation in many operating rooms, friend operator is obliged either to work in almost a state of nature, or else almost roast alive. If he stripped down to his ordinary working uniform downstairs, and passed up through the audience to the operating room, I am afraid there would be a riot. Where, then, do you, Mr. Fire Marshal, in your almost human intelligence, expect the operator to leave his clothing? Some day I believe I will make a collection of examples of solid ivory top, boneheado legislation, pertaining to operating rooms, and keep it to look at when I am troubled with indigestion, because it is said that the best remedy for that ailment is a good laugh.

I enjoyed my stay in the Twin Cities and value highly the friendships formed, which will, I am sure, last through the coming years. I also hope that while, due to the absence of the managers and the unfavorable conditions under which I addressed the men the thing was not as satisfactory as it might have been, still some good was accomplished.

Winona, Minnesota.

It was due to the enterprise of L. G. Roesner, manager Colonial Amusement Company, that a stop was made in Winona, a comparatively small city, population less than 20,000. Mr. Roesner had not only invited us to include Winona in the itinerary, but had proceeded to make quite some considerable arrangements for the address, inviting many out of town exhibitors and operators to attend. During our stay Mr. Roesner took us for a ride down the most charmingly beautiful Riverside drive. I really did not know there was such thoroughly charming scenery along the Father of Waters. I also viewed a genuine curiosity (if the city of Winona will forgive the application of that term), in the shape of one of the most magnificent bank buildings I have ever seen. There is nothing in New York, in the shape of a bank building, that can surpass it. The granite (I think it is granite) pillars at the main entrance are among the largest in the entire world.

In Winona I met Ben Huntley, one of the old-timers, now engaged in dealing in supplies in the City of Winona. Also at the time of my visit Mr. Joseph H. Gilday, no stranger to the great White Way of New York, now a salesman for the Art Dramas, traveling out of the Minneapolis office, was in the city and attended the lecture.

The Colonial Amusement Company, L. G. Roesner, manager; John Mott, assistant manager, has a very pretty house, with possibilities for absolutely ideal auditorium lighting. As it is, the lighting is not bad, but could, nevertheless, be materially improved. The Strand Theater, managed by Leon Rolcatcki, has very poor auditorium lighting.

At midnight I addressed the operators and managers of Winona, plus several out of town men, on the stage of the Colonial Theater, the lecture being preceded by a very nice table luncheon, supplied by the Colonial Amusement Company. The men were much interested and seemed well pleased with what they heard.

JOSE HAS MINIATURE STUDIO.

Edward José, the director, has almost completed a new residence on Weehawken Heights, overlooking the Palisades and the Hudson, that bids fair to be the most novel structure of its kind in the country. It may not be generally known that José does all of his own continuity work on the pictures he directs, writes nearly all his own scenarios and plans his productions down to the minutest details before he is ready to film them. In order to have all this work at hand, Mr. José has added to his new residence a complete miniature studio which will be equipped with every modern appliance for the making of pictures, but all in dwarfed form. There will be working models of scenes, lighting effects and all the rest of it, so that after he has planned a production he can build it in miniature and work out its many details before finally putting it into actual practice. In this way, he says, when he begins work on his productions he will have before him all worked out just exactly what he will put on the screen.

BUSTER COLLIER IN "TOM SAWYER."

Buster Collier, illustrious son of the celebrated William Collier, noted tragedian, has been specially engaged by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to appear with Jack Pickford in its adaptation of Mark Twain's great comedy, "Tom Sawyer." The production is already under way at the Lasky studio, and will be announced for release by Paramount within a few weeks.

Photoplayhouse Construction

A Discussion of the Scientific and Artistic Aspects of the Subject.

AT the convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, held in Chicago July 16-17, the following paper was read by Edward Bernard Kinsila, author of "Modern Theater Construction."

I have been invited to make a few remarks on motion picture theater construction. The motion picture theater is the popular bible of the fine arts for the masses and middle classes, where the screen serves as a sort of grammar school for the young, the partially educated, and those who still possess the primitive instinct of allowing themselves to be deluded by illusions that enlighten and amuse. Perhaps the most pertinent thing I could refer to in motion picture theater construction would be the tendency of exhibitors to build more commodious and elegant theaters with every convenience for the accommodation of its patrons. But this would be wasting valuable time. It is always the aim of the exhibitor to present motion pictures in an attractive manner to a discriminating public. If the wish be to cater for the patronage of the masses, he builds a large, centrally-located theater in the main thoroughfare. If it be intended for a special or select few, he erects a smaller neighborhood playhouse in the principal shopping street of the section selected for exploitation. Sometimes both these demands are met by the establishment of a chain of mangnificent theaters.

But in the erection of photoplayhouses to satisfy the ever increasing demand for improvement and better accommodation, there is too great a tendency toward repetition, too evident a desire to blindly copy, without giving the question sufficient or serious thought. It is my desire to correct these faults.

Therefore I prefer to discuss the scientific and artistic aspects that govern the whole subject. The phenomena of motion pictures has reference to motion, that interesting phase of existence that is responsible for all progress in every sphere of life. Until recently it has not been appreciated at all, and is still indifferently understood throughout the world.

Almost every phase of existence is dependent on motion. Heat, sound, light and other forms that it would be a transgression to mention, are dependent upon it. When movement ceases, all interest is lost. When we cease to move we are dead, and soon are forgotten. A higher appreciation of these forces will bring a better knowledge and a clearer understanding to the entire subject of motion picture playhouse construction. Avoiding the question of size and relation, such as whether to build large or small to accommodate one's patrons—really matters of detail that are thoroughly discussed in my book, entitled "Modern Theater Construction," recently published by the Moving Picture World—I shall pass on to more important matters.

Few people realize that the motion picture industry is an art wholly dependent on phychology, and by "psychology" I do not mean the name of a racehorse that will win the third race today. I am merely suggesting a business trip which, if followed, will bring handsome profits. The very basis of this industry rests on psychic conditions, and its early development was the result of scientific research begun nearly a century ago.

Another error that producers and exhibitors often make is the assumption that motion pictures are a cheap substitute for the spoken drama of the stage. This is not true at all. The motion picture is an entirely independent art, capable of telling its story in a far better manner than the spoken drama. On the real stage the period and duration of the play is limited, and events, to be logical, must occur in sequence. Attention to the story is directed by the spoken word of the actor. In the screen play there are no such restrictions. By the aid of flash-backs and visions the spectators may be carried back to any period of time or even conveyed into the very inner minds of the players on the screen. The brutal and revolting scenes of crime are not essential upon the screen. The visualization of an action properly associated with connecting events will sufficiently stimulate the mind of the spectator to a true appreciation of the act itself. A close-up of a nervous hand fingering the trigger of a revolver will picture murder most vividly, if correctly introduced with the associated actions shown on the screen. The absence of disconcerting words, and the introduction of a wealth of ideas that enrich our imaginations by awakening remnants of earlier experience, are all that are necessary. At the so-called real theater the actions and suggestions of the players are external. They come from without ourselves, while in the screen play everything comes from within, and in consequence is far more realistic. Visual simulation for the purpose of mental stimulation should be the endeavor.

The sooner the problem is viewed from this standpoint the better it will be for the entire industry.

If the motion picture art is a psychic problem and its success depends upon the effect produced on the mind of the spectator, why not adopt every rational means that will cause the spectator's mind to become perfectly receptive to these illusions? It should, therefore, be the first duty of the exhibitor to provide a pleasing playhouse, one that by its exterior design will suggest the form of entertainment housed therein, and with an interior plan adaptable to its class of patronage, the presentations given and the comfort of its patrons. I might say right here that the price of admission very materially affects one's appreciation of a presentation. No one ever heard complaint at the performance of a twenty-five cent circus, although the same show at the regular circus admission prices might have provoked universal complaint.

There are many incidental methods of contributing toward the comfort of theater patrons and thereby influencing their mental attitude, trifling perhaps in themselves, but amounting to a great deal in the aggregate. Uniforming the attendant, no matter what his position, will insure courtesy and thereby add toward the patrons satisfaction. Proper heating and ventilation also help. The manner in which fresh air is supplied to an auditorium is more important than the amount of supply, as air that traverses a room without reaching the breathing zone is of no practical value. One thousand cubic feet of air well distributed is worth ten times that amount introduced without mixing with the air in the breathing zone.

Few patrons realize that in most picture houses they inhale for about two hours the vitiated exhalations of those seated about them. And many of them are fastidious persons who insist upon drinking filtered water from sanitary cups, and yet do not object to paying for seats in a germ-laden atmosphere often so foul that it gives off an offensive odor.

The provision of adequate accessible toilets is also too often neglected. Toilets placed at the foot or top of narrow flights of stairs in inconvenient positions are not calculated to please or better one's receptive mood.

Insufficient coat hanging space is another inconvenience too generally imposed on a patient public with a false notion of conserving seating space. A very small display of ingenuity would provide ample coat hanging facilities in most theaters without the sacrifice of valuable seating space. To encumber patrons with their wraps for the period of an entire entertainment will surely not improve their mental attitude.

The chief objection in the provision of comfort that insures tranquility of mind is furnished in the totally deficient seating arrangement generally provided in nearly every motion picture house throughout the United States.

The seating arrangement presents a far more serious problem in a motion picture playhouse than in a regulation theater. In the latter, persons arising to permit the passage of others only obstruct the view of the stage for a moment, which is not always important, as one can usually hear the dialogue and continue to follow the thread of the story; but with a photoplay the same obstruction masks the view and breaks the continuity of thought and, if often repeated, is likely to entirely ruin's one appreciation of the entire photoplay.

This is so much so that it has led to the agitation for a law limiting the number of continuous chairs in a motion picture theater to eight seats, instead of twelve, thirteen or fourteen as now exist. If the distance between seats were increased four inches from back to back it would permit the free passage of persons without the necessity of anyone arising, only diminishing the total number of seats in an auditorium one row in every ten. In England, where no one is expected to arise or be disturbed to admit another, the distance from chair back to chair back is thirty-six inches instead of the thirty-two inches allowed in this country, and the rows of chairs there extend the full width of the auditorium without center aisles of any description.

Such an omission of aisles would not be tolerated legally in this country, and the law against it has no doubt been found necessary because the passage space between seat rows has been so restricted as not to provide both passage and seating space for each individual. But now good business policy demands a correction of this evil. A correspondent writing to the Moving Picture World stated that he had removed a number of rows of seats from his auditorium to provide better passage for his patrons, and found to his surprise that his daily receipts were enormously increased. Every seat was now continuously sold, while before its inauguration many seats were often unsold.

Great care should be taken in the establishment of correct sight lines. Greediness for more balcony seats should never tempt the addition of a balcony row that will hang so low as to interfere with a full view of the stage, as is the case in a mammoth theater recently built in New York City, widely heralded as a wonderful theater.

Lighting the balcony steps with electric lights placed behind translucent colored glass prevents stumbling in the dark, and entrance tunnels piercing a balcony from a mezzanine floor facilitate access to the upper tiers of a balcony and prevent patrons from emulating the example set by a supposititious Irish general, "who marched ten thousand soldiers up a hill, and then marched them down again."

An orchestra well that conceals the musicians is preferable to one that exposes them. The charm of music apparently coming from a distance is more likely to produce a contemplative and receptive state of mind than the blaring blasts of a brass band, exposed in full view.

The elimination of useless stage boxes that serve to attract attention at the expense of the picture on the stage, and a proper proportioning of the auditorium and stage, together with the possibility of brilliantly illuminating the audience hall during the showing of a comedy picture, are all influences that contribute to a patron's receptive state of mind. Spectators are impelled to laugh when they see others laughing by the aid of brilliant illumination.

Complete darkness, so common in old-fashioned moving picture playhouses, rarely enhances the effect of a picture. Unnecessary gloom never pleases an audience and seriously interferes with the prompt seating of patrons. Subdued light has a much less irritating effect on the eyes than complete darkness relieved only by reflected light from the screen.

There are no definite rules for the design or plan of a theater. After the site has been chosen, due regard must be given to the size and scale of the building. Different neighborhoods, the class of patrons sought, and the nature of the entertainment must be carefully considered. The exterior of a theater should be designed with sobriety and offer an inviting appearance to the eye reflecting the ideals housed therein, and the interior should be formed as a setting or frame for the same presented on the stage. There should be no attempt on the part of the architect to perpetuate his fame at the expense of the enterprise.

There should be no "fussiness" in design, especially of the interior. All unnecessary ornament should be avoided as tending to distract attention from the dominating architectural motive. Every feature should be subordinated to this central motive. When a single architectural ideal is well expressed, the result is always simple and good.

It is often possible to finish the interior in blocked store or a clever plaster imitation of grey Caen stone, which will give an added sense of security to the patrons. A fan shaped audience hall is ideal and offers the greatest opportunities for a motion picture playhouse. Its very formation also tends toward centering attention on the proscenium opening, the main constructive feature of auditorium and the one closest to the action shown on the stage. Incompetent architects, instead of designing this opening in lines that are simple, harmonious and unobtrusive, often overload it with old-fashioned and meaningless bands of ribbon and inartistic wreaths.

While art really admits of the standardization advocated by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, of which I am a member, it clearly calls for specialization, which may be considered by some as standardization in another form.

As I have pointed out in my work on "Modern Theater Construction," specialization is as needful in theater architecture as in other lines of commercial endeavor. Most of the theater deficiencies in this country today are the result of a woeful lack of qualified specialists in this line of work, and a consequent inclination to copy blind the work of others, mistakes included.

Ordinary humanity, however, demands that the general arrangement of a theater conform to the safety of the inmates, whether patrons or employes. As nearly all fires in motion picture playhouses originate in the projection room, this department should be made absolutely fire safe, which is not always the case today.

Whether the projection room be placed aloft in the balcony, or above it like a turret on a battleship, or whether it be placed on a par [illegible] to insure level projection, as is now being ably advocated by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, there should be some method of standardization that would demand the construction of this source of danger absolutely fire-resisting, not built of flimsy asbestos cardboard, as is now the case in many motion picture houses. The projection room and its devices are mechanical and, therefore, will permit of standardization.

Its entrance and exit should never be direct from the audience hall, but should be from without the auditorium, as required by law in every European country. Then, if the walls are formed of hollow [illegible] building tile, to my mind the best and cheapest fire resisting and sound proof material known, all danger from an explosion or blaze within its walls being heard by the audience and creating panic will be eliminated.

If the lens and observation ports are closed instantly by an automatic safety shutter, no one in the audience need ever be aware of the occurrence of an accident in the projection room. There would be no door opening into the presence of the audience where flames could follow an escaping operator, and cause an alarm of fire that would precipitate a panic. Theater casualties result from fright, not actual injury by fire.

An added precaution would be to provide an anteroom or workshop between the projection room and auditorium with exit and entrance from it into the open, but not into the audience hall. Exit doors from the projection room could be provided at both ends leading into the anteroom, with self-closing fire doors. Attached to the workshop side of each of these doors could be a large tank of chemical fire extinguishing fluid, with a movable nozzle piercing the door into the projection room. Through a small port provided in the dividing door, the departing operator could peer back into the burning room, direct the nozzle to the proper spot and turn on the extinguishing fluid.

If he were able quickly to extinguish the blaze, all right, if not, and he had done everything in his power, he could retire at his leisure, leaving the fire to burn itself out.

A word more about the automatic safety shutter designed to close the lens and observation ports of the projection room in time of accident would not be amiss. The only so-called automatic safety shutters I have seen in this country are those operated by fusible links. Personally, I have a deep-seated prejudice against reliance upon a fusible link that might or might not burn at the critical moment. We have had terrible evidence of the want of dependability of fusible links in Chicago in the Iroquois theater disaster, where the fire curtain that worked by fusible links became stuck and permitted hundreds of people to be asphyxiated by gas escaping from the burning stage, without even scorching the plush seats.

The best device of this kind that I have ever seen in my travels is one generally employed in Germany, which I would be glad to design for anyone willing to adopt the form of projection room that I am advocating. This safety shutter was simplicity itself. It was a close-fitting shutter fastened to a lever that was attached to a standing plate inserted in the floor beside the machine. The operator standing on this plate to operate his machine, depressed it and pulled the lever down at one end and raised the shutter at the other end. When, for any reason, he stepped from this plate the lever was released and the shutter dropped from its own weight.

The lens and observation ports were both attached to this standing plate in the floor, and compelled the constant attendance of the operator at his post. His absence closed both ports and immediately stopped the picture. Where two projectors were used and the operator desired to dissolve one picture into another, his assistant, always present by legal requirement, temporarily stood on one platform while the change was made. A person standing on one platform depressed both by a simple connection.

In case of an accident to the projector, sudden fright would cause the operator to jump back from the machine and off the platform, thus instantly closing both ports before the audience could have any intimation of danger. I am satisfied these recommendations will win me the everlasting enmity of the cigarette-smoking type of operator, but so long as the lives and safety of hundreds of innocents are at stake, I do not care.

The corner of the projection room adjoining the outer air is a natural provision, where possible, as it facilitates ventilation in a superheated enclosure and permits the establishment of proper vent flues. The installation of a workshop next the projection room adds convenience to safety. Space permitting, the adoption of rear projection removes the projection room, with all its heat, noise and danger, completely away from the audience, but that is another story. We must treat with conditions as they exist, and there is very little rear projection in this country.

In any event a careful operator should never have a film fire with a modern projector, provided he lubricates his machine and keeps it clean and in good working order. However, wet blankets readily at hand, to beat out the flames, and buckets filled with clean sand are additional precautions that cost little and might save much in an emergency.

I trust that my remarks have instilled in your minds the important fact that the motion picture is an art founded on science; that its original development was through scientific research; that the problem of its presentation is a psychic one, and should be always treated as such to secure the best results.

What I have said about safety is merely in the nature of good advice that should not be disregarded by anyone, and when properly observed is certain to insure respect and success to those who practice its teachings.

Rita Jolivet in Lusitania Story

UNDER the Selznick-Picture banner, Rita Jolivet has begun work upon a unique production. Miss Jolivet, it will be recalled, was the young woman to whom Charles Frohman spoke his last words—"Why fear death? It is life's greatest adventure." For a long time after the disaster Miss Jolivet was unable even to talk about it, but now she has come to the conclusion that the events immediately concerned with the sinking of the great ship are of such vast moment that they should be recorded in permanent form.

Obviously the limitations of the spoken drama are too narrow to make it possible to stage such a story as this, and so Miss Jolivet has made a contract with Lewis J. Selznick to produce the ideas in a picture. It will not be mere history—there will be a story in it as well. As Miss Jolivet is one of the few persons available who can describe in a practical manner the scenes on the Lusitania the scenario will be worked out largely from her instructions.

Rita Jolivet.

Miss Jolivet is much better known for her stage work than for her motion picture appearances. In New York, London and Paris, she has had the leading feminine roles in "Kismet," "What It Means to a Woman," "The Wedding of Mrs. Bliss," "A Thousand Years Ago," "Mrs. Boltay's Daughters," and other plays. Her debut was in London as Beatrice in "Much Ado About Nothing." She has played a number of other Shakespearian roles as well. In Paris, she has appeared at the Comedie Francaise, in comedies with Galipaux and in other notable productions. Her most important moving picture experience has been in Italy, with the famous Ambroisio.

ALICE MOORE WITH TRIANGLE.

Mrs. Alice Moore, who has just been appointed assistant art director at the Triangle Culver City studios, enjoys the distinction of being the first woman ever employed in such a capacity at the big Triangle plant. Mrs. Moore began her dramatic career as an actress and later, when the ranks of stage players were being depleted by the rapid rise of the motion pictures, transferred her talents to the screen. While thus employed, her brilliant ideas and suggestions for dressing sets came to the attention of the men in charge of this department and she was induced to work in her present place.

War Time Picture Activities

By the Rev. W. H. Jackson.

Praise Coming from All Directions as to the Value of the Moving Picture.

THE moving pictures are not only "doing their bit" nor their part, but rather their whole. To the uninitiated the power and scope of the work of the pictures would if known be astonishing; they are educating and interesting soldiers in preparation camps and on the battle fields, in the latter place filling a void always felt by fighting troops who now are made happy by that which the wide scope of the pictures bring. In hospitals and places wherever the Red Cross is at work their uses are beyond computation in the help and service they render. In Red Cross work at home Chapters are organized and maintained by the pictures.

The National Security League of America is now planning a campaign of patriotism through education with the aid of the pictures, their work is to reach in all parts of the States with the main objects of teaching the individualism of the American citizen in these critical times.

The National War Work Council of the Y. M. C. A. is perhaps doing the largest work on account of the great scope of the far reaching organizations of the Y. M. C. A. in all parts of the world. Travelling upon the plans of this organization the moving pictures are able to do most effective work to the great profit and delight of the young manhood of America now scattered all over the world.

One Hundred and Fifteen Exhibitions.

Motion picture service for all army camps has been thoroughly organized for the period of the war. For over two months, quietly but efficiently, the motion picture has been busy. To the War Work Council of the Young Men's Christian Association the President and the Department of War through the Commission on Training Camp Activities entrusted this task. It turned to the Community Motion Picture Bureau, which has full charge of all motion pictures within all camps.

The third week in July found this service in operation in about ninety camps, big and little, all the way from Rockland, Maine, to San Diego, wherever young men are training for the Army and Navy, for aviation work and for ambulance service. for engineering duties and for coast defense. It is maintained at navy yards and at marine barracks, at convalescent camps, at regular posts and emergency stations. But at many camps there is more than one auditorium for showing films. The arrangement commonly calls for one such place for each 5,000 men, or in some instances one for each 3,000 men, so that the larger camps calls for several exhibition places. As a matter of fact, there are now 115 such places at the ninety camps, and this number will increase rapidly. By early fall, when the National Guard and the National Army are in camp, the number of camps, large and small will doubtless be double the July number and the number of exhibition places is expected to be nearly three hundred. In most cases there are an average of four exhibitions a week. That will mean almost two thousand showings a week—something that will undeniably be a record in the motion picture business.

Y. M. C. A. War Council in Conjunction With Community Motion Picture Bureau.

All of this activity is under the direction of the War Work Council of the Young Men's Christian Association working in conjunction with Secretary Baker's Commission on Training Camp Activities. And these two bodies have put the whole burden of the service, both the enormous task of supplying the right films at the right camps at the right time, and also the responsibility for maintaining the requisite high standards, on the Community Motion Picture Bureau of Boston of which Warren Dunham Foster is the president. The Department of War's Commission on Training Camp Activities and the Council of the Y. M. C. A. found this Bureau equipped to handle such a vast undertaking successfully. It is a national concern, four years old, and it is giving its whole energy to this work as a patriotic service without any financial profit whatever.

Film Companies Co-Operate.

In speaking of the scope of the work and the plans for its rapid enlargement as the camps multiply, President Foster says, "For the most part I have found the leading film companies ready to cooperate promptly and loyally with the work that our Bureau has undertaken. They have responded in a very generous manner to the patriotic appeal that we have made and have made liberal changes in their policy to meet the needs of the emergency that has arisen. Without their cooperation our task would have been doubly difficult. It will be our duty as well as our pleasure to give full recognition and publicity to all producers and distributors who cooperate with us on a genuinely patriotic and generous basis."

One of the producers for instance—The Goldwyn Pictures Corporation—has generously offered one free print of every picture which it will produce. Cooperation from the exchanges has been specially valuable. Everywhere branch managers have waived fixed policies of all sorts to adjust their service to the demands of the situation. They have accepted bookings which were flatly contrary to custom, and they have made rush shipments to distant and inaccessible points by messenger and special conveyance.

Results Physical, Mental and Educational.

Mr. Foster and those associated with him—all professional educators and editors who, in seven years of study and four years of service, have developed to the full the possibilities for education and recreation that lie in the motion picture—realize the heavy responsibility that the Y. M. C. A. and Secretary Baker have placed on them. The service that they have furnished and will furnish in all these camps during the months to come will be the most important single recreation for the millions of fighting men under our flag. More than that, it means holding constantly before them in the most impressive way the highest ideals of service under the flag. And it is likely to mean, as the plans develop, one of the most practical touches in making them thoroughly efficient soldiers.

Whether the man is at Plattsburg or the Presidio or Fort Meyer or in France, or even in a southwestern station where a motor truck carries one projecting outfit a hundred miles across the desert sands and gives the pictures in the open air—he is getting in these days of stress and strain the most helpful and most wholesome things that the miracle of the motion picture can give.

The recreation possibilities of the motion picture were never so in evidence or in demand as they are in this world war. The nervous and physical strain on the men engaged in the war is greater than has ever been imposed by any previous conflict. The motion picture is the greatest passive recreational part of the program of training camp activities.

"The Love That Lives," Mother-Hood or Mother-Love

A Picture That Requires Careful Handling and That Should Be Shown With Discrimination.

By the Rev. W. H. Jackson.

OF a singular coincidence while "Parentage" is making its first appearance in one New York theater, "The Love that Lives," which is without doubt intended to portray Mother-Love, is appearing in another theater. In this latter in which Pauline Frederick displays her usual ability there is much that will without doubt receive just and proper commendation in review. Nevertheless this is a picture which requires careful handling and should not be shown in a careless or indiscriminate manner; it would be better that young children do not see it. It leaves a decidedly unpleasant taste, so different in this respect from the first mentioned picture. It is well known that parental love is alone and always "the love that lives," from time immemorial it has been called the "undying love," so that to exemplify it in any way is always a most worthy object.

In this picture a mother left a widow with two children after their shiftless father has been killed in a gambling fight, becomes a scrub-woman to earn a livelihood; soon her little girl is killed by an automobile leaving her alone with her boy for whom she has the highest and fondest hopes. It now becomes a serious question whether a mother with but one child, and not a large family, should depart from the path of virtue and sacrifice her honor with the attendant shame and disgrace, for the purpose of securing the boy's future. This part of the picture is a hard one for young people to see; the high motive of mother love is used as an excuse to illustrate a life of shame, a fall without sufficient cause (and the future of one son is not sufficient cause) makes it seem that the "price paid" is too easily rendered. Further to this the adding of a continued abandoned life after the first mistake cannot find any justification that it was done for "the love that lives," doubtless for the time being the mother love is dead, for afterwards their appears "the resurrection" when the mother finds that her boy evidently without her help, but rather in the absence of it, becomes a worthy young man, and as a fireman becomes a hero in the rescue of those in danger at a fire and of which his mother knew nothing until she sees it in the newspaper.

Becoming a scrub-woman again after her rise and fall in the ways of the demi-monde, she finds herself working in the office of her former lover who is employing as his stenographer the very girl to whom her son is engaged to be married. Here there is a group of very exciting incidents which cannot but thrill, a fire has broken out in the building at the same time that the employer is trying to force his sensual attentions upon the girl, and the scrub-woman mother appears to rescue the girl from the fiend while her son appears to rescue her from the fire. The mother perishes in the flames unknown to the young people who only know that they owe their deliverance to the scrub-woman, thus the noble and heroic deed of life-sacrifice by the mother is the final effort of the "love that lives" and is a tribute to the undying power of a dying woman's love for her son, a love that dies that its object may live is true mother-love, but we would rather for the sake of many young people who will see this picture that honor should not die first; the death of honor is sadder than the death of the body, and when honor is shown so dead, that shame and disgrace are wilfully indulged in until the "resurrection" or, "the rude awakening" comes it is a pity; would that mother love could be shown as the "love that lives" without such gruesomeness. When sitting through this part of the picture with so many bright young people about him the writer felt sad.

BOARD OF EDUCATION TO RENT FILM.

The Moving Picture World has received the following communication.

The issue of the New York City Record, to which it refers, is that of July 20.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION, THE CITY OF NEW YORK BUREAU OF SUPPLIES
PARK AVENUE AND 59TH STREET

July 20, 1917.

Dear Sir (s):

An advertisement appears in todays City Record for RENTAL OF NON-INFLAMMABLE OR SLOW-BURNING MOTION PICTURE FILM Bids will close WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 1, 1917, at 11 a. m.

If your representative will call at the Department of Education, Park avenue and 59th street, Borough of Manhattan, copies of bidbooks and other information as you may need will be given by

Very truly yours,
PATRICK JONES,
Superintendent of School Supplies.

ANTONIO MORENO TO SUPPORT MRS. CASTLE.

According to an announcement issued this week by Pathe, Mrs. Vernon Castle, will have, as her leading man in her third Pathe feature, Antonio Moreno, one of the most popular male stars of the screen. This picture will be filmed at the special studio in Fort Lee engaged for the exclusive use of the organization built for the production of the Castle-Pathe Pictures under the direction of George Fitzmaurice, producer of many hits.

The scenario is by Philip Bartholomae, the well-known playwright and it is made from one of Carolyn Well's most successful books. Mr. Bartholomae is the author of a number of very successful stage plays and his first Astra-Pathe feature, "The Cigarette Girl," with Gladys Hulette has just been enthusiastically greeted by the critics.

Antonio Moreno has become very popular. "The Island of Regeneration," "Kennedy Square" and others of the best Vitagraph pictures, owe a large measure of their success to his work. He has played on the stage with many of the best known stars, including Mrs. Leslie Carter, Constance Collier, Tyronne Power, William Hautrey, and Wilton Lackaye. Some of the plays in which he appeared were "C. O. D.," "The Man From Cook's," and "Thais." His appearance with Mrs. Vernon Castle lends great promise of splendid pictures.

Virginia Lee Corbin

THOUGH she will not attain her fifth birthday until December of this year, Virginia Lee Corbin, one of the leading players in William Fox's Kiddie Feature, "Jack and the Beanstalk," has mastered dramatic technique in a manner that would do credit to many film stars four and five times her age. Virginia is different from most other child players. Her fame doesn't rest complete on doing "cute" things. She can portray an emotion or a thought with all the accuracy and confidence of a seasoned veteran

Virginia Lee Corbin.

Virginia has been acting for almost two years. Since October, 1916, she has been working before the William Fox camera, and her range of vehicles includes, besides "Jack and the Beanstalk," "Babes in the Woods," "Treasure Island," and "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp." She is now as much a part of the Fox repertory as Gladys Brockwell or George Walsh.

With all her "grown-up" ways, Virginia is still wholly and completely a child. She loves her camera work, but she loves her dolls better. She takes the profoundest pleasure in making up, but she's much happier when she can wear one of her mother's long skirts, and strut about the yard.

Virginia has deep and sacred secrets which she tells one in confidence. Her dressing-room at the Fox studio is in reality a nursery. She has no end of toys there, and she always retires from the stage, not for a nap, but for a few minutes of play with Teddy bears and dolls.

Whenever the more experienced actors at the Fox studio have spare time, they gather about the "set" on which the kiddies are working, and watch Virginia and her leading "man," Francis Carpenter. To see Virginia weeping over her lover's absence, or Francis advancing, sword in hand, to rescue his lady, is worth a week's salary, even to a high-priced picture star.

GOLDWYN AND MABEL NORMAND GOOD FRIENDS AGAIN.

Mabel Normand, world-famed comedienne, and Goldwyn Pictures Corporation have resumed their briefly interrupted friendship and found that the things that kept them apart were, after all, not of sufficient gravity to interrupt their future associations.

This resumption of friendly business relations between one of the biggest stars of the screen and her new employers means that Miss Normand will be at work in Goldwyn's Fort Lee studios within a fortnight and that everything in Goldwyn's power will be done to add to Miss Normand's fame.

NICK KESSEL PREPARES.

Although the Army draft takes away ten of his young men, Nick Kessel, general manager of the Triangle Laboratories at Fort Lee, is not letting it worry him, as his plant is so organized that their places will be taken by girls, and men above the age limit, who are at the present time being trained in the positions they will fulfill later on. Mr. Kessel has also assured his boys that upon their return from war their old positions will be awaiting them.

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard

I HAVE just seen a picture put on for trade showing at the Park by the Metro which I hope will be viewed by millions all over the land. It is "The Slacker" and, in my opinion, is the very best plea for loyalty to Old Glory yet shown here and it is not a spread eagle offering, but a sane presentation of situations likely to be met in any community where the idle rich dwell. Director Cabanne deserves a crown and I'll bet he is an out and out patriot to think up all those touches to stir the most blase. What a joy it must have been for Emily Stevens and the others to rehearse such scenes! My space is too limited to go on, but I have had a great treat shared by a large audience, including the Russian sailors (here with their warship) and officers in the service. To work in Lee's surrender to Grant, Nathan Hale, Francis Scott Key, Paul Revere and others of historic renown and in action, was some idea worth while. As an incentive to enlistment nothing finer has been put upon the screen, and as an inspiration for the young it will live in memory.

Quite in contrast is "The Brand of Satan," the play built around an unspeakable crime causing the birth of a son to a good woman, said son cursed with a dual nature. It is more than a Jekyl and Hyde case and is repulsive, for we know from the start what happened. Then they did a fool thing in performing an operation on the man as if that would remove an inherited taint. It was splendidly acted by Montague Love and a good supporting company, and the plot was well carried along to an excellent finale. Personally I see no merit in plays founded on immorality of that sort and it is up to the producers to give us cleaner pictures if they want to avoid censorship. Women constitute nine-tenths of the patrons and the best of them are not asking for high brow or Sunday school pictures, but they do want good themes worked out dramatically, forcefully, entertainingly and which they can take their young people to see. Believe me there is some "writing on the wall."

What is the reason "The Star Spangled Banner" is not shown for a run at all theaters? I saw it recently on Sunday night when a small audience shared the pleasure. Here we get a short reeler full of patriotism splendidly cast, well photographed and featuring an important branch of Uncle Sam's service—the Marine Corps. It is by all odds the best picture of its brand seen here in months and one readily overlooks lapses in grammar in titles such as "sent to bring you up," "Are you coming to America with me?" as spoken by Herbert Evans in England, from which place he had to "go" to America, not "come." But "the play's the thing." Here we get a young prig capitally played by Paul Kelly (keep your eye on that chap, for he is another Charlie Ray). One incident touched us deeply and which none of the reviewers have alluded to. When the Colonel calls for volunteers to go in search for the lad whom they hated, every Marine offered, putting entirely aside all personal feeling toward the young cad, to please their commander. It was a big spot and I take off my hat to Director E. H. Griffith for this and the scenes at the Barracks done by U. S. marines. Nellie Grant (makes you think of U. S. Grant's Nellie) had a fine chance here and the kid Cyril Hughes caught the house, which gave more applause at frequent intervals over this Edison picture than I've heard in a long time.

* * *

On same bill was "A Welsh Singer" put out a year ago by Mutual, with handsome and dependable Florence Turner and Henry Edwards. Done in Wales, naturally the scenery was superfine and the sheep added much to the action. There were some inconsistencies like the failure of the hero to recognize his early love under different surroundings, while her old father with failing eyesight did so at once in spite of her change in attire and the wig. This picture leaves a good taste in the mouth and safe for re-issue in any community.

* * *

"American Methods" was another vehicle for William Farnum to display his versatility. It went well here and what a distinctly fine piece of acting Jewell Carmen gave us! At times she suggested that other Fox star—Claire Whitney, in her delicacy. I will watch her career with added interest after this triumph. Mrs. Ayer gave us "that evening," "The Clodhopper" most enjoyable, and a fine vehicle for Charlie Ray. It was full of human touches and humor especially when he was suddenly thrust into fame and inaugurated the "Clodhopper's glide" to the edification of Broadway. The mail order clothes were some scream and the reception of them caught the house. I wonder on studying his upper face if way back in Ray's ancestry there is not some Indian or Oriental blood. Anyhow we all love him and are sure he will ever make good.

* * *

Commend me to "The Girl Glory" for what it unconsciously teaches. There is a big lesson here and a new angle on the whisky habit made so by the little heroine, Enid Bennett, named in the play for "Old Glory," who samples the stuff to see if grandpa took it to make him "feel good inside" as there seemed no other reason to her why he got drunk. Here we get something new for she lost her head temporarily and declared that her insides felt horrid. Later in the play we get a Memorial day celebration with grandpa putting on his old uniform to take his place in line with the boys in blue. But alas the saloon tempted him when the owner invited him to have a drink to General Grant. Will not tell more but want you to pass the word along about this play so timely, so full of incident worth while and so well done by Miss Bennett, one of the loveliest girls I know in the pictures, and Walt Whitman (there's a name) playing the old soldier who becomes cured in a very unusual way by his little charge—the child being an orphan. Yes, there is a nice little romance at the end. Play is a small town one but good for the biggest city to show, as most of the Triangles are.

* * *

What a valuable man Rupert Julian is and how versatile. I saw him in successive pictures, "A Kentucky Cinderella" and a revival of "The Right to Be Happy," taken from Dickens' Christmas Carol, a delightful picture at any season and a credit to Bluebirds. In both these, kiddies are in evidence and what dears they are in the former picture especially. As to Tiny Tim, I wonder where they got a child to so look the part. There were many moistened eyes around me at the Exeter, where both were shown to delighted attendants. Great work for Julian all through.

* * *

Mrs. Ayer gave her patrons "The Little Orphan" a splendid Bluebird picture thoroughly enjoyed, because so timely and so well done. It was a cross between "The Prince Chap" and "The Heir to the Hoorah" in its theme. As in the latter play and picture, three men are the heroes but here each adopts a Belgian child (boys preferred). One turns out to be a girl, none other than Ella Hall, and so quite a story is worked out with human touches and a romance dear to the fans in front. This picture seems flawless in all ways and good for repeats and re-issue for years to come. They ring true.

When "Mme. Sherry" is screened we will have some picture, but I do wish the Authors Film Company had secured Elizabeth Murray for Mme. Sherry—the part she created. We have wondered where Donald Hall was hiding and now I see that he is with Norma Talmadge in "The Moth." Am reminded that he appeared in "Poppy," which I failed to see, but anyhow am sure Donald made good. He is one of the favorites for his clean-cut work with the Vitagraph company several years. Oh, for re-issues of some of the old Biograph, Vitagraph and Essanay pictures, especially those in which Henry Walthall figured, pictures directed by Griffith. A new generation has sprung up and millions of fresh converts to the pictures so why not give them the treat we have enjoyed?

* * *

O. Henry and "Do Children Count" have caught the town—that part of it in the Back Bay to patronize the Fenway. The first named have unusual twists and are splendid screen dramatizations of the late author's creations. The latter are intensely human, domestic, sane, and interest young and old alike. Little McAllister is one of kiddies who grip us and then, too, she is so natural and devoid of self-consciousness. We in the Hub are devoutly thankful that our absurd state law concerning children on the stage under the age of 14 does not apply to the screen. When "Mme. Butterfly" is put on here a rag doll has to be used. Fancy any other state in the Union standing for that sort of thing. The law was made primarily to cover factory children and not the dear little children who are usually pampered by stage folks generally.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Let Your Light Shine.

LATELY we "did a leopard" and changed our spots, moving from Waterville to East Winthrop, Maine, where we located a camp. The day we came in we noticed in Winthrop a sign on a building that announced the possession of regulation bowling alleys. A few days later, going in for groceries, we learned from the storekeeper that the place was the picture show. It was a full week later that we happened to be going past in the afternoon and saw the bill boards in front of the house. Of course "everyone knows" where the picture theater is. Perhaps they do, but not everyone is going to nose out the house in a section of the country where they are just getting around to Hulda from Holland, and it would seem that a sign on the front of the house would help quite a little. A trolley line serving two good camping lakes runs past the door. At least half the territory could be used to feed this house, the rest possibly going to Augusta. We are situated so that it costs a fifteen-cent car fare to go to either place and we play them 50-50, but it is a little easier to find out what Augusta has to offer. Neither end of the road seems to make the slightest effort to pull business from the feeder towns. If we were not interested in pictures we would know nothing of the house at Winthrop and little about the Augusa pictures; indeed, we know the location of only one house in the latter place so far, yet the New York and Boston campers are coming in, and an effort made to capture the business should at least be made along the trolley lines. Certainly the Winthrop management should not depend upon what the lawyers call common knowledge to exist. The signs on the house front might at least give equal display to bowls and pictures. We are not in favor of noisy lobbies and ballyhoos, but the man who cries bad business is not entitled to sympathy unless he makes some effort to improve business at least to the extent of advising people that he is open for business. It is the same way in too many eastern rural communities. The old days when everyone went to the pictures are passing. You must coax them in. You must not only let them know where you are, but must tell them what you have to offer, and tell them invitingly. If you can reach the summer boarders go after them. For a month get out weekly programs and put them in the boarding houses and camps. Slip cigars to the trolley conductors to tell new people about your place and to tell you about new arrivals. Get busy and keep busy before you get more leisure than you need Beating the Presswork.

Sending in batches of stuff for The Barrier and the Easiest Way, S. Barret McCormick, of the Circle, Indianapolis, writes: "Rotten presswork as usual, but it doesn't seem possible to make them buy new ones, so all I can do is to show the artist how to draw and trust to fate." Of the larger cities Indianapolis seems to have more uniformly bad presswork than the others. In some towns the average is poor, but there is one paper that stands out for note in its typographical appearance, but no Indianapolis publisher seems to care a whoop how his sheet looks. It is plain disgraceful to a community, but it is what Mr. McCormick is up against, and they will not reform their ways just to oblige a theater. But we think he could fool them by making his copy as nearly fool-proof as possible. Cuts that ordinarily should print nicely in a sixty-screen look like masses, and the only thing to do is to resort to line and benday, or line and mass. Even bad presswork cannot wholly kill the effect of these advertisements for The Barrier:

It should be noted that the right hand cut has an additional box for the house name, the whole running about three twelves. The left hand display is shown complete, running five tens. This last is line and benday with a very little black mass. The other is black and line. The reason for this is plain. So large a mass of black on the wider cut would have looked unlovely. It would be an offense. Here the benday stipple is better. Both advertisements are effctive. But in the Clara Kimball Young subject Mr. Barrett tried, perhaps against his better judgment, to make use of the effective stills supplied. Here is a more intimate subject than the rugged Barrier. A closer touch is suggested by the greater detail of half tone. Mr. Barrett tried for his half tones and obtained fair results. This reproduction does not show as well as the original newspaper work, but it does not libel the paper work. It is impossible to libel what is already libelous. The reproductions are interesting as showing how Mr. McCormick makes his small type matter stand out. Coming in a mortise, the white back throws up the eight-point lines and they are more apt to be read than if they were in the same color as the body of the advertisement. The advertisements are not unlike, but the slight differences in layout make an interesting study, and both cuts are well worth studying if you ever try original sketches. Other advertisements for "The Barrier" included two three eights and a two fourteens, mostly type. The example on the left is not as attractive as that on the right because it is more formal. Putting the cut off to the right gives a better-balanced advertisement. Both of these advertisements carry too little display for the usual subject, but "The Barrier" is already half advertised through the book. It is necessary to mention only the title and the author in display to interest practically all who can be interested. The small type drives home that interest. It is a pity that Mr. McCormick is so handicapped. He must miss the Denver papers.

The Ghost Moving.

The Canadian Universal Company is sending to picture fans a personal letter for The Gray Ghost, enclosing a button badge. We are reproducing the letter, partly because it can be used by exhibitors this side of the line but chiefly because it is a model of brevity.

> Dear Movie Friends,
> It's Gray.
>
> Gray always appealed to me as being a mysterious, uncanny sort of a color that one associates with moonlight and spooks. Therefore, when you hear that our new serial is called "The Gray Ghost" you may be sure that something unusually interesting and absorbing is coming.
>
> On top of that, an old and popular friend of yours is coming back once more to delight you with his feats of strength and thrilling acting—Eddie Polo.
>
> I do not think I can say anything more that will convey to your mind the great enjoyment you are going to get out of this new fifteen-reel serial, except the information I have given you above.
>
> Just note the name "The Gray Ghost" and think of Eddie Polo. Your theater manager is arranging to run it; ask him the dates he is starting.

The trouble with a great majority of the form letters is that the letter either reads past the point of interest or else is so long that the very sight of so much typewriting causes the recipient to throw it away unread. Here are fourteen lines of matter and you read it because it is short and remember it because it reads to excite your interest. It does not aim to tell you all about the serial. It is content to rouse your curiosity, and that is all any form letter should do unless it is one intended to be sent out in response to a request for full information.

Ruffisms.

Ralph Ruffner, of the Liberty, Spokane, has thought of something else he wants to talk about, so he takes his trusty typewriter, plugs the shift key so it writes all caps and deposes:

> Never have I wished for color photography so much as now, for in sending you a small batch of photos of different styles of threes and ones, cut-outs, etc. I realize how flat they look to one who has not seen the originals, but perhaps a short description of the color schemes would not be a miss. The two three sheets on Nazimova in "War Brides" are a Tiffany blue with the star and the title in cut out letters in silver. The shields bearing the shop talk are a French gray, outlined in white with lettering in black. All this surrounded by a nicely polished brass frame makes a beautiful and very attractive presentation. The one sheets (there were two), were also done in blue Tiffany with a cut-out letters of silver. The entire lobby, lights and all announcements bearing on the show were in blue of various shades. The lights in the foyer and auditorium were all in blue. During the running of the picture entire house was dark and at the close no exit march was played and the lights were raised just enough to enable one to find their way out in comfort. You know, the old Madame X Stunt, wet eyes and no bands to advertise the fact. It looked for the first few days as though we'd have to provide mops and down-spouts on all seats. Kellermann in "A Daughter of the Gods" we used red Tiffany boards for the threes and ones. The cut-outs bearing the title, star and talk-talk were done in yellow; lettering all in gold. This combination surrounded by a brilliantly polished brass frame darned near disturbed the peace in our town. Take the cut-out of Kellermann with the ostrich: this was taken from the three sheets, cut out and mounted on compo board and fastened to a red Tiffany background, and enclosed with a brass frame. No lettering. All lights and all cards bearing on the show were in red with but two exceptions, and these are the two 11x21 cards hanging on the bottom of the one sheet standards. All this plus the exceptionally fine display of large framed pictures with the show made up one of the very "attractivest" lobbies our janitor had ever saw. Then to get into deep water; allow me to introduce to you Douglas Kellermann. I had a slide made of this photo and it is now serving as advance on "Doug's" first home-made release, "In Again—Out Again," "Try to Get in Again." Then the tall fuzzy standard with the tiger on top: this was used to advertise "A Jungle Child." Found a large mechanical tiger in a local toy store and arranged to have him lash his tail, turn his head back and forth and growl at passersby. He stood about 6 feet 6 inches from the sidewalk and the growl was made to shoot at about the height of the average ear, which placed it nicely and startingly into the taxpayers ears as they rushed by. A sign on the front, "Stick Around, We're Going to Feed Him," got a lot of laughs. The three sheet on Fairbanks in "Manhattan Madness' is pretty old, but I will say the copy was made from one of the rotograveurs by a local artist, and it attracted a lot of attention and business. With but one or two exceptions any of these ideas can be carried out in almost any town. The blue and red Tiffany boards I speak of were painted to our order, and with care will last quite awhile, which means that their cost can be divided among several shows.

The samples will be found at the bottom of the page. It was someone over in George Editor Carpenter's territory who started that color scheme idea, we think, but Ruff surely does build it up. When he says the tiger stands six and a half feet from the sidewalk, you must count in the stand. In the Kellermann cut-out, he first mounted the cut-out on compo board and then on the background, getting a high relief and putting the scheme in a wholly different class from the cut-out lithograph mounted flat on cardboard. Ruff surely does keep on going.

In Agreement.

Paramount Pointers, Philadelphia, is in agreement with this department in the matter of pseudo patriotism, and suggests that the patrons come to see a performance and not become part of it. We think our small son had the whole thing in a nutshell when he was with his mother in a street car the other afternoon and remarked, "Let's sing the Star Spangled Banner and see them all stand up." It's just about the same with the average orchestra. They play the anthem not to display patriotism, but to see the people stand up—and the people know that's the only reason.

Mr. Chenoweth Calls.

H. A. Chenoweth, who first came in from Boston, sends in a batch of stuff from the Majestic, a Goldstein Brother's house, Thompsonville, Mass. Probably the town does not boast of a newspaper, for the samples are all throwaways. Most of them, we think, are too full of type. He is trying to say too much on one bill. This is particularly the case in a town that seems to have so mixed a population, for John de Angelus and Cologero Misuraca keeps shoe stores, Avidis Tatoain has the candy store, Sisitzky runs a fish market and Mirabile keeps a furnishing store. This argues a mixed foreign population, and they are not keen on reading English. Mr. Chenoweth advertises three benefit performances, which are always good cards, but he seems rather uncertain about an Arbuckle night, for he says:

We Hope we Can? We are Trying to!
We May and we May Not——GET
FATTY ARBUCKLE HIMSELF
The Celebrated Comedian—Here at the Majestic
MONDAY NIGHT, APRIL 30th

He wants to come so he can see himself as others see him. He is going to try to be here in person. If he is, believe me Thompsonville will surely see the cleverest comedian now being shown on the screen. I am not positive, but I am doing my best to get this celebrated screen star. Anyway, if he does not come, and I cannot say he positively will be on hand, you will positively be assured of seeing one grand corking 2,000 feet of Keystone comedy when you see
FATTY ARBUCKLE AND MABLE NORMAN
in "THE BRIGHT LIGHTS"

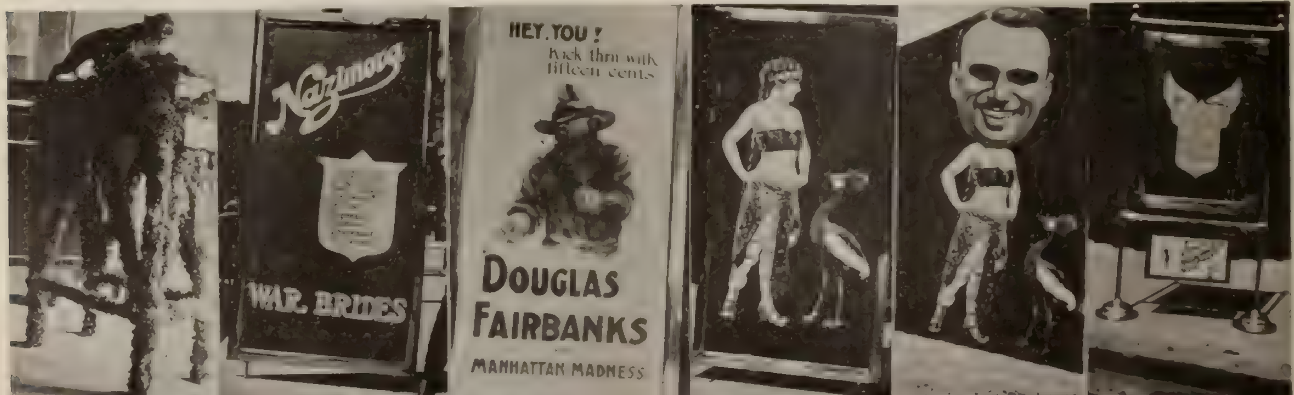
It looks as though Mr. Chenoweth was a little less than certain about seeing Fatty in all his flesh. It may get a laugh from some, but many will not see a pleasantry in the phrasing of the announcement, and will be puzzled, and as a rule it is a bad plan to suggest that a management wishes to do a thing and cannot. Mr. Chenoweth is handicapped by poor composition, but it's the best he can get, probably, and if in a small town it is usually a good scheme to stick to the local printer.

Hybridized.

Down in Macon, Ga., there are three houses, the Princess, Capitol and Palace. For a name for their joint program they selected PrinCaPalace Films. It's a nifty looking sheet, 9 by 12 inches, eight pages and enamel cover, nicely printed, well made up and well edited. It looks like a society weekly rather than a house organ, and will please the fastidious as well as appeal to the less exacting. It sticks pretty closely to the current films, but the items are so displayed as to suggest general reading, and there is enough film miscellany to enable it to qualify as a magazine in the general reading sense. The issue to hand is the second number, but it has the looks of an old-timer because it was started properly. It should make business.

Luncheon Matinees.

The Stillman, Cleveland, Ohio, has a new name for morning matinee performances. From eleven to one the house sells for a fifteen-cent admission. The Stillman makes elaborate provisions for the comfort of shoppers, and the reception room is open to the public, so that the place can be used as a meeting point, so of course the "luncheon matinee" is an additional attraction. They have replaced their folding mailing card with straight government post cards, done in black, neat looking, but lacking the distinction of the Madden style. In a recent one we fail to see that the fact that Earle Williams won a popularity contest in Minneapolis will greatly move the Cleveland public, but this is used for the talking point.



Doing Your Bit.

We are indebted to the Thanhouser company for a copy of the letter sent by the Bedford Park branch of the Red Cross. Bedford Park is a part of New York City and it was comparatively easy to arrange for Mr. Warde's appearance, but it does not have to be Mr. Warde, nor even a picture player, for the chief figure. Every community has its official goat whose very presence lends distinction to an affair. The letter runs:

> Regarding your request for more information on our very successful "Red Cross Day" at the U. S. theater here in the Bronx, beg to say it was handled by a committee of the Bedford Park Branch, Bronx Chapter, American Red Cross, consisting of Mrs. W. W. Niles, Mrs. John Philips, Mrs. Charles Barton and the writer, and Manager M. Z. Fleischman of the U. S. theater, which is the newest and largest motion picture house in our neighborhood. A number of films were viewed and the committee chose "The Vicar of Wakefield" with Frederick Warde in the title role, as being a classic, a clean, beautiful story, and suitable for young and old. Mr. North, of Pathe, was consulted, and promised that Mr. Warde would appear personally at the performance and speak during the evening. The benefit was advertised through the territory served by this theater in various ways. Placards were placed in shop windows, notices were read by the principals of the various schools, and from the pulpits of our churches, and on the Saturday before the benefit we collected all the available automobiles and had an automobile parade. This was headed by a young lady on horseback wearing the uniform of the Woman's Military Reserve, carrying a large Red Cross Flag. The first car carried a young man in Scotch costume, playing the bagpipes; next came a number of cars, decorated with banners and flags, filled with young ladies, wearing the official uniform of Red Cross Workers, who distributed literature advertising the performance. The parade traversed all the principal streets, and attracted much attention. Tickets to half the seating capacity of the theater were sold beforehand at an advance of ten cents over the price of the house, and these seats were reserved until 7:30, regular prices prevailing at the box office. Mr. Warde occupied a box with the clergy, officials of the Red Cross, and others. He made a brilliant speech, giving an account of the way "The Vicar of Wakefield" was written, and also of the way it came to be filmed. He was heartily applauded at the conclusion of his speech, and was then presented with a sheaf of American Beauty roses, tied with the tri-color and the colors of the Red Cross. The presentation was made by little Constance Nash, daughter of an old friend and admirer of Mr. Warde, dressed as a Red Cross nurse. In accepting the flowers, Mr. Warde made a short but extremely appropriate reply, eliciting more applause. Flowers were sold in the lobby of the theater by young ladies dressed in the Red Cross uniforms, who also acted as ushers. A good sum was thus realized with comparatively little effort. The film was presented twice during the evening, the house being filled to capacity each time. The audiences were highly pleased and very demonstrative, and the following day on all sides was heard the highest praise of the acting of Mr. Warde as the fatherly old vicar, and of the masterly way in which the production was staged and filmed.

From now until the end of the war there are going to be all sorts of demands upon the public, and that house will gain the greater credit that lends itself most readily and most effectively to the movement of the moment. For this reason we are giving the various schemes used throughout the country. File them all away in a special envelope against the time you need some scheme. But don't make the mistake of using some "patriotic" film feature. Offer good entertainment and it will be easier for the patrons to be patriotic and buy tickets.

Marking the Birthday.

Somehow it would seem that not so many houses as usual are having birthdays. We know of some that used to have two and three a year, but lately only the New York Rialto and the Third Street, Easton, Pa., have been celebrating. Now comes the Strand, of Altoona, Pa., to end its first year with an extra good bill and a souvenir program. The program is a four-page cover of heavy cream-laid paper with a four-page insert on plate paper, to permit the proper use of cuts. The cover is embellished by a reproduction of the interior of the house on a busy night, and the back page of the insert gives five views of the interior, but none of the exterior, though it is well, even when patrons know the house, to show the front. Be proud of your interior, but lose no chance to visualize your lobby to the public. Make them so familiar with it that the sight of it suggests theatergoing. The artist, in his drawn greeting, brings out a nice point. Between the pictures of the managers are the words "Strand Theater." Below the cuts are lettered the names and the full text reads:

Strand Theater
Jacob Silverman and Isaac Silverman
Extends on this the first anniversary, etc.

The house "extends" the Silvermans would "extend," but the planning of the design leaves it a question whether the house or the management greet. By taking the names inside the circles the house could have come down when "extends" would be right. In having work drawn it is well to remember that few artists are good grammarians, and stand a lot of watching.

Thoughtful.

The Garfield theater, Chicago, thoughtfully rubberstamps its program envelopes "Do not forward." This is to guard against the possible forwarding of its programs to vacationists under a one-cent due stamp. It is a small thing in itself, but to get a succession of due stamps on the programs of a theater is not inclined to fill you with admiration for that house, and you will be apt to be still sore when you return to town. By stamping in the caution the Garfield saves its patrons annoyance and so saves its patrons for next winter's use. Lately the Garfield announced an "All Girl Week," giving a program of seven feminine stars in as many days; no difficult matter and by no means a novelty, and yet capable of being exploited as a novelty and drawing as such. For this special week they got out an extra program card, punched for hanging and with a calendar for the month on the back, a straight calendar with a picture of the interior and an "Open All Summer" on the screen, with the calendar below and in between

New Patronge
    Invited and Encouraged;
Old Patronage
    Fostered and Maintained.

This is a happy line, for it appeals to the newcomer and regular patron alike. One of the regular programs carries the "Orpheum Bill" verses. Mr. Blanchard surely did make a contribution to the country in that happy set of verses. That Garfield program is getting to be a veteran. The house has held to the same form of four-page card folder for a long time now, evidently finding it good enough to retain. There is always a snappy front page talk and inside the bill for the week is attractively set forth, not with an array of adjectives, but much as the management would tell its friends about the show. Evidently they realize that good presswork is no more than interesting talk. When it gets more ambitious it ceases to be good presswork. It's a simple rule, yet one few seem able to grasp. You don't have to do "picture writing" to get the crowd. That's the best way to keep the crowd away. Be unaffected and natural and you'll be far more convincing. Prove it by yourself. Do you believe some of the advertisements and press stuff you read? Then why credit the patrons with less sense? You never see "Stupendous," "Greatest Ever" and the like in the Garfield programs, and yet somehow the house seems to keep on doing good business.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Mrs. Bertsch's Book.

VERY accurately the newest book on photoplay is titled How to Write for Moving Pictures, rather than How to Write Moving Pictures. This eptomizes the difference between the text book and the essay, and Mrs. Bertsch, its author, has written an essay upon what should be done rather than on how to do it.

Mrs. Bertsch was for some time the editor for the Vitagraph company, and later went to Famous Players. Considering her long experience and her previous connection with the public schools, her book is a trifle disappointing, but none the less it is one that should form part of every photoplay writer's library, for much that she writes is vital and most of it is interesting. It should, and will, become one of the standard works, but it is to be hoped that if the book runs into a second edition, Mrs. Bertsch will drop her complacency and give us the best that is in her. In the present volume she barely scratches great truths without baring the surface. She should at least uncover sufficient of the subject to enable the novice to dig beneath the surface.

Mrs. Bertsch has her little likes and dislikes, and she airs them, as we all do, but we think she does not comprehend what Phil Lang and others speak of as the "picture eye." She devotes an entire chapter to the effort to traverse the statement that without the picture eye it is not possible to write pictures. Evidently unable to understand what is meant by the phrase, she denies the need. To her the picture eye is no more than "the persistent tendency of the human mind to visualize, to people space with mental images." This, as she says, is the common trait. She even credits some animals with the possession of the "picture eye," and so believes the phrase no more than a bugaboo raised to scare the beginners.

This is not so. The picture eye is the ability to visualize a subject so vitally that the relative value of scenes may be adjudged. Mrs. Bertsch has the faculty herself, but apparently does not realize the fact.

In some minor points, as well, she airs prejudice. She affects fine scorn of those who tell the size of paper to be used, the color of the typewriter ribbon, and even refuses to advise against the rolled manuscript, "as the matter is not of sufficient importance to influence the acceptance of your manuscript." Here Mrs. Bertsch deliberately misleads those she assumes to instruct. Editors do not read rolled manuscript because they know that the rolled manuscript is the hall-mark of incompetence. The matter is not of vital importance, of course, for the beginner will soon learn better, but it is a surprising statement to find in a book purporting to teach the writing of photoplay.

But to outweigh these little faults of feminine prejudice there is much that is good. Indeed, the latter chapters of the book might, with entire propriety, be issued as a treatise on plots and plotting, and plotting, after all, is the great essential, far outweighing the trifling details of form. There is a sound chapter on the synopsis only, but a rather trivial treatment of the factors of photoplay. The cut-back is dismissed in four pages and but four and a quarter pages are given to the dissolve and double exposure in which the daydream and straight dissolve are regarded as a single factor instead of two distinct forms of camera work. It is not until she comes to plots and plotting that she seems to take a real interest in her work. The camera factors which are important in that they and they alone constitute the individual technique of photoplay are slighted. The dissolve, the close-up, the cut-back and similar devices are peculiar to photoplay. These are the technical resources; the devices by which the plot is most advantageously disposed, and they should not be dismissed casually. The means by which a result is obtained are, primarily, more important than the result, since this result is wholly dependent upon the means. Here Mrs. Bertsch seems to have almost a contempt for the mechanics of play building. Her interest seems to lie almost wholly in the plot, though plot is useless without adequate exposition.

As a sub-title the legend reads, "A Book of Instruction and Information." It is in no sense an instruction book—a text, but it conveys much real and important information, and as such it is entitled to a place on the author's book shelf.

How to Write for Moving Pictures, a Manual of Instruction and Information, by Marguerite Bertsch. Octavo, 275 pages. New York, George H. Doran Company. Price $1.50.

Advice.

Someone has said that advice is something given, but not taken. That is just about how it stands. Sometimes we are tempted to pull down the full face notice from the top of this department and get mean and horrid and refuse to reply to questions. The other day we told someone not to send to a certain company, assuring him that we had good reasons for the advice. Back he comes with a hot protest that the company has treated him the best of all—though they have never bought anything. That was just what we knew when we advised him to stop sending in. They buy nothing, but they write beautiful letters asking to see more work. Trying to warn him off without getting into a libel suit merely gets us another letter and no thanks. Another—a woman—asked about selling stuff. Reading through her letter we could see she was not ready to write stuff that sold. We advised her to wait. Back comes reply that she must do something, as she is living on the charity of friends. All she will do will be to further burden that charity to the extent of wasted stamps. She doesn't want to write because she has a message. She merely needs the money and thinks writing is the easiest and most genteel way of getting it. We don't ask you to take the advice we give, but don't argue if the advice does not agree with you. Ignore it, but do not seek an appeal.

Teacher Dear.

If Congress had time just now for minor matters, we would seek the enactment of a law making it a crime for any school teacher or professor, orally or in writing, directly or by inference to convey the idea that any individual, man, woman, child or trained monkey can write photoplays. It would help a lot to keep people from spoiling white paper. What if your high school teacher does tell you that you should write great photoplays because you have such a vivid imagination. What does he know about it? He isn't going to buy your plays. It doesn't cost him anything to kick you onto the chute. It listens well to him and you and you thank him for his good opinion, and ever after use his opinion as justification for your evil deeds. June released another batch of graduates, and they all have been told how great they are. If your teacher tells you such fairy stories thank him with a smile, but mentally set him down as a liar. He may not intend to deceive you. He may be deceiving himself, but he is working harm and not good. Try stories, but find out for yourself. When you can write, you'll know it without being told.

Little Faith.

Begins a correspondent: "I have an idea I can write photoplays. Now I may not have any ability along this line at all, so I would like to be checked at the beginning. I would prefer knowing the truth now than to waste perhaps years in finding it out and perhaps flooding the scenario departments with useless plays." He goes on to ask the name of a company that makes a business of advising beginners as to their merits. No doubt the writer thinks he is doing the proper thing in going at it in this way. He doesn't want to waste his time. He doesn't want to annoy the script readers. He wants to know now. We told him. No man who goes at the work in that spirit can possibly hope to succeed. He is looking for a job rather than a profession. He does not want to write because he cannot possibly help giving expression to his thoughts. He wants to write to get checks and glory, and neither checks nor glory comes to the faint-heart who lacks the perseverance to gain success through work and who can regard that work as part of the fun. No one can tell you if you will make a success of a certain line of work. You must find out through experiment and experience.

Mailing Scripts.

Nowadays the demand is mostly for synopsis only, but if you do have occasion to ship a multiple-reel story, the best way is to use carbon paper boxes. Sometimes you can beg them from stationers and office friends, but in the large cities it is easier to buy them from some large wholesale stationer. They cost about the same as a photomailer, but carry better because the box is the exact size of the sheets.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Trouble With Lighting System.

> I trust you will pardon me for again troubling you, but I am having difficulty with my lighting system. Notice on page 638 of the Handbook, diagram of a lighting system which you recommended some years ago. I would very much like to know how it was arranged; also the C. P. of the lamps, and whether or not they were tinted, also what kind of shade is used, and were they opaque.

Well, Brother Murphy, I could give you the desired information, but during the past two months—since leaving New York, in fact, I have evolved a system of auditorium lighting which is so far ahead of anything now in use for moving picture purposes that I wouldn't care to mislead you by giving information on the old system. Briefly it is as follows:

First—What is it we wish to do in the lighting of a moving picture auditorium during the time the picture is on the screen? Answer: Three things, and three things only, viz.: Keep all rays of light from the screen and from the side wall off the theater. Second—Keep all rays of light, or direct light at least, from the eyes of the audience. Third—so direct the rays of light that they will flood or cover the seating space, AND THE SEATING SPACE ONLY, from the rear.

All right; let us place on the front of the balcony, if there be one, near its upper railing, as many incandescent lamps as we may wish to use for illuminating the front end of the auditorium. The audience cannot see these lights, because that portion of the audience in front of the balcony will be either directly under, or ahead of them, and that portion sitting behind the front end of the balcony will of course be entirely out of sight of the lamps. If the balcony be a curved one, then the lights should be massed either at or near the center of the curve. Having placed the lights in position, stretch a cord, or string, from the lower side of the lamp to the front row of seats. Now, bring out over the lamps a shade, which will extend straight out from the balcony front not less than 12, and preferably 18, inches, and then drop down in a sharp curve until it touches the aforesaid cord or string. The side of this screen which is next the light should be painted dead black on its curved and perpendicular portion, and white on its upper or flat portion; also it will be much better and more effective if a band of white, angled as shown in the sketch, be placed on the front of the balcony immediately back of the lamps. Now, Brother Murphy, you stop and think of that proposition for a moment. Don't you see that the screen cuts the light off sharply at the front row of seats, or, for that matter, anywhere else you may desire it to. You must, however, shade the lights sidewise so that the light will not reach the side walls of the theater. If you have no balcony, then the lights may be placed directly on the ceiling, but in this event you must bring a curved metal shade from the ceiling down back of the lamps, curved in so that it stops at a point just a trifle ahead of the center of the lamp, as here B in the sketch. This shield is to prevent the rays of the lamp reaching the eyes of the audience. You then bring a shield directly down from the ceiling 18 inches in front of the lamp to meet a cord stretched from the lamp to the front row of seats, or wherever you wish to cut off the light, painting the back or light side of the shield dead black. The reason for having the shield out 12 or 18 inches from the lamp is that if you place it closer you will, due to the area of the lamp filament, not be able to cut your light off on a sharp line. I believe you can understand the foregoing, but if you cannot then send me ground floor plan and elevation of your theater, together with your check in the sum of $25, and I will draw you working plans for installing such a system for your house.

Arc Misbehaves.

J. O. Sneva, Underwood, Minn., has concluded that he needs help and makes application for same in the following form:

> Sometimes since I was obliged to change from D. C. to A. C. and it seems as though I will never get used to the new juice. The supply is 60 cycle, 110 Volt, A. C. through a Ft. Wayne Compensarc marked 30-40-60 Amperes; all wires from the line are No. 6. Wires run through a watt meter marked 15 amperes. Has this meter sufficient capacity?
> My lens system is lined up according to the handbook, as nearly as is possible within the limitations of my projection tables. On one machine I am going to build a four-inch extension, in order to get the condenser back where it belongs. I have a ten-foot picture on a calcimined cloth screen, with a seventy-foot throw angling down about two and one-half feet. I for the most part use ⅝th cored carbon, with the compensarc on the 30 ampere notch. Arc burns steadily and I get fairly good results but after running for 10 or 15 minutes my arc becomes unruly, and while it is in this condition it makes a noise like a blow torch, with the light apparently all over the lamp house. During this performance there is much flaming and sputtering. This condition may last for 10 seconds or it may last three times that long, after which it will settle back to its natural hum. Sometimes there will be half dozen of these spells during a five-reel show then again there won't be so many. They come often with the compensarc at 40, and still more frequently when it is on the 60 ampere notch. It is for this reason I am obliged to use the lowest notch. It is the same in both lamps, although the angle of the lamps is not the same. When using ¾ carbons the result is the same. Am now going to get ½-inch carbons and try them. Lamps are clean and all connections tight. Use the D. C. set as you recommend in the handbook. Have tried both Speer and National carbons. Maybe it is just natural for A. C. to work that way though others claim that they have no trouble. One peculiarity is however, that with new carbons the arc burns good for a long time, say half an hour then the trouble starts. When I burn both lamps, one on 30 ampere notch of compensarc and the other on 25 ampere rheostat the light is poor until I turn out one of them. Is this the fault of the watt meter? I believe something is wrong—in fact I believe everything is wrong with A. C. I have been told that my picture is better than the average, but I am not swelled up over that, because some people couldn't tell the difference between a charcoal drawing and a photograph made with the finest anastigmat lens. Will wait your advice believing you can give me valuable information.

In the first place Brother Sneva, most emphatically your watt meter has not sufficient capacity. In order to pull 60 amperes through a compensarc, not counting the loss through inefficiency in the compensarc itself you would take from the line about 60x35=2100 watts, which divided by 110 equals about 19 amperes. But when you figure out the loss in the instrument itself you will be taking considerably over 20 amperes from the line, therefore, at 60 amperes you would be overloading the watt meter and overloading it rather seriously. With the compensarc on the 30 ampere notch you are not overloading the watt meter. Everything considered it would not be quite working up to capacity, I think, providing there is no other load on it. If you run both arcs for any length of time you would, in all probability, either burn out the watt meter or seriously injure it. No, you don't want ¾-inch carbons, ⅝s are big enough for anything up to 60 amperes A. C.

As to matching up your lens system, I would recommend that instead of the table in the handbook you use the chart published on page 1768, March 17 issue, of the Department. In fact all owners of handbooks should cut that chart out and paste it in the handbook opposite the table, substituting it therefore. The handbook table is still of value in giving you an understanding of the optical system of the projector, but the chart is the latest advancement in knowledge of lining up the optical system.

Now with regard to the perfectly scandalous misbehavior of your arc: I am afraid you chased my angora pretty close to the edge of the tall timber. If what you say is true I cannot see anything in your conditions which would account for the trouble, except (a) defective carbon cores or hard spots in carbons, which are now comparatively rare, but which would cause just that kind of difficulty, or (b) feeding of the carbons too close together, which also will sometimes account for a trouble of that kind, though usually not. I will pass this little matter up to operators who have had the same trouble asking them to kindly correspond directly with Brother Sneva because I am far from New York just at this time and cannot give the prompt help required if the matter is conducted to the meeting of the projection department.

It Is to Laugh.

One of the machine agents recently handed me a "horrible example" which, in the perfectly awful ignorance displayed, would be sufficient to make a Jersey cow break into a broad grin. It seems that this particularly bright specimen of an "Operator" had an aperture plate, the track of which was very badly worn on the left side, in fact so badly that there was a hole in the center of the track; also it was pretty badly worn on the right side, though not nearly so much as on the left; evidence of a fine brand of stupidity displayed by Friend "Operator" in adjusting his tension and his machine gate. Now this particularly bright specimen, after the aperture plate had gotten into such a perfectly awful condition, conceived the idea that a new set of tension shoes might "help some." He ordered the shoes only to discover that, strange as it seemed they didn't fit the worn aperture, whereupon he conceived brilliant idea number two, and proceeded to bend the aforesaid shoes in an endeavor to make them fit the worn aperture. Brilliant idea number two did not prove to be a howling success, whereupon he evolved brilliant idea No. 3, and put three thicknesses of cardboard, amounting, in total, to about 1/16th inch thickness, behind the aperture plate, in an endeavor to bow it out so that the worn place would be straightened.

And the pitiful part is that the art of the high-priced artist, the huge expenditure of money, mental effort and work on the part of the producer, plus $600 to $1,000 worth of film and from $500 to $2,000 worth of projection machinery is all placed at the mercy of this ingrowing ignoramus, who didn't even have sufficient mechanical ability to know that he needed a new aperture plate when the track was worn clear through on one side. Very likely he was a cheap operator, who secured and held his job on that basis. We might, however, inquire of the "manager" whether or not this kind of imitation is really cheap. You know imitations usually secure their market by reason of the fact that they are cheaper than the real article, but they are seldom equal in quality. Query: Is the inferior article really cheap? Answer: NO.

Solar Explains.

John Solar, Watertown, N. Y., says

> Referring to your comments on Mr. Linstruth's letter in the June 9th issue of the World: A 110 volt lamp connected in series with a 25 ampere 110 volt rheostat will burn to nearly full candle power. With two or more resistances connected in series the drop in voltage across each fixture will be in direct proportion to their resistance. For instance in this case the resistance of the rheostat is 2.5 ohms, and that of the lamp 220 ohms, so that the total resistance of the circuit is 222.5 ohms.
>
>
> flowing through the circuit. The drop in voltage across the lamp being in direct proportion to its resistance, we have the formula: As lamp resistance is to the total resistance, so the lamp voltage is to the line voltage. We therefore have 220 : 222.5 : : x : 110 or
>
> $$\frac{220\text{x}110}{222.5}=108.76\text{ voltage drop across the lamp.}$$
>
> For the drop across the rheostat we have, by the same process of calculation,
>
> $$\frac{2.5\text{x}110}{222.5}=1.23\text{ volts.}$$
>
> The above applies only to rheostat resistance. With an economizer, or any type of transformer used to reduce the line voltage, the test lamp, connected across the carbon holders would burn to approximately one half its candle power.

Wants the Formula.

> We are using a power 6-A motive driven machine, taking 220 volt D. C. through a coil rheostat. Would like a suggestion as to the right size of carbons to use. At present we are using National twelve inch ¾ cored carbons above, with ⅝ solid below. Our light is satisfactory, but if it can be improved we would like to have the formula. We also have an indirect lighting system, which has proven to be quite satisfactory, and while we do not vouch for its originality we find it has solved the lighting problem for the small town exhibitor, and has solved it at a minimum of expense. We secured five ordinary wooden chopping bowls, such as friend wife uses in the kitchen. These cost 65 cents each. We suspended them from the ceiling by means of ordinary brass chains costing 5 cents per foot. We have two on each side of the house, and one in the center. The center bowl burns continuously, while the other four are connected with a switch located in the operating room. The bowls, of course, have to be lined with asbestos, and we have a blue colored light in the center bowl.

Don't know why you should line the bowl with asbestos, Brother Herbes. Do you think an ordinary incandescent light would set wood on fire? Come to think of it, though, I guess your asbestos stunt is along the lines of "safety first," because a nitrogen filled bulb certainly does get pretty hot. Yes, this particular stunt has been described in the projection department two or three times, but it was a long time ago. When I get back to New York I intend to make a series of drawings illustrating my idea of the proper method of moving picture theater auditorium illumination during the time the picture is running. On this trip I have had it very thoroughly drilled into my understanding that there is tremendous amount of inefficient auditorium illumination, which is operating to set up heavy and unnecessary eye strain, and by reflex action injure the results on the screen. It is not, however, the injury to the result on the screen which is most serious. Friend patron, after trying to look at the picture for something like an hour and a half, with a smear of white light distracting and annoying his eye, leaves the theater declaring that the "pictures hurt his eyes." By reason of this fact, instead of coming frequently, he confines his visits to perhaps once a week. The fact of the matter is that it is not the picture which does the damage, but the inefficiency of the auditorium lighting.

Exhibitors, both small town and city, would be immensely the gainer if they would study auditorium lighting and apply scientific methods thereto, remembering that a "pretty effect" in auditorium lighting may be had at tremendous expense to the box office, by setting up eye strain which acts to limit the number of times the patron will visit the theater during a given period. As to carbon sizes see pages 285 and 287 of handbook; also try Speer Holdark and National silvertip negatives; also see article in department not long ago.

Unique Machine.

Up in LaCrosse, Wisconsin, the Badger Stereopticon and Picture Machine Company is engaged in marketing what is in my opinion a really remarkable projector. The machine is remarkable in that by a very simple, but apparently effective arrangement, it combines a thoroughly practical moving picture machine designed chiefly for educational and home purposes, with a thoroughly practical stereopticon and reflectoscope. This makes the machine peculiarly adapted to home work and to educational work by reason of the fact that it will show moving picture and standard stereopticon slides, and will also show post cards, drawings, pieces of machinery, the pages of a book or any thing else less than three inches in thickness and not larger in area than an ordinary postcard.

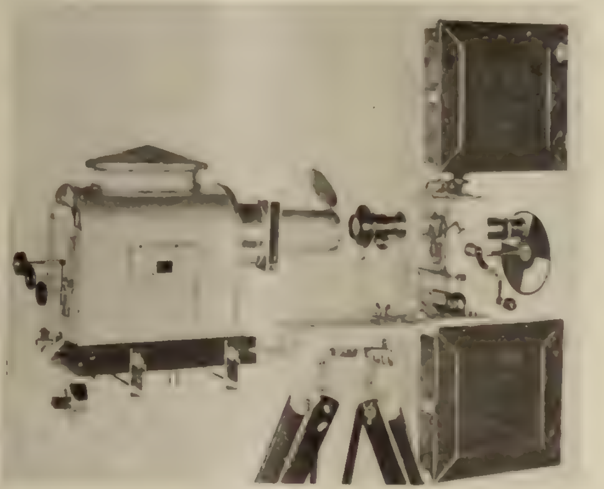

Illustration 1.

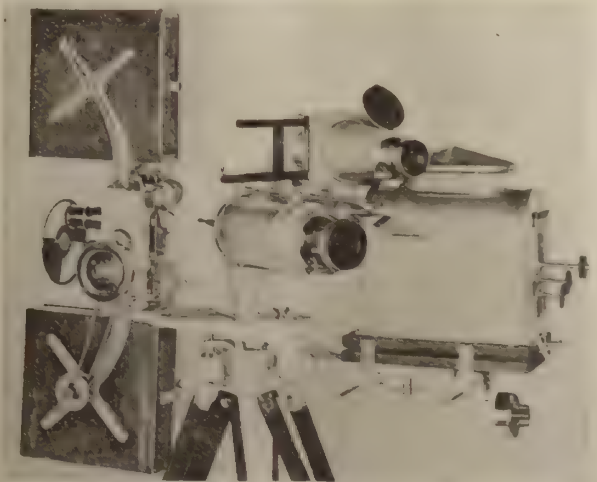

Illustration 2.

The machine is substantially built, and is mounted on a rigid tripod, very similar in some ways to the tripod used for moving picture cameras. The stereopticon and picture machine is combined in the usual way. By slipping off the lamp house cone and in its place substituting a rather weird looking affair made of aluminum casting we have the reflectoscope.

The machine may be used with incandescent, acetylene, or with an arc lamp, which has a maximum capacity of 35 amperes. This lamp may either be of the old right angle type or regular standard, such as is ordinarily used in projection work. The intermittent is the old familiar claw type once used to a considerable extent in moving picture machines and still used in many cameras. The frame of the machine is of aluminium. The magazines are of pressed steel, have the usual fire trap, and will accommodate a standard 10-inch reel.

At a guess, without measuring, the shutter cuts between 40 and 45 degrees of the light.

The whole thing is a thoroughly practical little machine for the purpose for which it is intended, namely, for use in schools, colleges, churches, lodges and for use in the home. It may, of course, also be used by traveling salesmen, and as a matter of fact some of the machines have been sold for this purpose.

Optical Terms.

TECHNICAL terms used in photography are often puzzling to the amateur, particularly, perhaps, those terms which relate to the science of optics. The following glossary of optical terms has been prepared with a view to giving general information as to the descriptive words and phrases in ordinary use.

Equivalent focal length. Focal Plane is the plane in which a far distant object is imaged by the lens. The line drawn perpendicularly through the center of the lens is its Optical Axis; the point at which the Focal Plane intersects the Optical Axis, the Focal Point of the lens.

The Focal Length of a lens is the value upon which depends the size of the images produced by that lens. Its magnitude can be determined only by comparing the size of a given object with its image as formed by the lens. The distance of the object, unless very great, must also be considered.

For far distant objects the size of the image is in direct proportion to the focal length. A lens of 12-inch focal length will produce an image of a distant steeple twice as large as the image formed by a lens of 6-inch focal length.

Back Focus is the distance from the focal point to the rear surface of the lens. In the case of very thin lenses, this back focus is equal to the focal length, while in the case of lenses of considerable thickness and in combinations of lenses, the back focus cannot be relied upon as any indication of the value of the focal length. The focal length of such a lens is equal to the focal length of a thin lens, which gives an image equivalent in size to the one formed by the combination lens, hence the term "Equivalent Focal Length."

In using short focus cinematographic lenses it is important to know both the back and the equivalent focus, since the construction of some makes of motion picture cameras is such that the revolving shutter has not been placed close enough to the aperture to admit a lens of very short back focus without interfering with the shutter blades.

The installation of a 35 mm. lens often demands considerable alteration in a cine camera, not only of the shutter, but of the front board as well, since the lens flange ordinarily used with lenses of longer focal length is apt to cut off the corners of the picture.

On account of the exaggerated perspective, lenses of extremely short focus are not recommended for use except where limited space does not permit the use of a lens of sufficient focal length to give a normal perspective.

In the majority of photographic lenses the equivalent focal length is greater than the back focus, an exception being found in single meniscus or single concavo-convex combinations, which are practially never used as cine lenses, where the back focus is the longer.

By measuring back from the focal point a distance equal to the equivalent focal length, we find the position of the so-called optical center of the lens, which is nearly always near the diaphragm.

Angle of view is the angle under which the diameter of the circular area covered sharply by the lens appears from the center of the lens. If the largest plate, which the lens covers sharply, is used, the angle of view is equal to the angle under which the diagonal of the plate appears from the center of the lens. The angle of view increases with the decrease of the focus of the lens for the same size plate. Lenses for general purposes are calculated for an angle of about 60°. Lenses covering 75° to 100° are termed Wide Angle Lenses. Wide angle lenses have necessarily shorter foci than other lenses rated for the same plate.

As a motion picture is customarily viewed at a distance relatively greater than a still photo the angle of view averaging nearest normal is about 28°, using the base and not the diagonal of the picture as a basis for calculation. This is the angle subtended by a two-inch lens on the standard ¾' x 1' aperture or picture frame. Lenses of shorter focus than this are termed wide angle, although the angle of view is still not so great as that found in many still pictures which are taken with lenses which would still be far from being considered as wide angle for an ordinary photograph.

The circular area which is covered by the lens on the ground glass is called its Image Circle, and its diameter is expressed in linear measure (inches or centimeters).

Effective aperture is measured by the diameter of the beam of light admitted by the lens. The effective aperture is not, as often thought, equal to the diameter of the front lens, nor is it equal to the linear diameter of the diaphragm opening used. It equals the diameter of the diaphragm as it appears when observed through the front lens; therefore, the effective aperture cannot be found by unscrewing the front lens and measuring the actual diameter of the diaphragm. Only in the case of a landscape lens, or meniscus, where the diaphragm is placed in front of the lens, is the effective aperture expressed by the linear diameter of the diaphragm.

The actual diameter of the effective aperture may be obtained by placing a piece of developing paper against the glass of the front combination and exposing it through the lens. The diameter of the round black spot obtained by developing the paper is that of the effective aperture of the lens.

The effective aperture varies, of course, with the size of the diaphragm opening.

Relative aperture is a fraction which expresses the ratio of effective aperture to focal length; for instance, relative aperture of 1:6.3 means that the focal length is 6.3 times greater than the effective aperture. The denominator of the fraction, in this instance the ngure 6.3, is called the F value. If the relative aperture is known, the effective aperture can be found by multiplying the relative by the focus. For example: F:160; relative aperture = 1:8; effective aperture = 160 x 1:8 = 20. The relative aperture is a term of greatest value and convenience in judging the time of exposure. All lenses of the same relative aperture, no matter what their focus may be, require the same exposure under the same conditions. An exception will be mentioned under the heading, "Depth of Focus."

The exposure necessary for different relative apertures can easily be found because they are proportionate to the square of the F values. For instance, if two lenses are compared with the relative apertures 1:4 and 1:8 respectively, the squares of F values are 16 and 64 respectively, which means that the 1:8 requires four times as long exposure as the 1:4 lens, since 64/16 = 4. This, of course, also holds true in comparing the different stops.

Speed. The relative aperture is very commonly called the speed of the lens, although the speed of two lenses is not proportionate to their relative apertures, but to their squares. In other words, a lens with the speed of 1:4 is not twice as fast as a lens with the speed of 1:8, but four times so, as the comparison of the squares for their relative apertures 1/16 and 1/64 shows.

There are two methods of designating lens stops, viz.: the so-called F System of the Royal Photographic Society, wherein the stop is expressed by fractions of the focal length, and the U. S. (Uniform System), in which every following stop requires a doubling of the exposure or represents half the speed of the foregoing, the exposure required with F:4 being taken as the unit.

Comparison between the F System and the U. S. (Uniform System) of Stops:

F. System..........	F:4	F:4.5	F:5.6	F:6.3	F:8	F:11.3	F:16	F:22.6	F:32
U. S. System......	1	1.2	2	2.5	4	8	16	32	64

The above table gives the comparative stops in the two systems and shows at the same time the exposure values of the different stops in the F system. For instance, F:11.3 requires four times as long an exposure as F.5.6; and F:32, an exposure sixteen times longer than F:8, since 8/2 = 4 and 64/4 = 16.

At first glance it would seem that the U. S. system would be the more convenient one to use since it gives the relative exposure direct, but in practice it is really just as simple to use the F system if it is well fixed in the mind that each succeeding F number as customarily marked on a lens barrel is half the speed of the preceding one. Wherever any calculation is involved the F number is the one used and a U. S. system number must first be resolved to its F equivalent to obtain a result so that the U. S. system is becoming obsolete except on some of the simpler hand cameras with low grade lenses.

Depth of Focus. Very closely connected with the speed of a lens is its depth of focus. All well-corrected lenses image only one plane of the object space sharply. The reason why a lens focused at a house images also with sufficient sharpness, say a horse in front and a tree back of it, lies in the fact that a slight racking out of focus will not cause an indistinctness great enough to be noticeable to the eye. The range of sharpness forward and back of the object is called "depth of focus" or "depth of field." It depends on several factors, viz., the focal length of the lens, the aperture used (consequently its speed), the distance of the object, and the amount of lack of sharpness which seems permissible to the operator. Of these factors, focal length, aperture and distance are definite numerical values.

Will Exchanges Leave Washington?

Film Men Still Worry Over New Regulations—Baltimore Has Facilities.

WASHINGTON'S exhibitors are considerably upset following the announcement that the film exchange managers stationed here had agreed to submit a request to their home offices for permission to move the various exchanges to the city of Baltimore that they might escape the very onerous restrictions placed upon their activities by officials of the District of Columbia. As previously noted in the Washington letter, new regulations have been promulgated under the provisions of which the exchanges would have to be re-located in some sort of a fireproof structure containing a film vault. There is no such building at present available in Washington, unless the builder or film company interested would be willing to go to a great deal of expense in making the building conform to these regulations. They do not stop with the building itself and the vaults, but go further and cover the number of films that may be exposed at the one time, the number of films that may be carried through the streets, and the number of reels that may be retained in a theater, and many other features that would have a tendency to make the conducting of a film business in this city more difficult..

Both the District building inspector and Fire Marshal Nicholson claim that there has been misrepresentation as to the rigor of the police regulations governing the subject which were adopted July 16, after extended conferences with the film men and others. Mr. Nicholson declares that the regulations are practically the same as those that are in force in Boston, New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and Cincinnati, and he holds that they are not designed to impose hardships, but to afford that protection to life and property which is demanded by the policy in force in the District of Columbia.

He is very much pleased with the regulations as now concocted, but in the elation over their fineness he stands alone. The film men take a very different view of the situation as may be seen by the following statement, given out by James H. Butner, on behalf of the exchange managers of the District of Columbia:

> The vote of the Exchange Managers' Association at a recent meeting to recommend to their home offices the removal of the Washington branches of the various companies to Baltimore was unanimous. The managers felt that the requirements imposed by the regulations adopted by the District Commissioners were too rigid, particularly in view of the fact that the quarters we now occupy could, in only a few cases, be adapted to meet the requirements. In cases where present quarters could be adapted to the regulations the expense involved would be great, and the film industry is at this time in no condition to withstand unnecessary outlay.
>
> The Washington exchanges selected the best available quarters when they were seeking locations. Some that would have been chosen, perhaps, rather than the quarters we occupy, were not available because, while the landlords were anxious to rent to us, the fire authorities would not approve. The consequence is that no available places other than those we now occupy await us if we are ordered from our present quarters. We cannot do business on an open lot or on the street, and but one alternative remains, namely, removal to some other city.
>
> We have had conferences with any number of Washington real estate people, many of whom expressed their willingness and readiness to erect a modern fireproof film building at a reasonable rental to each exchange. Such a building would house all of the branches. In each case it developed that for one reason or another these proposed enterprises could not be carried out.
>
> From Baltimore within the last two days have come many tenders of fireproof buildings already constructed, and many offers to erect buildings designed to meet our peculiar needs. We are also promised liberal treatment by the authorities, and are assured that rigid regulations would not be adopted to embarrass or hamper the conduct of our business.
>
> While moving picture films are highly combustible it should be borne in mind that the measures taken to minimize fire risks are such as to prevent outbreak of fires. All connected with film exchanges recognize the risks, and do their utmost to minimize them. No smoking and no matches are allowed, and in other ways constant guard is kept against possibility of fire.
>
> The landlords from whom the Washington exchanges rent would be pleased to have us remain in our present quarters. This would suit us. If we are not allowed this, all we ask is that suitable places to which we may remove be provided. Failing in this our only alternative is to go to Baltimore.

Immediately following the announcement of the intentions of the film men came a newspaper report to the effect that Tom Moore, one of the motion picture leaders of this section, would go ahead with the erection of a building that will meet with the requirements of the new regulations. It is stated that work is to be started immediately on the erection of a seven-story office building on the west side of Eighth street, between D and E, northwest, at an estimated cost of $100,000, which Mr. Moore says will be constructed to meet the peculiar needs of the moving picture exchanges. The building is to be of reinforced concrete and steel and will be fireproof in every way. It is further stated that each floor will be divided into large rooms and that it is expected that this structure will be large enough to take care of most of the film exchanges here. The site is located in the heart of the moving picture theater district, which in itself is an asset. It is announced that the building will be completed by January 1, at which time the new regulations of the District will go into effect.

If Mr. Moore or anybody else shows that work is actually to be commenced upon a building of the sort, all further efforts on the part of the managers to gain the consent of their home offices to remove their respective offices to Baltimore would cease, but the managers are loath to accept any reports as final. On several occasions prospective builders of model exchange structures have even gone so far as to have plans and specifications prepared, but in each case the scheme fell through. Unless some real change comes very soon January 1 will see the District of Columbia minus its exchanges and the city of Washington will lose the benefits that are derived from keeping an industry such as this going.

At Leading Picture Theaters

"Today" at the Strand.

THE Strand theater presented Florence Reed in a photodramatic version of "Today," George Broadhurst and Abraham Schomer's stage success, for the week of July 29. Alice Gale and Gus Weinburg, both of whom were in the cast of the stage production, are supporting Miss Reed. Lenore Harris, with her Parisian gowns, and Kate Lester are also prominent in the cast. The photo-dramatic version was produced by Harry Rapf under the direction of Ralph Ince.

Another interesting picture was Raymond L. Ditmar's zoological biography of the stage. There were also some beautiful and instructive scenic and travel pictures and a new comedy.

"Skinner's Baby" at the Rialto.

Bryant Washburn and Hazel Daly headed the program at the Rialto in "Skinner's Baby," a sequel to the widely popular "Skinner's Dress Suit." Many of the same Essanay players who appeared in the first "Skinner" picture were seen in this one. The story was suggested by Henry Irving Dodge, who created "Skinner" in The Saturday Evening Post. It was written and directed by Harry Beaumont. All the humorous incidents preceding the first arrival of the stork at the Skinner home have been elaborated into a most refreshing comedy.

As a special attraction pictures of our troops landing in France were shown, together with the transports and convoys which fought the historic battle against the attacking fleet of U-boats. Some of Lyman H. Howe's remarkable pictures of the U. S. Navy, showing smoke screens and torpedo work were also on the program. Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew supplied additional comedy with a new domestic adventure called "Their Burglar." M. Desere De Ferere and Helena Maschmedt were the soloists.

"The Lone Wolf" at the Broadway.

The Selznick production of the eight-part photo melodrama by Louis Joseph Vance, "The Lone Wolf," continues its run at the Broadway theater.

Eighty-First Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first Street theater on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Thelma Salter and Georgie Stone were seen in "In Slumberland." Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday Charles Ray, in "Sudden Jim," and Juanita Hansen, in "Dangers of a Bride," were the picture features

THANHOUSER STUDIO NOT "TAKEN OVER."

"The story that the Thanhouser studios has been taken over by the Clara Kimball Young Company is a total mistake and I would like you to give that fact publicity. The accurate news in the matter is that Miss Young's company is producing its first picture at our studio, picking our plant for this after an inspection of every large studio in and around New York City," said Mr. Thanhouser last week.

"I appreciate that no harm was meant by the erroneous item, which clearly came from the pen of some one uninformed as to the size and facilities of our place at New Rochelle. Not only is it housing Miss Young's company, but our own, under Director Ernest Warde, and we are considering letting some independent producers of large features partake of our facilities, too."

Goldwyn Gets Beach Pictures

Signs Contract for All Future Productions—"The Auction Block" First Release.

ALL future Rex Beach pictures, made from the stories and novels of this world-famed author, are to be distributed and controlled by the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation under a contract signed by Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn; Benjamin B. Hampton, president of the Rex Beach Film Corporation, and Mr. Beach himself.

Rex Beach.

This contract places the Goldwyn distribution in immediate possession of Mr. Beach's recently completed production of "The Auction Block," made from one of his greatest novels. "The Auction Block" was six months in the making and the prediction is made by those who have seen it that it will be one of the greatest money-earners the film industry has ever known

"The Auction Block" was directed by Larry Trimble, a director of imagination and force, who, since its completion, has joined Goldwyn and is now directing Jane Cowl in "The Spreading Dawn." As in the case of his earlier pictures, Mr. Beach has maintained a constant watch over the newest of his productions and given Mr. Trimble invaluable assistance.

By obtaining a series of Rex Beach productions Goldwyn comes into possesion of stories that will rank among the biggest box office attractions in the film world and is thereby enabled to offer these pictures to exhibitors throughout the world in addition to the twenty-six pictures previously announced as constituting Goldwyn's scheduled annual output.

Since the formation of Goldwyn last December Samuel Goldfish and his associates have been in negotiations with Messrs. Beach and Hampton. Both Mr. Beach and Mr Hampton were quick to realize the advantages that would accrue to them in having at their disposal the technical and artistic facilities which Goldwyn could offer and these advantages did much to bring the contract to a successful climax.

EIGHT REELS THE LIMIT, SAYS BRENON.

Herbert Brenon, who is just completing his production "The Fall of the Romanoffs," has announced that his new feature picture will not exceed eight reels. He has made all his pictures within the past year eight reels and has now decided that his future productions will never exceed that limit.

"Eight reels," says Mr. Brenon, "is the ideal length for a feature picture for special productions. An eight reel picture runs about two hours. The theater, which is a much older art than ours, discovered through years of experience exactly how much entertainment the public can stand, and profiting by this knowledge have sifted their performances down to two hours and a half. Theatrical managers have learned by experience, too, that there is such a thing as overdosing the public. They know that theatergoers want to be entertained, but they don't want to be entertained for so long that they become conscious that they are sitting in chairs.

"In the theater the very longest of plays begins at eight fifteen and continues till eleven o'clock. There are usually two intermissions of eight minutes each, and with fifteen minutes for intermission and overture that leaves two and a quarter hours of actual theatrical entertainment. To keep an audience too long in their seat, they have learned, means that they begin to get restless, and no matter how good the play may be, they begin to get bored."

NEW MANAGER AT MUTUAL BRANCH.

H. J. Smith of the sales force of the Minneapolis branch of the Mutual Film Corporation has been appointed manager of the sub branch at Fargo, N. D., vice F. B. Thompson, who tendered his resignation, effective Saturday, July 14

"Jim" Maher

IN THE rapidly diminishing list of authenticated pioneers of the great motion picture business, a place rightfully belongs to James Maher, who, though comparatively young in years, for he is still in the early forties, places a long period of effort and achievement in the film game to his credit.

To him belongs the distinction of being a pioneer exhibitor of Chicago, as fifteen years ago he started the first "store show" on lower State street in that city. Afterward, in 1905, he and William H. Swanson embarked in the exchange business at 79 South Clark street, Chicago, Illinois. This exchange speedily became the largest concern of its kind in the world.

"Jim" Maher.

After selling out his Chicago theaters and film exchanges, he, with Bill Steiner and Herbert Miles, started the International Producing Company, in New York, which was the first to establish its own offices throughout the United States and Canada.

For the past few years, "Jim," as he is familiarly known throughout the trade, has been associated with Bill Steiner in the Photo Drama Company in producing, selling and booking their own productions. Recently, he disposed of his stock in the Photo Drama Company. Mr. Maher has under consideration several large propositions and he is open to consider others.

"After the Ball," "The House of Bondage," "How Molly Made Good" are the names of some of the recent film successes with which Mr. Maher was identified. There is probably no better judge than he of the marketable value of films. Mail will reach him at the offices of the Photo Drama Company, Candler building, New York City.

FILM COMEDY IMPROVING.

"Close followers of screen comedy," says Al. E. Christie, himself a successful producer of many years' standing, "have noted within recent months a decided change in the character of pictures released—a relegation to the background of the rough action which has characterized much of the former product, and the substitution of deliciously humorous situations, consistently developed in the plot.

"These bits of action, and the subtle touches which the players give to the development of a situation, are the things which bring joy to the heart of the theater patron, and cause many a chuckle after he has returned home. The unexpected propulsion of a custard pie may provoke a shout of laughter, but the tribulations of sane, human characters, and the humorous exposition of their frailties are the basis of true comedy."

CLIFF SMITH STARTS WORK.

Cliff Smith, who, as William Hart's co-director during the past two years has been responsible for much of Hart's success, has just signed a new contract with Triangle for a term of two years and will start immediately on a new series of Western productions starring Roy Stewart.

These will be produced at Hartville, the scene of Smith's former activities, where the topography of the land and character of the buildings and exterior sets are particularly adapted for the type of productions that he will direct. Smith keeps with him his former assistant, Charles Rush, as well as his technical staff, and Triangle followers may look forward to some gripping new plays of the early West. Roy Stewart's first production under Triangle banner, in which he supports Belle Bennett, has been completed under the direction of Jack Conway and will be scheduled for early release.

Closing Days of the Seventh National Exposition

FRIDAY, July 20, might have been called Jean Sothern day more appropriately, for she was the only star of the forces present, and a right popular star she proved to be, with her winsome manner and grace. Many remembered her by her work in "The Mysteries of Myra" for the International, as well as for her able leads in "Whoso Findeth a Wife," "Her Good Name" and "A Mute Appeal," all of the Art Dramas brand.

Ralph O. Proctor, manager of Art Dramas' Chicago office, assisted by R. Cropper, Kansas City manager, Paul DeOuto and other Chicago salesmen, was kept busy presenting Miss Sothern to the crowds that surged around the Art Dramas booth.

Captivating little Fannie Ward, of Paramount fame, shared honors with Miss Sothern on Art Dramas day, while Alice McChesney, of Metro; Hazel Daly, Bryant Washburn, Marguerite Clayton and little Mary McAlister, of Essanay; Nell Craig, and other popular players held the throngs.

George Kleine Entertains K-E-S-E Stars.

Friday evening, after work in the Coliseum was over, George Kleine invited the stars of K-E-S-E in the city and principals of his city and general executive offices to a party at his residence, on Hampden Court. The press was also well represented, and a most enjoyable time was passed until the small hours of the morning.

There were present Miss Shirley Mason and her mother and Raymond McKee, of Edison; Mr. and Mrs. Bryant Washburn, Virginia Valli, Helen Ferguson, Mr. and Mrs. McAlister and Baby McAlister, of Essanay; Fannie Ward and Jack Dean; Mr. and Mrs. M. E. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Pierson, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Scott, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Jenner and Jack Hunter, of George Kleine's Chicago forces; Amy Leslie and Mr. and Mrs. W. K. Hollander, of the Chicago News; Louella O. Parsons, Chicago Herald, and Oma Moody Lawrence, of the Chicago Post

Bushman-Bayne Day, Saturday, July 21.

Saturday, July 21, which had been originally announced as Mutual day, was changed to Bushman-Bayne day at the Exposition. Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne arrived in the morning, and Norma Talmadge (Selznick) also came in, all three being introduced in the afternoon and evening to the big crowds in attendance. A lunch was given in honor of Miss Talmadge at the Blackstone Hotel by Jones, Linick & Schaefer, on Saturday, at which a number of invited guests were present.

The three popular stars of the day were received with vociferous acclamation, both afternoon and evening. The ovation rendered Mr. Bushman showed that his many friends in Chicago had not forgotten him. Miss Beverly Bayne is just as pretty as ever, and had her old smile for her numerous friends here. Miss Talmadge could find no place for envy in the welcome given her.

Besides the stars mentioned, Shirley Mason, Raymond McKee, Bryant Washburn, Fannie Ward, James Young, Hazel Daly, Josephine Huddleston and Baby McAlister entertained the crowds.

The representatives of the Army and Navy who had booths on the Exposition floor and also the representatives of the Red Cross were introduced and loudly cheered.

At the Red Cross Booth.

The women among the latter were much encouraged during the evening by the money brought in from the auctioning-off of the various articles so kindly donated by moving picture stars throughout the country. Stan. Twist kindly offered his services, and succeeded in adding a respectable sum by his efforts. The women on the Red Cross committee informed me their receipts during the Exposition were raised by these efforts to $425, but a much larger sum might have been secured had they engaged the services of professional auctioneers in the city, who would have been glad to have offered their services in such a cause. Every official on the Exposition committee was kept so busy it was impossible for them to assist in this work. Quite a number of beautiful articles had been sold and returned to the booth for re-selling during the run of the Exposition, and quite a number were left over on Sunday, when the law forbad the sale of anything.

Quite an interesting event occurred during the evening auction at the Red Cross booth. The beautiful gown donated by Marguerite Clark was auctioned off at Alfred Hamburger's stand to a young married woman among the spectators, to whom it was knocked down at a bargain price. She was so happy over her treasure that Mr. Hamburger added still further to it by giving her an admission ticket to the Reel Fellows' ball at the Hotel Morrison that night. She accepted the ticket and introduced her husband to Mr. Hamburger and his sister, Mrs. A. Sachs, of San Antonio, Texas, formerly Miss Nellie Hamburger, of this city. The official hostess of the Exposition, Rose Tapley, who chanced to be present, also took a hand in the affair and offered her dressing room at the Morrison Hotel to the young woman to don her new gown.

The husband, however, had been overlooked in the arrangements, much to his wife's consternation, but he turned up later at the ball, where he had the pleasure of seeing her dancing with some of the leading people who attended.

Metro Day, Sunday, July 22.

The closing day of the Exposition was marked by the arrival of Viola Dana, Edith Storey, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew. Miss Alice McChesney arrived several days before. R. A. Rowland, president of Metro, and Mrs. Rowland, accompanied them. Eva Tanguay had also been announced as one of the big attractions for the occasion, but Manager Schindler received a wire that it was impossible for her to attend, owing to indisposition. The wide publicity given this actress' appearance made it necessary for Manager Schindler to make many explanations and apologies in order to put himself right with the great crowd of moving picture fans who filled the Exposition building.

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne had left for New York on the Twentieth Century Sunday morning, so that many of their large following in the city among moving picture fans were greatly disappointed at not finding them in the Metro booth. However, there was such a long list of stars present that the crowds went away happy, voting the Seventh National Exposition of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America the greatest event of its kind in the history of filmdom.

At this point it is most fitting to extend to Ludwig Schindler, Exposition manager, and his able assistants, George Laing and Fred Hartman, the heartiest congratulations. It was, without doubt, the best managed Exposition that has ever been held, as well as the most successful, by far, in a financial way.

Description of Booths at Exposition

Many Elaborate Displays by Manufacturers and Film Men—Abundance of Attractions to Entertain the Throngs.

Descriptions of Booths at Exposition.

Precision Machine Company, New York City. It might easily be said that the exhibit of the Precision Machine Company was in a class by itself. With everything on display built and finished for the occasion, this booth made a distinct impression, and no exhibit received more favorable comment. Four Simplex projectors finished in ivory cream color were displayed on the floor, while one finished completely in nickel was seen revolving on the top of an elaborate pedestal in the center of the booth. Streams of light coming from the base of the pedestal were directed on the machine, which glittered beautifully and attracted considerable attention. At each corner of the booth was placed an electric air fountain, out of which streamed strips of colored tissue paper, resembling fire, and the whole effect was one of action all the way through. The general color scheme was blue and French ivory. The fixtures were designed by the Decorators Supply Company. The new Simplex nitrogen lamp equipment was also on display. Representing the company were Edwin S. Porter, vice-president; E. M. Porter, general manager; L. W. Atwater, sales manager, and A. P. Lombard.

In speaking to a representative of the World, O. F. Spahr, general manager of the Enterprise Optical Company, said: "It would probably interest your readers to know that since the first of the year 1917 we have sold and installed 115 Motiographs in the city of Chicago. With the exception of two, all of these were purchased by exhibitors." To substantiate this statement, a sign was hung in the company's booth where were enumerated the names of the various theaters and the number of machines purchased by each one. The Motiograph exhibit occupied the same space as it did last year, and the booth made a very inviting appearance. On display were several projectors, two of which were finished in battleship gray and nickel. These were bought by R. D. Craver, of Charlotte, N. C. The other machines were part of a large consignment that had recently been sold by the company to the Y. M. C. A. for use in the United States Army. Assisting Mr. Spahr at the booth were John A. McAuley, S. B. Blakely, E. J. Ferney and C. A. Hahn, of the sales department. There were also several Motiograph dealers in the booth each day, who were later the guests of the company at a banquet in the Morrison hotel.

It was the consensus of opinion that the K-E-S-E exhibit stood among the foremost in the way of decorative beauty and charm. An excellent choice of furniture and fixtures was in evidence here, and the smiling countenances of the hosts spoke welcome to the many callers. Baskets and vases of living flowers served to set off the finely upholstered wicker furniture, and in the background were enlarged oil portraits of the stars. George Kleine and George K. Spoor were present on several evenings during the week, as were Harry Scott, M. E. Smith, E. R. Pierson and E. H. Jenner. Several of the company's players were in attendance each night, and thousands of their photographs were given out to the besieging public. Ben Beadell is responsible for the arrangement of the booth.

The Metro Pictures Corporation booth was another built especially for the occasion, and one that ranked among the prettiest and most elaborate. The architectural effect was that of a pergola, suspended from the roof of which were a number of beautifully colored Japanese lanterns. The interior represented a veritable garden, and at one end was hung a porch swing. The feature at this exhibit was a five-piece jazz band which attracted considerable attention, making the Metro booth one of the most popular in the Exposition building. Concerts were given both afternoon and evening each day. Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne, Viola Dana, Edith Storey, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew and Alice McChesney were present at this booth on Bushman-Bayne day, Saturday, July 21. Representing the company were Richard A. Rowland, Arthur James, Cresson E. Smith, Max Levy, Harry Skirboll and C. W. George.

The Goldwyn exhibit came in for its share of admiration, and justly so, for it was undoubtedly one of the most artistic and impressive. Mr. Messmore, technical director of the Goldwyn studios, is responsible for the work of designing and building the booth which was executed in the company's studios in New York. The portable parts were shipped to Chicago and assembled later according to Mr. Messmore's plans. It was easily seen that utmost care was given to the details in the building of this structure. The scrollwork in pillar tops and the general effect was distinctly symbolic of the moving picture. The interior decorations consisted of an abundance of flowers and oil paintings of the Goldwyn stars. Several marble pedestals distributed about the floor supported the Goldwyn trade-mark, and a unique lighting system gave prominence to the legend, "Ars Gratia Artis." The general color scheme was dull gold and gray, and the excellent selection of wicker furniture added to the appearance. Mae Marsh was present on Saturday, July 14, to greet her admirers. Samuel Goldfish, president; Fred Warren, general manager; L. Weiss, general district manager, and Fred Arms, publicity manager, were in attendance, as well as F. M. Brockell and M. S. Kusell, of the company's Chicago offices.

The Pathe Booth. A simple exhibit, but one showing nice taste and a consideration for "breathing space" was that of Pathe. It was by far the most generous in size and there was just enough furniture and decorations to make it look comfortable. A large electric self-contained water fountain covered the center of the booth, while oil paintings of Pathe's stars supported on easels were seen about the floor. Four automatic electric signs announcing the names of Pathe productions and stars were in operation. Sunday, July 15, was Pathe day, and Pearl White, Sheldon Lewis, and Doris Kenyon were present to greet the throngs. J. A. Berst, C. R. Seelye, B. H. Hodupp, C. W. Bunn and Tom North were also there to represent the company.

Although neither the Paramount Pictures Corporation nor the Artcraft Pictures Corporation had floor space in the Exposition building, they had a very striking exhibit in the form of a huge electric sign which was hung in the center of the Coliseum, in the most strategic position possible. The writer will venture to say that not one who entered the doors of the Coliseum failed to look at this sign, which was composed of hundreds of bulbs in an assortment of bright colors. The familiar Paramount and Artcraft trade-marks, together with several large oil paintings of the stars, around which revolved streams of lighted bulbs, is a brief description of the display. Representing the companies were Adolph Zukor, Al. Lichtman, Bennie Schulberg, Carl H. Pierce, Max Goldstine, F. J. Stoughton and Mr. Freund.

The Alfred Hamburger Theatrical Enterprises occupied space directly underneath the Paramount sign. Mr. Hamburger and several of his theater managers were seen at this booth.

Typhoon Fan Company, New York City. Here we found the "Breeze Makers' Cottage," a pleasing recollection to the writer. The "cottage," practically built of fans and various kinds of blowers, helped considerably to ventilate the entire Exposition, and, perhaps, no other exhibition contributed more to the comfort of the visitors. A Typhoon fan was also used to ventilate the convention theater. Representing the Typhoon Company were Ernst Glantzberg, president; John P. Gleason, Chicago manager; Paul Elder, of the New Orleans office, and C. S. Pabst, advertising manager.

Marquette Piano Company, Chicago, represented by J. C. Cox, general sales manager, whom we found to be one of the most enthusiastic space-holders in the entire Exposition. Mr. Cox is a firm believer in advertising, and made the statement that he never before had such an excellent opportunity to "drive home" the advantages of the musical instruments manufactured by his company. Style M-2 Cremona theater orchestra was on display in this exhibit, and daily recitals were given by Clyde Martin. In the convention theater a Style O Duplex special was used to furnish the musical accompaniment to the pictures. Mr. Cox reported two sales during the show.

Universal-Bluebird Booth. The sign, "Universal Pictures Present the Art of Make-Up," blazed forth in electric lights at this booth. Several young women, proficient in the use of cosmetics, gave demonstrations in the art of make-up at the booth daily, and several rows of "fans" were seen surrounding the exhibit at all hours. Adjoining the Universal booth was that of the Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., which was used for a recruiting station and in charge of the Navy League. Representing the companies were Carl Laemmle, C. R. Plough, I. Van Ronkel, F. J. Flaherty, I. Lesserman, Joe Brandt, Jack Cohen, and a number of city salesmen.

World Film Corporation was represented by William A. Brady, Felix Feist, L. A. Rozell and the staff of the company's Chicago offices. Alice Brady, Carlyle Blackwell and June Elvidge received at this booth on World day, Wednesday, July 18. The writer was unable to get near this booth on that evening, but from a distance he could see Mr. Blackwell standing on the top of a table making a frantic effort to satisfy his many admirers who were eager to shake his hand. The World exhibit was conservative and nicely arranged.

Standard Film Corporation, Art Dramas, was small but tastefully arranged. R. O. Proctor, Chicago manager, acted as host for the company, and assisting him were his office force and several young women. George H. Wiley, R. C. Cropper and Jean Sothern came on from New York.

The Power Cameragraph Company had a very substantial looking exhibit, and no booth received more actual trade callers. The display consisted of the latest models of Power's 6 "A" and 6 "B" projectors, and a new incandescent lamp equipment which can be attached to any model of a Power's machine. It was rumored around the Exposition that the Power company was about to place on the market a new model projector. This, however, has been emphatically denied in a letter addressed to F. H. Richardson from the company's offices in New York. Representing the company during the Exposition were W. C. Smith, general manager; William W. Lewis, traveling representative, and Joseph Abrams, inspector.

The Mutual booth was the center of attraction every night about 10:30, when the person holding the winning number was presented with a framed photograph of a Mutual star. Coupon tickets were passed out to the public each day, and great interest was evidenced in the lottery. "Mutual Big Stars Only" flashed from electric lights at the top of this exhibit. B. Judell, Eugene Duffy and L. M. Noto were in attendance here. Terry Ramsaye and R. R. Nehls were also seen at this booth during the week.

SEVENTH NATIONAL CONVENTION AND EXHIBITION
MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS LEAGUE OF AMERICA
New Morrison Hotel July 19, 1917

Banquet of the Seventh National Convention and Exhibition, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, New Morrison Hotel, Chicago, July 19, 1917.

United Theater Equipment Company, represented by H. E. Edwards, president; J. H. Hallberg, vice-president, and R. H. Fulton, Chicago branch manager, displaying latest models of Power's projectors and Hallberg generators, with a line of electric fans and fountains. A meeting of the company's branch managers and dealers was held at the Congress hotel, Chicago, on Tuesday, July 17.

Frohman Amusement Corporation, represented by William Sherrill, president, and Jack Sherrill, of New York City. Sam Van Ronkel, owner of the Frohman production, "God's Man," in the states of Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin, was also present at this booth. Mr. Van Ronkel reported that his picture had been held over at the Studebaker theater, Chicago, for an additional week, because of its popularity.

Mid-West Theater Supply Company, of which Jack Williams is the manager, had an exhibit immediately adjoining that of the Precision Machine Company. A Simplex projector equipped with a type "S" lamphouse (Chicago approved) and a type K. W. Martin rotary converter were on display at this booth. Being one of the oldest supply men of Chicago, Mr. Williams has a wide acquaintance among exhibitors and operators, many of whom were callers at his booth.

"Cico Toddles," business rejuvenator—you all know him—made friends wherever he went. Cico and his twin brother, all dressed up for the occasion, circulated among exhibitors and "fans," which resulted in a great demand for their services. The Cahill-Igoe Company, Cico's sponsor, represented by Paul G. Smith and Patrick Garvey, explained his advertising possibilities. On display at the company's booth was a complete line of de lux programs and an assortment of advertising novelties.

The Red Cross booth was one of the busiest and most important on the floor. An auction took place at this space each evening and not a small amount was realized on the articles donated by the stars, the proceeds of which went to the Red Cross fund. Mrs. George O. McKinlock was in charge, assisted by Mesdames King, Elson, Dolyns, Cudahy, Martin, Babcock, McLaughlin and Ryerson.

The Westinghouse Electric Manufacturing Company's exhibit consisted of motor generator sets, type "A" L mercury arc rectifiers, and electric fans and blowers for theater ventilation. Exhibitors and operators congregated at this spot each day to witness demonstrations of the instruments on display. K. H. Rohrbaugh, of Pittsburgh, was in charge of the booth, and assisting him were H. M. Wible, H. A. Campe, A. J. Brown and H. W. Clarke.

Flexlume Sign Company, Chicago. In this booth several styles of interchangeable day and night theater signs were on display. The company was represented by Robert L. Perry and Henry E. Riege, both of the Chicago office. The Flexlume signs are in use today by a number of the best theaters. Their serviceability and beauty lies in the fact that they are easily changeable and meet the requirements of exhibitors having daily changes of programs.

Bartola Musical Instrument Co., Chicago, represented by Charles C. Pyle, Chicago manager, Daniel W. Barton and W. G. Maxcy. The Bartola instruments were not on display this year, but an automobile was always waiting for those who wished to visit the company's showrooms. During the exposition Mr. Pyle did his bit for the Red Cross, acting as auctioneer, and he made several successful sales of various articles donated by the stars. The proceeds were turned over to the Red Cross fund.

Army Booth, U. S. A. This space was donated to the U. S. Army by the Moving Picture World and was used as a place to secure enlistments. Corporal Smith, who was in charge during the absence of Captain Sliger, reported that all of twenty men had "signed up" during the week. Various kinds of fighting material were in evidence at this booth.

National Automatic Door Company, demonstrating the "panik prufe" steel door for emergency access. This company was represented by F. LeDeau and Eugene Peterson.

The Selig Polyscope Company used a space for the display of a number of enlarged photographs of stars and scenes from "Who Shall Take My Life?" and "The Garden of Allah." The latter production has recently been purchased for eight states by the Edmund M. Allen Film Corporation and is now running at the Colonial, Chicago.

Decorators' Supply Company, Chicago, was represented by A. F. Powers and occupied space jointly with the Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company. A Style U ticket booth, specially designed for moving picture theaters, and a triplet ticket automatic register were displayed. A. M. Braum represented the Automatic Register Co.

Seeburg Piano Company, Chicago, represented by J. E. Gerlich, sales manager, and George B. Schulton. Mr. Schulton at the present time is exploiting the Seeburg-Smith Unified Organ, a description of which will appear in the "Music for the Picture" department of the Moving Picture World at a later date.

Kimball Organ Company, Chicago, represented by Jacob Handlesman, F. T. Milner, West Milner and Miss Ruth Strickland, displaying two types of Kimball pipe organs. These will be described in the "Music for the Picture" department at a later date.

Central Film Corporation, exploiters of Selznick Pictures, represented by Sidney J. Goldman and Harry Weiss. Norma Talmadge was present on Saturday, July 21.

Fox Film Corporation, represented by J. E. O'Toole, Chicago manager, Clyde Ekhardt and Louis S. Lebin, of New York City. It was given out at this booth that the Fox production, "Jack and the Bean Stalk," will have its premiere in Chicago at an early date, and that an unusual line of advertising matter will be available for exhibitors.

Eugene Hamburg Company, Chicago. "Billy" Hamburg's booth was situated so that it could not be overlooked by any exhibitor who attended the Convention, showing a complete line of lobby frames and fixtures, and a sample of everything used in the lobby of a moving picture theater. This display was given at the foot of the steps leading to the convention hall. We have been informed that the first sale made at the exposition was that made by the Hamburg Company to Hopp & Co., a Chicago firm of exhibitors. B. B. Bonheim, secretary of the company, was also in attendance.

Musical Exhibits at the Exposition

By Clarence E. Sinn.

A NUMBER of musical instrument makers had booths at the exposition of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, held in Chicago July 14th to 21st. The only one I found with an "audible" exhibit was the Marquette Piano Company of Chicago. None other, so far as I could learn, had an instrument on exhibition, but all had plenty of descriptive literature and busy business representatives explaining and extolling the individual merits of their several wares.

The Marquette.

This company is a new one in the field of combination instruments. It had two instruments on exhibit; one was demonstrated in its booth at the south end of the building (where you saw the sign reading "Cremona"), and the other in the theater beyond where moving pictures were both made and shown. It was their Style O Duplex Special which was chosen to furnish music for the pictures shown there. The Marquette is making several styles of instrument of which this particular one is among the larger.

This (the Style O Duplex Special) is one of the large types of theater instruments manufactured by this company, and the duplex roll system consists of two spool boxes, one designed to play any ordinary 88 note player-piano roll, whereby the operator has perfect control of tempo and different organ combinations as well as the various traps and effects. The other spool box is designed to play the improved 134-note reproducing solo roll, which is a great advancement in automatic interpretation of organ and orchestra music, and gives absolute control of the tempo, organ combinations and orchestrations without the use of the operator.

The Marquette people make a strong point of the mechanical feature of their instruments. While admitting that this item has a pronounced value in certain quarters, the automatic part of it doesn't interest me personally. I like the man power behind the organ: the operator. Their instrument has a very musical quality, full and without harshness. I was particularly impressed with the vox humana stop which was beautiful and full of expression. A number of visitors were escorted to their factory and "shown around" by Mr. Cox—a man who believes in his goods and tells you so. I think I'll take a trip out there myself some day.

The J. P. Seeburg Piano Co.

The Seeburg Piano Co. had something new and interesting, although it was not on exhibition at the Coliseum. Their latest addition to the musical world is called the "Seeburg-Smith unified Organ and Orchestra." Geo. B. Schulten who is manager for the Seeburg-Smith department is as proud of their new instrument as if he had made it himself, and I guess he is helping to make it at that. I tried to make an appointment with him to get a line on the Seeburg-Smith, but the only hour he had at leisure seemed to be around six o'clock in the morning, so I shall wait until the convention packs its grips and goes home and then get friend Schulten to tell me about it.

The Bartola Musical Instrument Co.

This company also had a booth with the original Bartola himself in charge introducing a Bartola novelty—The Bartola orchestral stops for pipe organ. The idea consists of a method for attaching a set of Bartola stops to an ordinary pipe organ, thus combining the possibilities of both instruments. The Bartola orchestral attachment includes harp, xylophone, orchestral bells, cathedral chimes, drums, traps and effects; also vox humana and tremelo stops. It is equipped with a Holtzer-Cabot motor generator set which is installed separately from the pipe organ blower. Further explanation is almost superfluous, as the Bartola goods have been described in the Moving Picture World some time ago and have made themselves pretty well known; and you all know what pipe organ is. Just think of the two together and you've got the idea.

The Kimball Pipe Organ.

The Kimball booth was in charge of Mr. Milner, who exhibited consuls for two organs—one of a two manual organ, the other of a three manual. This latter included an attachment for automatic playing by means of a perforated roll. The Kimball pipe organs are so widely and favorably known that I can't say anything which would add to their lustre. I can only remark that they make good organs, and let it go at that.

And who did I see there demonstrating for the Marquette folks but our old friend Clyde Martin. Mr. Martin was a pioneer in playing for the pictures and an early writer on the subject. He is considering a proposition to locate in the east in the interests of the Marquette Company.

Reel Fellows' Ball at Hotel Morrison

Grand March Led by Nell Craig and Bryant Washburn, and a Spirited Dancing Contest Were the Features.

THE third annual ball given by the Reel Fellows' Club of Chicago at the Hotel Morrison, Saturday night, July 21, did not come up to expectations, so far as the number of people present was concerned; but it was an enjoyable affair and lasted until 4 o'clock in the morning. The officers of the club, headed by R. O. Proctor, president, and assisted by the members of the floor and reception committees of the organization, had left nothing undone to make the occasion pleasant and memorable; but, doubtless, due to the encroachment of the festivities on Sunday, they were not fully rewarded for their labors.

The grand march was led by Nell Craig and Bryant Washburn, and the floor presented a gay and attractive scene while it lasted. Another prominent event was the dancing contest for a handsome silver cup, presented by O'Connor & Goldberg, prominent merchants of Chicago. Twenty pairs of dancers entered the contest, which was exceedingly spirited, the cup being finally awarded Mrs. Bryant Washburn and Mr. Goldberg by the following judges: Fannie Ward, Norma Talmadge, Louella O. Parsons, Fred Hartman, Peter Schaefer, George Laing and others.

Among the guests present were Mr. and Mrs. Bryant Washburn, Hazel Daly, Fannie Ward, Norma Talmadge, Nell Craig, Rose Tapley, Mildred Considine, Jack Dean, Fred E. Wright, Essanay director; Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Hopp, Miss Hopp and Edgar Hopp, Mr. and Mrs. Ludwig Schindler, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Hartman, Mr. and Mrs. W. K. Hollander, Louella O. Parsons, Alfred Hamburger and his sister Mrs. A. Sachs, of San Antonio; Mr. and Mrs. R. O. Proctor, Mr. and Mrs. Max Goldstine, Mr. and Mrs. William J. Sweeney, George Laing, Harry Moir, Peter Schaefer, Charles Schaefer, Miss Schaefer and Walter Schaefer, Joseph Schenck, Howard C. Hola, R. C. Seery, Mr. Goldberg, of O'Connor & Goldberg, and Sidney Abel.

Propaganda Subject to be Written by Maibelle Heikes Justice and Produced by Selig.

MISS Maibelle Heikes Justice has been selected by the National American Red Cross to write the first moving picture drama which in its romance and action will show exactly what the Red Cross is doing at the front. Realizing the tremendous part the motion picture industry plays, not only in the amusement of the American people but also in their education, the Red Cross has established a Bureau of Motion Pictures, National headquarters at Washington, D. C., with Evan Evans as director. A national campaign in which every man engaged in the motion picture industry will be given an opportunity to do his bit and express his patriotism is being arranged by a committee of men. A complete program will be announced later which will give perfect plans for developing a motion picture campaign of education covering all the work of the Red Cross. All cooperation is to be done in charity to the great work.

The idea of first having a scenario in story form and which could be staged during the recent Motion Picture Exhibitors' League held in Chicago wherein the different stars visiting could enact a role, originated with James Keeley, owner of the Chicago Herald. Miss Justice who had started to her home in New York City returned for the convention at the request of Mr. Keeley who selected her to do the scenario. She gladly and promptly complied, submitted an idea for the play which was highly commended by those concerned, and also wrote the scenario.

For the local producton William N. Selig offered his studios and any courtesy required for the Red Cross work. Every star approached by Miss Justice was only too glad to do his or her bit for this great and necessary charity. The difficulty in putting on the Chicago production lay in the fact that each galaxy of stars having their day during covention week and being called immediately home by studio duties, not enough at one time could be collected to give a full cast.

Evan Evans, the director of the Red Cross Motion Picture Bureau who was in Chicago at the time, then stepped in and made the original idea a National affair. He called personally upon Miss Justice who was a guest all week of the Herald booth, and she outlined her story for the scenario which was immediately approved by Mr. Evans, as the idea was most original and will give the contributing public an exact idea of what is going on "somewhere in France," every day and night of the terrible conflict. After the convention, Mr. Evans and Miss Justice left for New York where the plans for the production will be completed. James Keeley, of the Herald, and William N. Selig have expressed their approval of the idea.

Henceforth, it is stated that all motion pictures for the extension of Red Cross work must first be approved by the National Board, which is now backed by the United States Government at Washington, with Evan Evans as the official head. Mr. Evans and Miss Justice will confer in New York over the present photodrama which now as a National project will go into production within the next few weeks. There are two million members of the Red Cross in America.

FOX SIGNS SEENA OWEN.

In keeping with his promise of pictures bigger and better than ever, with stories by authors of note interpreted by players of repute, William Fox has just concluded negotiations which bring Seena Owen to his dramatic forces.

Miss Owen, who is as brilliant as she is beautiful, goes before the camera this week in the big Fox studios at Hollywood, Cal. She will be seen opposite "Smiling George" Walsh in a new film of the speedy light dramatic type which he is about to begin. Miss Owen's vim makes her ideally suited for the part in which she is cast.

Although Miss Owen has not appeared on the screen in some time, she is still remembered for her fine performances in programme features for various film companies, and especially for her wonderful characterization of Belshazzar's consort in "Intolerance." Her work in this production was widely commented upon, and Miss Owen declares enthusiastically that now that she has returned to motion pictures, she is determined to surpass her long record of success.

Richard Stanton, who recently completed his first screen play for the Fox productions, will be in charge of the direction.

Enterprise Optical Company's New Model

A Radical Departure from the 1917 Make, with Many Advantages—Creates Enthusiasm Among Dealers.

As guests of the Enterprise Optical Co. a number of Motiograph machine dealers were entertained at a banquet in the Hotel Morrison Friday evening, July 20. Seventeen dealers, with offices as far north as Winnipeg, Canada, south to Atlanta and west to San Francisco, were represented, and each had a voice in the general discussion of the methods of meeting competition and of future plans for the Motiograph.

After a well served and tasty meal, O. F. Spahr, general manager of the company, acting as master of ceremonies, rose to pay his compliments to the guests, continuing with a short talk on war-time business conditions and the effort of turning out machines to meet delivery dates. He also made reference to the work of changing models which he exemplified by the use of a Ford story—a new one, funny and originally from New York.

Mr. Spahr was followed by A. C. Roebuck, president of the company, who related some experiences with his various enterprises. Although it would probably be against his wishes, it is not out of place to state that Mr. Roebuck was the founder of the well known mail order house of Sears, Roebuck & Co. Since leaving that concern he has given much of his time to the Woodstock Typewriter Co., of which he is president. Recently, however, he has taken an active interest in the Enterprise Optical Co., which is evidenced in the progress of the Motiograph along technical lines. In concluding his remarks, Mr. Roebuck paid tribute to the work of Mr. Spahr, who has managed the company successfully for the past four years.

At this juncture, to the surprise of everyone, a new and improved model Motiograph projector was revealed behind curtains which had hidden it. This new machine won the instant and enthusiastic admiration of all present. It is a radical departure from the 1917 model and has many distinctive advantages over its predecessors. It was observed that the base has been changed to a rectangular shape and that the lamphouse has a number of important improvements. The latter is larger and has better ventilating facilities than the lamphouse formerly used. The new magazines have 3,000 feet capacity and the speed control is mechanical instead of electrical.

A description of the machine will be written by F. H. Richardson some time in the near future. It is stated that deliveries of the new model cannot be made earlier than four weeks from date, and that the price will be $350.

At the close of the banquet congratulations were given the hosts on their new machine, and it was the unanimous opinion that it would be a strong seller in the field with its competitors.

The guests present were: S. A. Louis and Dave Rogers, Rialto Theater Supply Co., Minneapolis; A. C. Hartman, Omaha Film Exchange, Omaha; Edward H. Kemp, Western representative of the Motiograph Co., San Francisco; T. P. Hollis, Hollis-Smith Co., Pittsburgh; L. Gardner and H. Griffiin, the Gardner Theater Equipment Co., Detroit; E. E. Oliver, Oliver Moving Picture Supply Co., Cleveland; Wm. Oldknow, Southern Theater Equipment Co., Atlanta; R. D. Thrash, Southern Theater Equipment Co., Dallas; H. T. Nolan and J. J. Morgan, Swanson & Nolan Supply Co., Denver; H. A. Dutton, Exhibitors' Supply Co., Chicago, Loe E. Dwyer and Fred P. Dwyer, Columbus Theater Equipment Co., Columbus; Harold W. Corse and Sherman Corse, Dayton; L. P. Langford and Edward H. Spranger, Wisconsin Theater Supply Co., Milwaukee, Wis.; Sam Lears, Lears Theater Supply Co., St. Louis; H. D. Sutherland, Standard Electric Co., Winnipeg, Canada; J. Miloslowski, Palace Theater Equipment Co., Des Moines; P. Plummer, Amusement Supply Co., Chicago; Paul C. Hinz, Moving Picture World, and W. C. Esty, Motion Picture News.

In addition to Mr. Roebuck and Mr. Spahr, H. A. Larsen, John E. McAuley, S. B. Blakely and Chas. A. Hahn, of the Enterprise Optical Co., were there.

Comparison of Figures of Late Exposition With Those of Last Year

LUDWIG SCHINDLER, manager of the recent National Exposition of the M. P. E. L. of America, announced at the beginning of his arduous labors that he would give out a statement in full of all the moneys received and disbursed after the auditing of his books by an expert, at the close of the exposition. As early as Thursday morning, July 19, he had on hand an expert's statement which showed a profit, up to that time, of $6,158.

The complete statement shows that the total receipts at the Coliseum from July 14 to July 22 were $13,954, as against $7,301 last year.

The Exposition Committee's expenses this year were about $7,500 as against $17,000 last year.

The net profits of the exposition were about $10,000 this year, as against $9,200 last year.

This is a magnificent showing in the face of heavy odds. Manager Schindler had great difficulty in selling space to producers this year, which was most discouraging from the very start. But he stuck to his work manfully and has been rewarded with a success that would make any man proud

His two able lieutenants, George Laing and Fred Hartman, as also worthy of hearty praise and commendation. They worked early and late, with hearts and minds fully devoted to their tasks, so that they can stant in line with their chief and receive the plaudits and hearty thanks of every Chicago exhibitor.

Frank S. Phelps Returns From Europe

He Was Successful in Selling the Rights to "Gloria's Romance," at Good Figures, in Several Countries.

Mr. Phelps left New York for Europe January 27, this year, to dispose of the foreign rights of "Gloria's Romance," and returned to New York July 2. Most of his time was spent in London and Paris, and during that time he disposed of the rights of the serial to the United Kingdom and Ireland, France, Spain, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Russia and India. The rights to Japan, China, Africa and Australasia are being handled from New York City.

Mr. Phelps, after a careful investigation, arrived at the conclusion that the moving picture business has not suffered so severely in England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales, so far as the big houses are concerned. Many of the smaller houses have been closed and just about three weeks before his departure for New York, about 700 of these houses were closed throughout the United Kingdom and Ireland.

Paris is much worse off than London. Very few picture theaters remain open, and at that they are restricted to three nights a week. The admissions charged at the Gaumont Hippodrome amounts to about 50 and 75 cents. At the Scala about the same conditions prevail. Very few small houses are open in Paris, and the same conditions obtain throughout France.

It is extremely difficult to get any prints from London into Norway and Sweden just now, owing to the fact that a large volume of junk films have been diverted to Scandinavia for some time past; but they are really destined for Germany, where the films are used for making high explosives. The film business with Russia is at a stand-still, as the exporting of films at the present time is attended with such chances of loss that scarcely any attempt is made to pass the blockade.

Film shipments to India from London are quite large in volume. The films exported to that country are chiefly of American make, and the demand appears to be good for dramas and serials. The latter especially are popular and in high demand. A good price was paid for the rights to "Gloria's Romance" for India.

The officials of the Randolph Film Corporation, formed for the production and exploitation of "Gloria's Romance," are highly pleased with the results obtained by Mr. Phelps during his European tour. They are especially gratified and somewhat surprised over the fine contract made for the rights in the United Kingdom and Ireland. Of course, the rights for France brought only a nominal sum, as did also the rights for the Scandinavian peninsula and Russia. Spain and India came next to Great Britain in the value of contracts.

Mr. Phelps has not yet determined what his future plans will be, as he is intent at the present time on taking a much needed rest. He will make his headquarters in New York City, for which he departd Thursday, July 26.

The Executive Committee of the Advertising Film Producers' Association of the World met in convention at the Rothacker studios Tuesday, July 17.

Ways and means were devised and arranged for the further extension of this organization, and a special meeting was called for Aug. 27, this year, which will also be held at the Rothacker studios. At that meeting all the members of the Advertising Film Producers' Association are expected to be present. The association is the official moving picture department of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World.

While the Executive Committee was in session, moving pictures of the members in action were taken, and these will be combined with the official moving pictures taken at the recent Advertising convention at St. Louis, the combined pictures to be shown throughout the country under the auspices of the Advertising Film Producers' Association at Ad. clubs, etc.

The members of the committee present at the meeting were: President, W. A. Harris, Cincinnati; vice president, W. R. Rothacker, Chicago; secretary, R. V. Stanbaugh, Cleveland; treasurer, Fred C. Laflin, Chicago; committeemen, Joseph Brandt, New York, and Herbert Andrews, Washington.

"The Garden of Allah"

Opened at the Colonial Sunday Evening, July 22, for a Run of Two Weeks—Has Aroused Intense Interest.

The Selig visualization of Robert Hichens' famous story, "The Garden of Allah," is being offered this week and next at the Colonial by the Edmund M. Allen Film Corporation, which owns the rights for eight states. It is regrettable that only two weeks can be given this really remarkable production in Chicago, but the programs arranged at this theater by Aaron A. Jones so rule, and make it unavoidable.

I had several private viewings of "The Garden of Allah" some time ago and was highly impressed by its fine values from every point of view. The Hichens story is descriptive, with little or no action, yet Gibson Willets has arranged a film story that holds us with tremendous power. There are only two or three dominating characters, yet interest never lags—at least mine did not. The wonderful realism of the settings, including the sand storm that breaks on Beni-Mora and the surrounding desert, the thrilling fight between a band of Arabs and a caravan, a view of Amara, the great city in the northern Sahara; the French military watch tower at Mogar, etc., all bear testimony to the master touches of Director Colin Campbell.

The acting is inspiring. Thomas Santschi's Boris Androvsky is, in my opinion, the most finished characterization of his photoplay career. Helen Ware, though a little old looking for the part at times, does most talented work in the part of Domini Enfilden. And who can fail to admire the Count Anteoni of Matt Snyder, completed shortly before his death?

Considered from the standpoint of picture production, "The Garden of Allah" is extremely well done. It follows closely the lines laid by the book, as is Colin Campbell's way of producing, and has been carefully environed scenically in such wise as to be infinitely more picturesque than either novel or play.

Helen Ware and Thomas Santschi carry the lead roles, and it must be conceded that the thing is really Mr. Santschi's picture. His impersonation of Boris, the unhappy, endeavoring to escape a guilty memory, is one of life itself. Miss Ware is rather more playing a role, and at times her countenance reveals her as somewhat beyond the heroine playing age. Other times she is so gracious a presence that one regrets the awkward moments before chronicled by the camera.—Kitty Kelly in the Examiner.

The picture is remarkably faithful to detail; the brave, ugly little church at Beni-Mora; Monsieur le Cure and his dog; the Mosque, and the Arabs in the street of the bazaars; the Sand Diviner, and not the least of these, the incomparable garden. You'll be saying to yourself, remembering the book, "Why, they haven't forgotten anything!"—Mabel McElliott in the Tribune.

"The Garden of Allah" has lost none of its picturesque interest. The caravans of camels, the native Bedouins and the thousands of horsemen, give a vivid impression which is missing on the stage and in the book.

The play had a tremendous run at the Auditorium. I believe the picture at the Colonial will rival the play's popularity. It is spectacular, and still has human interest; it is magnificent and still has heart appeal.—Louelle O. Parsons in the Herald.

Personally, I have found "The Garden of Allah" a most satisfactory shadow drama. I have slipped by a mention of the very beautiful and adequate Moorish settings because I feel, as I hope all who see the picture will feel, that its reel worth is above the need of spectacle. If you are particularly interested in the staging of productions, however, you will find no lack in the interior backgrounds nor in the desert wastes that are so essential a part of the picture. The sandstorm is a marvel of realism.—Oma Moody Lawrence in the Post.

Colin Campbell's film is more colorful than was the stage attraction. Surely it is more agreeable to follow than the stage play. There are no interruptions to tolerate, occasioned by frequent shifting of scenes. The picture's continuity is one of its splendid features.

Every actor who participated in the piece contributed to its dramatic success. Miss Ware and Mr. Santschi portrayed their respective roles alluringly, while Matt Snyder as Count Anteoni, Will Machine as Capt. Crevignac, Harry Lonsdale as Father Roubier, and James Bradbury as the Sand Diviner, shone equally well in their roles. Mainly, the picture is a tribute to the camera and to Colin Campbell, who staged it.—W. K. Hollander in the News.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Wm. N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Co., has turned over the use of one of his big studios at Western avenue and Irving Park boulevard, this city, to the Red Cross. The Red Cross Society some time ago selected Miss Maibelle Heikes Justice to write the story of a Red Cross photoplay, in which the stars of many film companies will appear. Work will soon begin on the production, which will be owned by the Red Cross Society and used in propaganda work throughout the country.

Mrs. M. M. McFadden, owner of the Lincoln theater, Madison street near Lincoln, this city, was the only woman present at the recent convention. She is an agle and thorough business woman and believes that the women owners of picture theaters should take an active interest in the established organization for exhibitors. The Lincoln is a well managed house which seats 500 people. A carefully selected program from the makes of K-E-S-E, Artcraft, Metro specials, Selznick, Bluebird, etc., are offered at an admission of five, ten and fifteen cents.

C. B. Cooley, president and general manager of the Strand Amusement Co., Tampa, Fla., was a delegate to the convention whom I chanced to meet. Mr. Cooley stated that the Strand in his belief is the finest moving picture theater south of Chicago. It cost $155,000 and seats 800 people on one floor. Programs of six and seven reels, of Metro, Triangle, Fox, Artcraft and Vitagraph makes, are used. The admission is ten cents for adults and five cents for children. Mr. Cooley reported splendid business. He informed me that many of the house organs mailed him are of very little value from a publicity standpoint, according to his experience. He wants short stories of the plot and newsy reference to the stars that will appeal to his patrons when he uses them in the daily papers of his city.

Tom North reports that Pathe's "Les Miserables" has been held over for a third week at Orchestra Hall to meet the demand. It was originally intended to have a run of two weeks only, but will not be withdrawn until the close of the presentation on Saturday evening, Aug. 4.

Harry A. Sherman, president of the Sherman Pictures Corporation, New York, was a busy man all through the week of the Seventh Annual Exposition and Convention in this city. He was accompanied by E. O'Donnell, his publicity manager. Mr. Sherman gave a private viewing of "The Land of the Rising Sun" and "I Believe" to state rights purchasers during his stay.

Richard R. Nehls, manager of the American Film Co., Inc., left for New York Tuesday, July 24, to close an important contract for the showing of American features in foreign countries. The contract is said to cover the entire European market of the entente allies, with an approximate weekly distribution of 30,000 feet of films.

The general offices and factory of the American, this city, have twelve drafted men in readiness for the fighting forces of America in France. Elmer Swart, E. A. Donahue and Ralph Moreno will probably be called to the first contingent of the new national army, having been drawn among the first thousand. Seven others await later calls. George Robert, artist, and Bob McKnight, press agent, have enlisted as student aviators in the Signal Corps Officers' Reserve and await notification from Washington to join their squadron in training camp.

A Red Cross theatrical benefit is being planned by the principals and the supporting players of the American Film Co. in Santa Barbara, for the first week in August. The headliners will be Mary Miles Minter, Gale Kane, Juliette Day and William Russell, each of whom is rehearsing a specialty for the occasion. Harvey Clarke, one of the character actors, has written a comedy sketch especially for the event. The show will be staged in the Potter theater.

"The Little American" has made one of the most successful hits yet recorded at the Studebaker theater, under the direction of Jones, Linick & Schaefer. It has created a sensation in Chicago film circles and a long run is expected.

Aaron A. Jones has secured the rights to the "Mutt and Jeff" comedies from the Bud Fisher Corporation, New York, for the state of Illinois. These comedies will be released through the Central Film Co., and will be given first runs at the Colonial theater, in conjunction with the vaudeville programs which will be in effect at that house beginning Aug. 20.

Chester E. Cleveland, assistant corporation counsel of Chicago, will go to the Supreme Court of the state with a petition for a writ of mandamus against Judge Joseph Sabath of the Superior Court, to compel the latter to enter an order granting the city the right to appeal in the case of "The Little American," this order to antedate the judgment entered by Judge Sabath. The whole aim of the city is in support of Major Funkhouser's refusal to permit the showing of the film in Chicago.

On Wednesday, July 18, the members of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, who met in convention Monday and Tuesday at the Hotel Sherman, visited the Rothacker plant in a body. They went over every detail of manufacturing in their inspection, and were given a special showing of the film "From Studio to Screen," produced by the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co., which shows how moving pictures are manufactured. Before leaving the plant a moving picture was made of the members and it will be sent to C. Francis Jenkins, president of the Society, who will preserve it as a matter of record.

The moving picture studio operated in the Coliseum Annex during the recent Exhibition by the Rothacker Film Co., was an interesting feature for moving picture "fans" during the big show.

J. J. Pasztor, of the Amazon Film Co., has just returned from a lengthy trip through Canada, where he took several thousand feet of scenic pictures for the Canadian Northern and the Canadian Pacific Railroads. Arriving at Winnipeg, Mr. Pasztor proceeded to Jasper, Alberta, Lucerne, Mt. Robson and Dover, and thence to Calgary. The trip lasted five weeks and some fine negatives were made.

BLUEBIRD WAR LUNCHEON.

Joe Brandt, general manager of the Universal Film Company, who originated a scheme to present a "Letter of Cheer" to General Pershing, has arranged for a luncheon at the Hotel Astor, New York, on August 2, tendered to Senators, Governors, Mayors and members of the press, at which time an album containing the signatures will be offered for inspection. The album is said to be a particularly ornate affair done by Tiffany in the highest form of art. The plan is being carried out under the auspices of the Bluebird Photo Plays, Inc.

Severing his affiliation Sunday night with W. H. Clune after four years, during which time he has been manager of Clune's Broadway and the Comedy theater, James W. Anderson is already packing his traveling kit preparatory to enjoying his first vacation in that period. Mr. Anderson, or "Jim" Anderson, as he is genially haled by a host of friends, will first take a rest at San Jacinto Hot Springs, and then will put in the remainder of his three weeks in recreation. Upon his return Mr. Anderson will probably accept one of the offers in the pictorial field which he is now entertaining. Mr. Anderson's resignation as manager of Clune's Broadway will be the occasion of sincere regret to patrons and friends alike. In the four years he has been connected with the popular Broadway picture house he has gained recognition as one of the most efficient managers in the city, and the good wishes of his host of friends will attend him in his new undertakings.

Lee Arthur, the playwright, author of "The Auctioneer" and other stage productions, who has been writing screen vehicles for Jackie Saunders this summer, gave a dinner at the Balboa cafe last Saturday on the occasion of his birthday. His guests numbered about sixty employees of the Balboa company, comprising the official and acting staff. Mr. Arthur was presented with a birthday cake and a handsome amber cigarette case, the presentation speech being made by Secretary Elwood D. Horkheimer.

Tom Mix, Foxfilm comedy star and daredevil, was injured the other day during the making of scenes in his current comedy. No Mix picture is complete without the use of real bullets in the shooting scenes; in the comedy mentioned Mix was supposed to have a glass shot from his hand as he was drinking. One of his trusty cowbodys did the deed, and the glass was properly shattered. But the splintered glass flew into Tom's face, cutting him badly

CONNECTICUT TO HAVE HISTORICAL FILM.

Backed by many prominent newspapers in Connecticut and under the patronage of well-known citizens of that state, including President Hadley of Yale, former President William H. Taft, Mrs. Richard Mansfield and the governor, Guy Hedlund is preparing to produce a historical picture in which the Red Cross will have an interest. Mr. Hedlund is working without compensation, both on account of the patriotic nature of the subject and because he is a native of the Nutmeg state.

In the film Mrs. Mansfield will portray Moll Pitcher, young Mr. Mansfield will be seen as Paul Revere, and James O'Neill the elder will delineate old Israel Putnam, Connecticut's revolutionary hero. President Hadley also will take part. Just how the subject will be exploited has not been determined.

The remains of the old Kinematograph Exhibitors' Association of Great Britain and Ireland were interred at Birmingham last week, where simultaneously its successor—the trade union of exhibitors—was inaugurated and honored under the name of the National Kinematograph Association. Following the annual meeting and winding up of the old association, the members entertained at dinner the Lord Mayor of Birmingham who, considering his disinterestedness in the trade, gave some valuable hints to the assembly in connection with their relations and dealings with licensing authorities. At the subsequent conference of members the matters discussed included the subscription fees to the new association; the impending increase in tax; attitudes of local lauthorities, and the super-film. Censorship, by way of a pleasant change, was conspicuous by its absence. The amount of subscription each exhibitor should pay to the Association exhausted much time and discussion before a settlement was reached. The basis is to be three guineas, two guineas, and one guinea per annum according to the rated value and seating capacity of the exhibitor's theater. Upon the question of the increased entertainment tax the following resolution was carried unanimously: "That the effects of the entertainment duty has both directly and indirectly been responsible for closing already over 700 kinemas; that this disastrous result continues and further theaters are being closed; that while the duty is maintained the opportunities for the amusements of the people will be steadily reduced and any increase of duty particularly on the lower prices will not only be a harsh injustice to the exhibitor, but cannot fail to defeat the object of the Treasury by reducing the revenue to be obtained from this class of entertainment. This conference, therefore, not only in the interests of the trade, but in the interests of a great public driven by present circumstances to demand this innocent source of relief from strain, urges the House of Commons not to agree to increased taxation of kinema admissions." Another matter which found favor at the conference was co-operation of local branches of the Association with the local licensing authorities. Instancing its practical value the secretary of the Birmingham branch referred to their joint committee of three exhibitors and four local justices which was appointed to deal with matters that came up in Birmingham between kinema theaters and licensing authorities. After hearing convincing testimony of the way in which the Birmingham parties had helped local exhibitors out of legislative difficulties a resolution to the following effect was moved: "That it is desirable to adopt as a policy co-operation with local authorities in conducting the kinema business."

The most controversial subject discussed at the conference was, however, the question of the showing of super-films at regular dramatic theaters. Ever since D. W. Griffith exploited his two famous films in this way to the exclusion of the ordinary exhibitor, the question has been a sore and insoluble one. But A. E. Newbound made a suggestion that offers possibilities. He pointed out that the development of the film along these lines was essential to prosperity, but at the same time thought that exhibitors might combine together to secure the rights for their respective localities of such super-films that they considered successful business propositions. They should elect the most suitable hall for the exhibition of the film and share out the profits in proportion to the capital invested in the purchase of the rights by each exhibitor. Mr. Newbould finally moved "that the super-film adds to the prestige of the kinema and it is desirable in the interests of the trade to devise means whereby it can be exhibited without detriment to the financial interests of the exhibitor," and this resolution was carried with unanimous approval.

THE picture situation in Haiti seems to be quite unique, according to Mr. Rosseau, owner of two theaters on the island. The population of the island is over 2,000,000 and 90 per cent. of the people are black. There are ten theaters in this country and nine of these are equipped with Power machines. There is no method of exchange, except that each exhibitor buys his own film and afterward interchanges with his fellow showmen. Mr. Rosseau states that French film is the most popular, but there is a strong liking for serials of American make. Great care must be taken in purchasing pictures that will not offend the black people. Titles are shown in both English and French on American pictures, i. e., there are two strips of title shown. Dressler Pictures for Goldwyn

Famous Comedienne Arranges Market for New Productions —Now Working at Fort Lee.

GOLDWYN Distributing Corporation annouces that it has closed a contract to release and distribute eight two-reel Marie Dressler comedies to be made by Miss Dressler's own company under an exclusive agreement with Goldwyn.

Miss Dressler's comedies are not a matter for future development, for the famous comedienne has been working for more than a month in Fort Lee, and will follow the same principle as the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation by always keeping months ahead of releases with finished production.

Marie Dressler.

Miss Dressler and James Dalton, her husband and manager, have gathered together a trained and splendidly equipped organization for the making of comedies, and this organization promptly took advantage of the Goldwyn studio facilities in Fort Lee and began work in late June on the first of the comedies.

Exhibitors throughout the world who have reaped large returns from Miss Dressler's longer comedy productions "Tillie's Punctured Romance," and "Tillie's Nightmare," especially, will be delighted to know that this box office star has not only obtained her own producing mechanism, but made a close business alliance with the Goldwyn distributing facilities.

First announcement of this deal was made in Chicago by Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, to a group of the Goldwyn branch managers in attendance at the exhibitors' exposition, and to various exhibitors who are following closely the development and expansion of the Goldwyn interests.

Further announcement of a new and pleasant relationship in another direction is to be made by Mr. Goldfish within the next few days. This also has to do with Goldwyn's production of farce comedies of greater lengths by another important star.

Nathan Hirsch, of the Civilization-Pioneer Film Co., was voted to membership at the last meeting. It is almost unanimous now.

E. M. Saunders, president, was absent, not having returned from Chicago convention. Vice-president Buxbaum presided and kept all busy.

Mr. Hov was instructed to communicate with exhibitors at several different points, where they were rumored to be organizing for price dictation and ask them to appoint conference committees to meet F. I. L. M. Club committees, so that no injustice would be done anyone concerned.

STEGER TO PRODUCE WALTER'S "JUST A WOMAN."

Eugene Walter's well-known play, "Just a Woman," will be produced as a photodrama by Julius Steger in association with Messrs. Lee Shubert and Joseph M. Schenck. Miss Charlotte Walker will be the star, playing the title role which she created in the original stage version. She will be supported by an excellent cast headed by Lee Baker. The production will be under the personal direction of Julius Steger and Joseph A. Golden.

Lena Baskette in Dancing Role

MORE than a year ago the announcement was made that the longest Universal contract ever drawn had been signed between the film company and a little girl called Lena Baskette. Lena is not very old, but she can already lay claim to the two titles "Actress" and "Dancer." It was her dancing which attracted the attention of the Universal officials. She was forthwith given the appropriate pseudonym, "Pavlowa Junior."

Lena Baskette.

Lena has appeared in a great number of Universal pictures. She played what was practically a stellar role in "The Caravan," that remarkagle study of Old Egypt, in which Clair McDowell was the leading adult role. Lena made up very effectively as an Egyptian, for there is something exotic in her appearance, which allows her to impersonate such roles remarkably well. A late release in which she appeared was the Gold Seal, "The Black Mantilla," a story of Mexico, staged by Ruth Ann Baldwin, in which a dancing contest played a part in the action. Lena was to take her turn with the adult dancers, and it was pretty to watch the impatience with which she waited for it.

At the present time she is appearing in a series of two-reel pictures, which are made by Marshall Stedman. These stories have all been chosen with a special view to using her talents as a dancer. In one of them, called "Amelita's Friend," the title role is played by Joe Martin, the almost human orang-outang, who is Lena's favorite playmate.

JUVENILE VAMPIRE WANTED.

Producing Director F. J. Balshofer and Harold Lockwood, together with Studio Manager Gibson and the assistant directors, have spent three weeks in what has been, up to this time, an unsuccessful search for a particular type of youthful feminine heavy woman for one of the leading roles in the next Lockwood production, which is to be a picturization of the George Gibbs novel, Paradise Garden. The role of Marcia Van Wyck in the Paradise Garden novel, which is the part to be filled, is one of great importance in the story. Marcia Van Wyck is a beautiful young woman of the ultra-wealthy class of New York City, who is the first worldly-wise young woman with whom the hero comes in contact after having been reared to the age of twenty-one in the seclusion of a vast country estate, entirely out of sight and knowledge of the opposite sex. The events of the story between the girl and the leading character, played by Harold Lockwood, are among the most intense in this dramatic producton.

DUSTIN FARNUM FINISHES PLAY.

Dustin Farnum has finished "The Spy," a dramatic photoplay with the present war as a background, under the direction of Richard Stanton, and "Dusty" intends taking the vacation he has earned by his consistent hard work. The idol of stage and screen has not been seen by the public for the last ten months, as he has been busy starring in four subjects, of which "The Spy" is the most recent, for Fox Film Corporation. Winifred Kingston is the "opposite."

CAPRICE CAST COMPLETED.

Harry Millarde, June Caprice's new director, has practically completed the cast for his initial pictureplay with the William Fox Sunshine Maid. The company now includes Harry Hilliard; the splendid character actor, Dan Mason; the talented diminutive, Kittens Reichert, Margaret Laird, who appeared in a recent Fox Film, and Lucy Beaumont, a newcomer to the Fox production.

"The Mad Lover"

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE Mad Lover," a five-reel production in which Harry Rapf presents Robert Warwick, assisted by Elaine Hammerstein, makes its play on a domestic situation and declares itself in favor of productive matrimony. The picture appears on the program of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., and is artistically staged, while from a constructive standpoint the story is not beyond criticism; it follows in many respects the older-fashioned moving picture style, and is not a drama in the true sense of the word. The feminine lead is charmingly played by Elaine Hammerstein, and the eye is catered to in rather a spectacular fashion by the use of elaborate and beautiful sets.

Scene from "The Mad Lover" (Pathe).

The story opens in the home of a wealthy bachelor whose friends have despaired of his ever marrying. One evening, however, an accident occurs near his home in which a couple of women in an automobile party are injured. After sheltering them in his house for several days while they convalesce he falls in love with the younger of the two, and finally invites her to become his wife.

The honeymoon over, he reverts to his old hobby of hunting and leaves his bride alone, causing her considerable unhappiness. A clergyman and friend of her husband's, in whom she confides, tells her that only in maternity can a married woman find happiness. At this point of the story the wife's aunt, alive to the growing coldness between the wedded pair, arrives on the scene with a large party of friends and brings about the incident from which the picture gets its name when the guests and their hosts arrange for a performance of "Othello" for a charity fund. One of the guests, falling in love with Desdemona (his hostess) arouses the jealousy of the husband, who dreams a terrible dream concerning his wife's estrangement and her death by his hand while realistically playing the role of Othello. The outcome of the story is that the coolness between the pair is bridged successfully, resulting in the birth of a child to gladden the home.

Robert Warwick plays excellently as Robert Hyde, the husband, and Elaine Hammerstein as Clarice, the wife, as before said, is graceful and charming. Others of the cast whose work is to be commended are: Valentine Petit, Edward Kimball, George Flateau and Frank McGlynn.

"Walt Mason 'Rhyme Reels'"

Filmcraft Corporation Produces Four One-Reel Subjects, Embodying Story-Poems by the Famous Philosopher.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A NEW and enjoyable variation of the screen comedy is found in these "Rhyme Reels" offered by Filmcraft Corporation. Each of them illustrates and includes a poem by Walt Mason, whose fame as a humorous bard is heralded daily wherever newspapers are read. The film product has the advantage of great advance advertising and there will be plenty of readers of the daily poems anxious to see "how Walt Mason makes out in the movies."

One of the "Rhyme Reel" comedies has already been tried out, the one entitled "The Dipper," which was shown at the Rialto theater. It received a very favorable reception there. This particular comedy is perhaps the strongest of the four thus far made. It tells a human story of a boy and girl on a farm who carve their initials on the old dipper at the well. The board of health sends a representative to collect all such drinking utensils and throws them in the dump heap. The search for microbes, shown by animated drawings, makes a good humorous feature. Later, the youth and girl recover the dipper, which had come into possession of a tramp.

The humor in each of these comedy numbers is found in the thought and in the gently satirical verse, rather than in the action. It calls for smiles rather than laughs, but is a long step ahead of the ordinary slapstick humor. The presentation of each comedy is simple but effective. Homely types predominate, and the story-poems are all human and close to the soil.

"The Iron Ring"

Five-Part Peerless Photoplay Written by Horace Hazelton Has Complicated Plot But Is Well Acted—Released by World.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE opening scenes of "The Iron Ring," a five-part Peerless photoplay written by Horace Hazelton, give promise of an interesting story, but the author has made the mistake of putting too many separate interests in his plot and jumping the action from one to the other. The central figures are Aleck Hulette and his wife Bess. Aleck is anxious to become rich, and his wife thinks that his devotion to business justifies her in seeking amusement in the society of other men. A married woman, next door, who is in the habit of going out with her husband, introduces Bess to a wealthy young chap of good appearance but elastic morals. The usual thing happens. Bess consents to attend a birthday party at his home and finds herself the only guest. The timely arrival of her husband prevents the affair from having a most unpleasant ending, and Aleck and Bess come to the right kind of an understanding.

The other interests in the picture comprise the infatuation of Dorothy Delmore, a sister of the tempter of Bess, for a physician who is already provided with a wife and two children; the unhappy experiences and suicide of the husband of the unprincipled woman next door; and the love affair between Aleck's partner and the secretary of the firm. Delmore is able to stop his sister just as she is eloping with the doctor, and the disappointed man makes the best of the matter by going back to his family. Splitting the interest in a play of any description is against the canons of dramatic art. The

The cast of characters calls for well-schooled actors and they have been supplied. Edward Langford, Gerda Holmes and Arthur Ashley have the three leading parts. Herbert Frank, George MacQuarrie, George Cowl, Alexandria Carewe, Gladys Thompson, Victor Kennard and Richard Clarke have been intrusted with the remaining roles.

"The Innocent Sinner"

Pretty Miriam Cooper Leads in Latest Fox Melodrama—Old Story Leads Up to Stirring Fight Between U. S. Sailors as Rescuers and Toughs in Bowery Joint.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

Scene from "The Innocent Sinner" (Fox).

THE seeming "oldness" of any picture generally comes from the lack of fresh characterization in the heroine and hero. Miriam Cooper, who in "The Innocent Sinner," latest Fox five-reel melodrama, plays the leading woman's part, and Charles Clary, who has the role of the final hero, fail to strike fire and this leaves us only partly interested in their fate. The real hero of the tale is "Bull," a city tough, played by W. E. Parsons. He and John Reese, in another tough character, seem like real and therefore interesting persons. Few scenes, except those in which they are the centers of interest, really interest us. They do not make the picture noteworthy but they make it passable. Many of the lesser characters do not convince strongly and are uninteresting. The story spreads itself over too much ground and grows thin in long stretches.

The early scenes, showing a poor family in the country, are spoilt by many inconsistencies. I don't believe there ever was such a family. Miss Cooper plays the girl of that family. A young man, played by Jack Standing, is at the hotel and gets her to leave home by the "same old bunk." A thief ducks into her room in the house of Madam Coco to escape the cops and she converts him by her sympathy. He becomes a bouncer at a booze joint. Jack takes Miriam there and neglects her. She leaves, followed by "The Weasel" (Reese). The bouncer sees and also follows. The three are together in her room and the Weasel gets bounced. Jack comes and sees the bouncer in the room. While he is explaining, the Weasel shoots to kill the bouncer and kills Jack. The bouncer is arrested and gets twenty years, but escapes and joins the navy. Miriam has a chance to marry Jack's cousin; is stolen by the Weasel and taken to a joint. The sailor lad is warned and brings his comrades. There is an exciting fight. The cops come. The sailor boy is killed. The police get the Weasel and Jack's cousin gets the girl. The whole would have been better with half the characters and two reels of film.

"The Coming Out of Maggie"

A Two-Part O. Henry Story Distinguished by Imaginative Acting and Directing.

Reviewed by Arthur W. Courtney.

YOU do not have to be a reader of O. Henry to enjoy the screen version of "The Coming Out of Maggie." The adaptation has been made with touches of imagination that make it an excellent photoplay regardless of its antecedents.

Maggie's furnished room is individual. The bed is across a window, so that Maggie must cross the bed on her knees to call down to Anna and Jimmy that she will be ready to go to the dance with them as soon as she gets her shoes on.

The delineation of Maggie's character is rich in detail. For one thing, her stockings are always falling down. As she crosses her room she plucks at the top of a stocking through her skirt. Later, when she is leaving the cloak room to go to the dance floor, she reaches under her skirt to adjust the top of her stocking again.

The gun fight in a lumber yard between the leaders of two rival gangs shows some startling transpositions of prairie strategy to city alleys.

The scene where Maggie appears on the dance floor with an escort of her own, both dressed in such finery as to be completely out of place in the company upon which Maggie is trying to make an impression, has a high comedy value that is seldom achieved on the screen.

The close of the picture is another stroke of art. The close-up of Maggie and Dempsey irises down to Maggie's face below which appears the subtitle: "Will a Duck Swim?" This is Maggie's reply to an invitation to the next dance by the leader of the gang.

This is an artistic photoplay, representing with singular fidelity a level of social life that is all too seldom shown on the screen.

"Captain Kiddo," Five-Part Lasalida Production Featuring Little Marie Osborne; Number Six of "The Fatal Ring" Serial, and Fourteenth Installment of "The Neglected Wife."

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"Captain Kiddo."

NO ONE sings "Fifteen men on the dead man's chest" in "Captain Kiddo," a five-part Lasalida production starring little Marie Osborne, but there are plenty of pirates in the picture, for all that. And Marie is the captain of the crew. Part of the plot is made up of the usual pranks of a bright child and her companions, the rest of the story becoming quite serious, with a secret service officer on the trail of a band of smugglers and Marie afloat on the ocean in a tank that contains the evidence of guilt. Her rescue by the secret service gentleman gives him the inside track with Marie's mother, a wealthy young widow, and puts his rival, who is also the villain of the plot, out of the running.

While not the best of the stories that have been written for the youthful star, it is entertaining and well suited to its purpose, and Marie enters into the spirit of it with her old zeal and a firm belief in its reality. The mistake was occasionally made, in the past, of having the little girl attempt to impersonate some one aside from herself, and all the charm and naturalness of her acting was missing. It is all present in "Captain Kiddo."

Scene from "Captain Kiddo" (Pathe).

"Rays of Death."

Pearl White, Earle Fox, Ruby Hoffman and Warner Oland, the leading members of "The Fatal Ring" cast, the latest Pathe serial, are kept busy in the "Rays of Death," the sixth episode. After throwing the violet diamond from a window of the temple of the Sacred Order of the Violet God, Pearl is seized and suspended head downward over a caldron of boiling oil. The rope that holds her is fastened so that a pair of ferrets can gnaw it in two. Just as they have nearly completed their task, Tom Carleton climbs into the room through a window and rescues the heiress. In this number the secret of the violet diamond is revealed. The story is cleverly worked out, and equal skill is shown in its production.

"Desperation."

Number fourteen of "The Neglected Wife" opens with Mary Kennedy leaving her husband, fully determined to apply for a divorce. Horace is nearly ruined by Bull Brady and Doyle, who trap him with a doctored tip, when he starts to speculate. Mary learns of this and influences Norwood to use her money to save her husband. Margaret Warner, who has broken with Kennedy, cannot forget him entirely, and refuses to marry Frank Norwood, when he suggests this as a means of protecting her from the man she both fears and loves.

"Pride and the Man"

William Russell Featured in Pugilistic Role in American Five-Reel Production.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

PLENTY of action and suspense well maintained are the chief attributes of "Pride and the Man," a five-reel drama made at the American studios for the Mutual program. William Russell plays the principal male character, with Francelia Billington opposite him. The supporting cast is a good one and the picture is one that will appeal strongly to sporting blood of most of us.

The story centers about the love story of a pugilist (William Russell) who, happening to be on the beach at the moment when the daughter of a rich old family is in danger of drowning, rescues her. The romance of the story is from this hour in progress, with the girl's father in the role of the persecutor. The pair marry in spite of obstacles and the pugilist, giving up his profession, enters business life. During the strain of many reverses, believing that his wife would be happier at home with her father, he plots successfully to disgust her, and she returns to her old home. In order to pay her back money that she loaned him he returns again to the ring and, because of his broken-hearted condition, loses out. The wife eventually learns the truth and goes back to her husband, and "life goes on like a song."

While the fight scenes are not always conducted in professional style, still they are capable of creating intense excitement and suspense. The picture is one that the masses will like; and with the exception of a few suggestive scenes where the pugilist pretends that he is drunk to disgust his wife, and a too realistic close-up of the beaten pugilist, there is nothing objectionable in the picture.

No one will understand what the mark of Stingaree is the first time he sees the picture unless he reads the story. It is better that he should not know. It is not relevant and it is such an unpleasant act, the branding of a man on the forehead with the red-hot tip of the barrel of Stingaree's gun, that it can be only partially shown.

What you will enjoy in this episode is the capture of Stingaree single-handed by Edythe Sterling with a gun she has stolen from a trooper. This happens in the second reel. She has an appointment to elope with a young man. She does not know that he has stolen money from a bank; also the loot which Howie has taken from the overland stage. All she knows when she finds him a prisoner of Stingaree's is that she loves him. She steals a gun from a trooper, leaves her horse, lays aside her jacket and traces the hoof prints of the horses of Stingaree and her lover until she comes upon them in camp, and holds Stingaree up at the point of the gun. Then Stingaree tells her the truth about her lover and Howie takes her home and her father forgives her. The close-ups of Edythe Sterling as she stands there, dishevelled, her waist torn, and her corduroy skirt discolored with earth stains, are thrilling poses full of action and alive with interest.

Barney Furey plays the part of the young bank clerk who receives the mark of Stingaree. His acting is well done. The leader which quotes him, when he is explaining to Stingaree how he came by the thirteen hundred pounds sterling in his boot, as saying: "I stole it in small amounts from the bank," is followed by a flash-back showing him in his cage at the bank, gazing furtively about, then taking bank-notes out of a drawer and putting them in his pocket. The illustration of his statement was hardly necessary and could have been spared, especially as it shows a theft. Or else the leader is unnecessary. To have both the leader and the scene is like having a picture of a horse entitled "This is a horse."

In this episode Howie is played by Hal Clements, who has appeared in this character before. He is not the originator of it. True Boardman is Stingaree, chivalrous as ever. The riding of the troopers is somewhat lacking in action. This is an interesting episode.

"The Long Trail"

Lou-Tellegen Plays Role of Canadian Trapper in Dramatic Story Among Snowy Scenes—Ably Helped by Mary Fuller—Paramount-Famous Players Picture.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

FROM the moment when in the Famous Players picture, "The Long Trail," Louise (Mary Fuller) comes back to the cabin of Andre (Lou-Tellegen) as his bride, the picture with its story, its dramatic moments, its pretty scenes, its backgrounds and all, holds as a well-organized unit and interests deeply. We didn't care whether Louise was considered an heiress by society or not. We needed to know that she was poor, that her selfish aunt wanted her to marry wealth, that her fiance was heartless, and that her only brother, whom she deeply loves, is a worthless profligate; but all these could have been—indeed they were—shown after her uncle and aunt have brought her and her fiance to the camp near which Andre and his sister (Winifred Allen) live. But these early scenes are filled with artistic sets and backgrounds, and if they fail to capture our interest, they are often pretty, and when the story gets going, we find that it is good, there's no doubt about that at all.

Scene from "The Long Trail" (Paramount).

The other characters drop out of the way and leave, roughly speaking, four persons—the girl and her bad brother, and the trapper and his sister. It is a picture of love triumphant over revenge. Louise's brother has ruined the trapper's sister—she leaves a Montreal convent school for him—yet, for love, he lets the villain go. It is my idea that, when the brother comes to the cabin, if the girl had upbraided him for what he had done and, while she worked to save him, had refused to kiss him, it would have given a higher ending. As it is, Andre almost seems to have reason for thinking that he has bought her love, whereas the full recognition of mutual feeling might have waited till the last when he might have tried to comfort her in her sorrow for what her brother had done. The close lacks tone.

The photographer's problem of snow pictures in dark, stormy weather was not easy; but as a whole he has done very fair work. Howard Hansel is the director and the script is by Eve Unsell.

"The City of Purple Dreams" (Selig).

The completion of the filming of scenes for "The City of Purple Dreams" has been announced by Director Colin Campbell, of the Selig Polyscope Co. The drama presents Thomas Santschi in the star role, with Bessie Eyton and Fritzi Brunette as featured actresses. The supporting cast includes Eugenie Besserer, Harry Lonsdale, Frank Clark and other Selig favorites. "The City of Purple Dreams" is taken from the famous novel of the same title, and was scenarioized by Gilson Willets.

"One Touch of Nature"

Well Staged Baseball Story on K-E-S-E Program Features John J. McGraw with Good Supporting Cast.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

WHILE John J. McGraw has the name of being the featured member of the cast of the Edison five-reel production, "One Touch of Nature," by right of baseball fame, John Drew Bennett plays the leading role of the story, and in fine style, with a supporting cast consisting of Edward Lawrence, Viola Cain, Edward O'Connor, George Henry and Helen Strickland.

Scene from "One Touch of Nature" (Edison).

The story by Peter B. Kyne is a rattling good baseball tale, and opens with the son of a rich pork packer meeting a pretty vaudeville actress by accident while he is still at Yale. In the course of his attentions to the young woman, she loses her position one evening because of being late, and he marries her and for his pains is made an outcast of his father's house. An offer from McGraw to young Vandervoor, whose fame as crack player of the Yale team has reached the ears of the manager of the Giants, makes the young people independent, while in the home of the pork packer consternation and mortification go hand in hand.

Considerable comedy has been rung into the story from the fact that the young lady's father is a Chicago plumber. On the day of the big game both fathers are there, and Vandervoor, always a baseball fan, unable in the face of the possible glorification of his son to be mindful of scruples with regard to the son's marriage to the daughter of a plumber, finally gets in the front row on the bleachers and takes a big hand in keeping up the spirits of the Giants. The affair ends in a victory for the Giants and the taking of the young couple into the Vandervoor home, plus the Irish plumber.

Viola Cain is charming as Madame de Montignon, the vaudeville star, and afterward the wife of young Vandervoor, and Edward O'Connor in the role of the Irish plumber is inimitable. The picture was released on the program of K-E-S-E on July 30.

"By Right of Possession"

Five-Part Blue Ribbon Feature Produced by the Vitagraph Has Mary Anderson and Antonio Moreno at Head of the Cast.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE opening incidents of "By Right of Possession," a five-part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature written by Alvah Milton Kerr, give promise of a rattling good photoplay, and there is a situation in about the middle of the story where the hero and the heroine get trapped in a mine and work their way to freedom that for realism of treatment and sustained interest has seldom been surpassed. Mary Anderson and Antonio Moreno, who head the cast, played this portion of the drama with fine appreciation of its possibilities. Unfortunately, matters take a decided slump in the last two reels, the author having run out of incident for his original line of thought. As a consequence, he has introduced the female suffrage cause and has his heroine elected sheriff. This material is not bad in itself, but, following the strong situations in the first part of the story, it loses much of its real worth. Used as the opening scenes and then followed by the incidents leading up to the fight for life in the mine, the result would have given "By Right of Possession" the proportions of a well made drama.

Aside from the excellent acting of Mary Anderson and Antonio Moreno, a high credit mark goes to Otto Lederer for his character work as "Bells." William Wolbert is to be commended for his directing of the picture.

"The Planter"

Ten-Part Dramatization of Novel by Herman Whitaker Starring Tyrone Power Has Little Merit and Abounds in Highly Objectionable Situations Throughout.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE most important fact concerning "The Planter," the ten-part dramatization of the novel by Herman Whitaker, presented by F. M. Manson, is that in its present form it is not a proper attraction for a family moving picture theater. The big situation of the story is a realistic attempt of a father to rape his own daughter, and lust, murder and unnecessary revelation of the grosser passions of humanity abound throughout the entire work. The adaptation, by Harry C. Drum, is bungling, filled with superfluous characters and incidents, and shows an utter lack of good taste or knowledge of dramatic construction. A nude woman, who disports herself in a stream of water and extends an invitation to the hero to join her, is one of the objectionable incidents. The producers have gone to considerable expense to secure the proper locations and atmosphere for the story, and have given it a strong cast headed by Tyrone Powrr. The efforts of the star and his companions only emphasize both the moral and the artistic errors of the work.

"Where Is My Mother"

An Interesting Number of the Series "Do Children Count," Produced by the Essanay Company for the K-E-S-E Program.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

LITTLE Mary McAlister, featured in the Essanay series "Do Children Count?" is attractive as Nina Burdock in the number entitled "Where Is My Mother?" The picture consists of two reels and treats of a simple theme in which Robert Wilkins, in love with the wife of his friend, is the cause of a separation between husband and wife. The child remaining with her father asks constantly "where is my mother?" and finally finds her way to the office of her father's lawyer, who, against his will, is engaged in making out papers for a divorce suit which is to be pressed by the husband.

In the meantime Wilkins, on the eve of his departure for another land, sends a letter to the lawyer explaining everything. The lawyer makes use of the child in bringing the husband and wife together, and the story ends in complete reconciliation.

"Knights of the Square Table"

Four-Part Feature of the Second Conquest Program Tells An Interesting Boy Scout Story—Three Other Reels on the Program.

Reviewed by Arthur W. Courtney.

THE second Conquest program begins with a four-reel feature, "Knights of the Square Table." This picture is a weaving together of the dreams of a crook's son about the search for the Holy Grail, his organization of the "Wharf-Rats Motherless Knights Erring of the Square Table," and the activities of a boy scout unit that befriends his gang. Paul Kelly plays the part of the crook's son. Yale Boss is at the head of the boy scouts. They have a bully fight with the wharf rats. One of the latter is thrown into the water, rescued by scouts and resuscitated by them. The scene where the gang suggests rolling him "on a barrel or something," but the scouts use artificial respiration and bring him to, is so thrilling that one feels the thrill even as he writes about it.

There is one other very effective scene. James Wilder, of the Boy Scouts of America, is seen telling the story of Sir Launfal to the boys gathered about the camp fire.

The story is pictured in two scenes, the setting forth on the quest, and the return, meeting with the beggar and the transformation. Later, the gang leader, to save a younger boy who is in the power of two thieves, takes his place, breaks into a jewelry store and gets a piece of glass in his arm. He does not know how to clean the wound and so languishes in pain on a cot in the wharf rats' retreat. The detective who killed his father tracks them down and, after overhearing the names of the two thieves, shows pity for the boy and offers him a drink from an old tin can. As he does so he is transformed into a knight like those the boy is always dreaming of. This transformation is a beautiful one. The only unpleasant part of the picture is the initiation ceremony of the wharf rats. To prove the novice's courage, his arm is burned with a lighted cigarette. This is shown twice in the picture. The scenic titles are especially attractive.

The one-reel subject on this program: "The Story of the Willow Plate," was reviewed in the issue of May 26, page 1301. The half-reel, "Your Flag and My Flag," is little more than a series of different American flags flying in the wind. The leaders are four-line portions of a mediocre poem of the same title as the picture. The half-reel "What Form Means to an Athlete" shows the movements of athletes in running, jumping, throwing the hammer and other events, analyzed by a high-speed camera. This is a very instructive picture. The two other half-reel subjects on this program are: "Farmer Alfalfa and His Wayward Pup," an animated cartoon, and "The Making of Hundred-Ton Guns." This is a good children's program.

"The Squaw Man's Son"

Wallace Reid Is Featured in Sequel to "The Squaw Man," Also by Edwin Milton Royle.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

WHEN the Lasky company over three years ago gave us its initial production, "The Squaw Man," it was agreed that the new concern had made its bow to photoplayers with a great picture. Lasky released on July 26 "The Squaw Man's Son," a sequel to the first named subject, from the pen of the same author, Edwin Milton Royle. If the newcomer fails to match its predecessor in interest, in heart interest, nevertheless it makes a good story, one that easily will hold its own.

Wallace Reid is Lord Effington, the man grown from Hal, the son of Nat-u-rich, the squaw. As in all of his work, Mr. Reid thoroughly plays the part of the half-Englishman, half-red man reared in affluence in England, but with the blood of the Indian impelling him to seek the outdoors of his native west. Anita King is Wah-na-gi, the Carlisle graduate with whom Hal, in spite of the fact he has a wife in England, falls in love. Miss King has one of the big roles of the story and does excellent work. Dorothy Davenport is Lady Effington the morphine-consuming wife of the leading character. It is an overdose of the drug that brings about her death at a convenient point in the play, leaving her former partner free to marry Wah-na-gi.

Scene from "The Squaw Man's Son" (Paramount).

There are other good character portrayals, such for instance as Frank Lanning as the medicine man, Donald Bowles as McCloud, the Indian missionary, and C. H. Geldert as Ladd, the Indian agent. There are stiff personal encounters, in which the athlete Reid figures to advantage. Of tense situations there a goodly number, and the same may be said of the picturesque backgrounds.

"The Slacker"

Metro Special Production of Seven-Part Photoplay Features Emily Stevens—Written and Directed by William Christy Cabanne.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE Metro Pictures Corporation evidently gave William Christy Cabanne a free hand in the production of his seven-part patriotic photoplay, "The Slacker." The cast, headed by Emily Stevens, is an excellent one, and the scenes reflect the surroundings of people of wealth and refinement. As the title indicates, the entire picture is intended to arouse the loyalty of every spectator. It contains ample material for its purpose. Whatever shortcomings in the way of a strong and skilfully constructed plot it may have is offset by the timeliness of the story and sincerity of the author and director. Paul Revere's Ride, the Death of Nathan Hale and Lee's Surrender are introduced as brief incidents to emphasize the spirit of patriotism that has always animated this country and are contrasted with the preparations for war that are being carried forward to-day. With such a subject most people will not be inclined to look too closely at the purely artistic side of Mr. Cabanne's play-writing and will forgive him for revealing the true character of his slacker-hero before the end of the first reel.

Scene from "The Slacker" (Metro).

Robert Wallace, the elder son of a rich and indulgent father, marries Margaret Christy, a spirited and finely reared American girl, so that he may escape the call to war. His wife discovers the fact after they have been married for some time and does her best to arouse his manhood. This is accomplished by a combination of circumstances, and when the first American troops sail for France Robert is among them, as his life-saving exploit in the opening reel foretold.

Emily Stevens found little difficulty in making Margaret Christy a warm-blooded, true-hearted woman whose grief at parting with her husband is no more intense than is her pride in his being one of the men to answer to the call of his country. Walter Miller fitted admirably the role of Robert Wallace, and Leo Delaney, Daniel Jarrett, Eugene Borden and Charles Fang were prominent members of the supporting company.

"The Hidden Spring"

Exciting Western Story of a Fight Between a Young Lawyer and an Unscrupulous Mine Owner.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

IN "The Hidden Spring," a five part Metro-Yorke picture founded on Clarence Budington Kelland's novel of the same name, Harold Lockwood is provided with a role well suited to his talents, and he gives an excellent performance. The story is laid in a western mining town and deals with the successful fight of a young lawyer against an unscrupulous mine owner who rules with an iron hand.

According to the author, in each of us there is a hidden spring; some find it; in others it remains undiscovered, and in still others it is touched by chance, love or other outside influences; but whatever the means, it releases a source of driving, urging power of will which carries us forward to accomplishment.

Donald Keeth, an easy going young lawyer, arrives in Copper City with his dog Mirabeau. He soon learns that Quartus Hembly, through his control of the mines and smelters, has the entire town, including the court, completely in his power, and that he must do Hembly's bidding if he desires to remain. He is still inclined to take things easy until, during a story interview, Hembly brutally kicks the dog. The appeal of the helpless dumb animal touches "the hidden spring"—it is then a fight to the finish. In befriending an outcast, Kerston, to whom no one dares give shelter, he learns that Kerston is the real owner of the properties, and succeeds in arousing the inhabitants. A mob seizes Hembly and he is about to be beaten to death when saved by Keeth.

While there is a pretty love story introduced, between Harold Lockwood, as Donald Keeth, and Vera Sisson, as Thora Erickson, daughter of one of Hembly's tools, it is subordinated to the main theme. Miss Sisson's work is charming, and the rest of the supporting cast is good, particularly Arthur Millet as Olaf Erickson, Lester Cuneo as Bill Wheeler, an "honest roughneck" who aids Keeth, and William Clifford as an unscrupulous lawyer.

"The Double Standard"

Five-Reel Butterfly Release, Based on Story by Brand Whitlock, Presents Interesting Sociological Theme.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS offering presents an absorbing sociological problem, pictured in story form. It tells of a young magistrate, named John Fairbrother, who believed in equal punishment for men and women when the social laws are broken His attempts to deal out exact justice for all concerned brings the trail of scandal into his own home His wife's brother and the latter's son are caught in the legal meshes set by the judge. This brings up a grimly humorous situation at the close.

This production has none of the usual offensive situations common to this sort of story. It is given a light touch in certain moments where theatricalism is usually allowed to hold full sway. The producer, Phillips Smalley, has followed the simple plot thread of the story in a direct, concise way. The theme is an old one, but of perennial significance, and the interest is not allowed to flag at any point. This in spite of the fact that there is hardly one highly dramatic moment in the story.

Roy Stewart appears as the young magistrate, a part demanding no great effort, and yet presented with the essential dignity required. Hazel Page plays the young country girl who falls in with a fast woman of the city and is arrested with the latter. Clarissa Selwyn appears as the wife, and others in the cast are Joseph Gerard, Frank Brownlee, Frank Elliott, Irene Aldwyn and Max Stanley.

Scene from "The Double Standard" (Butterfly).

This is successful as a thoughtful study of social life in the larger cities and will interest the average adult audience.

"The Little Terror"

Violet Mersereau in Five-Part Bluebird Photoplay of the Regulation Type for Ingenue Heroines—Written and Directed by Rex Ingram.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE father and mother of the heroine of "The Little Terror" were circus performers and the five parts of this Bluebird photoplay are taken up principally by the pranks of their offspring after she has quit the sawdust ring and gone to live with her wealthy grandfather, carrying Rudolph, her pet pig, as a companion. The story is the regulation one for pictures of this class, and admirers of Violet Mersereau are given the opportunity to see her slide down stairs on trays, vault over the back of a couch and use Rudolph to frighten her Willieboy cousin and a determined female who has decided to accept the position of governess to the exbareback rider and refuses to leave the house. There is a lover who belonged to the circus, but who becomes a cartoonist at a thousand dollars a week and marries the little terror at the finish.

The photoplay is just what its name implies, a well meaning picture of slight value in a dramatic way, but full of the kind of romping and fun to be expected from an ingenue heroine. Violet Mersereau acts with easy confidence and wears her short skirts with the unconcern of youth. Ed Porter gives a lifelike portrayal of an oldtime circus proprietor, and Sidney Mason, Ned Finley and Jack Raymond are cleverly cast.

"Master of His Home"

Five-Reel Triangle, With William Desmond.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

MASTER of His Home is a story of motherhood, with a definite purpose and a straight continuity, not diverging into side issues. A young girl, Millicent Drake, of ambitious mother, is thrown into the society of a young man of wealth by the name of Van Tyle with a view to a marriage of convenience. While returning from his mountain lodge their train is stalled and the party explores a rich gold mine owned in part by Carson Stewart, a role interpreted in his usually manly fashion by William Desmond. The girl descends with the young mine owner to a great depth—here are some realistic scenes—and they barely escape when a sudden explosion floods the mine with water. This episode arouses a romantic interest in the rude young miner which results in marriage when he visits the Drakes in New York. After marriage, Van Tyle, who has had no serious intentions from the outset, persecutes the young wife with his attentions, and she is in process of yielding to his blandishments when she discovers through the family physician she is with child.

Scene from "The Master of His Home" (Triangle).

There is a genuine dramatic element in the conflict between the unnatural Mrs. Drake, who does not wish to be a grandmother, and the husband, who is intensely fond of children and rejoices at the prospect of having one of his own. He leaves his home in horror and disgust over the situation and returns to his work at the mine, his ideals of marriage badly shattered. But the wife passes through a conversion to his same view, and there is a very happy ending to the story when she goes to her husband with her priceless little treasure. The final scenes are very effective and leave a fine impression on the spectator. Aside from Desmond in the lead, the work of Joseph Dowling deserves highest commendation. The highly satisfactory handling makes strongly for success.

Pathe News Shows Draft Scenes.

The Hearst-Pathe News No. 59 contained the first pictures of the army draft held in Washington, and an interesting story hangs on this statement. The event, which occurred on Friday, July 20, took place after the issue was due to close, but owing to the importance of the views and the tremendous interest of the whole country, the issue was held open until pictures of the draft could be inserted.

The negative was rushed to Jersey City from Washington by special messenger and arrived after midnight. It was quickly developed, edited and titled, and by 3.30 a. m. on Saturday was delivered to the factory ready for printing. All necessary prints were made and inserted in the issue, which left that same day for all exchanges. In this manner the opportunity was given to the audiences of those theaters in the Metropolitan territory to see the pictures of the draft less than twenty-four hours after it actually took place.

Peggy Hyland Ready for Second Mayfair Production.

Now that "Persuasive Peggy," the production in which dainty Peggy Hyland makes her Mayfair debut, is ready for its trade showing, preparations are under way for the filming of the second picture which, it is promised, will not fall below its predecessor in any way. M. A. Schlesinger, president of the company, is not yet ready to announce the title of this offering, but it will suffice to say that beauty and artistry again hold sway and Miss Hyland once more finds a role ideally suited to her capabilities.

Comments on the Films

EXCLUSIVELY BY OUR OWN STAFF

General Film Company.

THE MARK OF STINGAREE (Kalem).—An episode in "The Further Adventures of Stingaree." This is an interesting picture, and shows the best work that Edythe Sterling has done so far in the series. Howie is played by Hall Clements; Stingaree by True Boardman. Barney Furey does excellent work in a minor role. A review is printed elsewhere in this issue.

THE COMING OUT OF MAGGIE (Broadway Star).—A two-reel O. Henry story. It deals with gang life in the city. The direction is of a very high order indeed. Here is presented life on a social level seldom represented and done in a thoroughly natural manner. Reviewed in this issue.

CHEATING HIS WIFE (Ray).—In this one-reel comedy Johnny Ray is a porter in a hotel. His wife never gives him more than a nickel at a time. He steals her savings from the home safe and invests in stocks. He wins $30,000, gets drunk, and makes his peace at home. The story is slight, the humor is obvious, the ending is abrupt. This is not as funny as some other Ray comedies.

THE BUSH LEAGUER (Selig).—A baseball story about a pitcher who succeeds in mystifying everyone after a single lesson in hypnotism. This is a half reel. The reel is completed by "Marrying Gretchen," a western, which is so short that it is difficult to estimate it. This reel looks like old stuff. It is poorly done.

THE DOUBLE STANDARD, July 23.—A five-reel adaptation of a story by Brand Whitlock. This is simple and direct in construction, and free from theatricalism. It holds the attention closely throughout, and will appeal chiefly to adults. Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

Fox Film Corporation.

THE INNOCENT SINNER, July 22.—Five-reel melodrama, with Miriam Cooper in the leading role. The story is too drawn out, and has many inconsistencies. It is not a sure fire offering, but may serve well with uncritical spectators. For a longer review see elsewhere in this issue.

Greater Vitagraph.

BY RIGHT OF POSSESSION (Vitagraph), July 30.—There are some very dramatic moments in this five-reel photoplay, and it is admirably acted by Mary Anderson, Antonio Moreno and the other members of the cast. It is given a longer review on another page of this issue.

BOBBY, BOY SCOUT (Vitagraph, August 6.—A one-reel Bobby Connelly picture. Bobby is a boy scout. He goes to Gull Island with the sea captain to shoot rabbits. While gathering sticks for a fire, he sees what he thinks are pirates. They are trying to ship guns secretly. They catch Bobby and bind him. He recalls his scout oath, wriggles out of his bonds, secures the arrest of the smugglers by the coast defense guard, and receives from the Government enough money in a cash reward to pay the rent overdue on his mother's house. This is an excellent children's picture. The second of this series, "Bobby the Movie Director," was commented on in last week's issue.

Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay

WHERE IS MY MOTHER? (Essanay), July 11.—A number of the "Do Children Count?" series in which a very simple story is used. Little Mary McAlister plays the role of the child whose parents are separated through the machinations of an unscrupulous man in love with the child's mother. The picture is only fairly entertaining. A full review will be found elsewhere.

WHEN SORROW WEEPS (Essanay), July 18.—A Little Mary McAlister two-reel episode in the "Do Children Count?" series. Little Mary is a ragged half orphan, with a drunken father who dies. She is taken by a crook's wife, and later when the crook and his wife are taken to court Little Mary is sent to an asylum. The picture looks like a brief against organized charity. The suicide of the crook's wife when the child is taken from her is shown as fully as possible.

THE UNEVEN ROAD (Essanay), July 25.—A two-part episode of the "Do Children Count?" series, featuring Little Mary McAlister. In this picture she is an inquisitive child who sets fire to a dish of gunpowder in the parlor and blinds herself. She is a pathetic figure in that part of the picture where she is blind. An operation restores her sight. As usual, Little Mary is the whole picture. A review of this picture is printed elsewhere.

KNIGHTS OF THE SQUARE TABLE (Conquest), July 21.—This is the four-reel feature of the second Conquest program. It is a boy scout picture. Other pictures on this program are: "Farmer Alfalfa and His Wayward Pup" with "Your Flag and My Flag," one reel; "The Making of Hundred-Ton Guns" and "What Form Means to an Athlete," one reel; and "The Story of the Willow Plate," one reel. This program is reviewed in this issue.

ONE TOUCH OF NATURE (Edison), July 30.—An excellent five-part production based on a story by Peter B. Kyne. The story treats of the love story of a crack Yale baseball player who is recognized and placed under salary by John J. McGraw, and wins a decisive game for the Giants. John J. McGraw is featured in the production, and a capable cast handle the principal roles. A full review appears elsewhere.

PEGGY THE WILL O' THE WISP, July 9.—A five reel picture, produced by Rolfe, in which Mabel Taliafarro appears as an Irish girl and a gentleman highwayman. Her work is excellent, and the supporting cast is good. Reviewed in issue of Aug. 4th on page 812.

MR. PARKER—HERO (Drew), July 23.—One of the Drew comedies in which the servant problem almost proves too much for the hero. Sydney Drew in the role of Mr. Parker, whose wife places on him the task of discharging a lusty Irish servant, makes several attempts to deal with the servant plus two even more robust cousins, and only succeeds in being extremely polite. Finally he masters the situation by telling her that he and his wife are going to close the house for a time, and by giving her two months pay in advance. Quite funny and refined as are all Drew comedies.

Mutual Film Corporation.

TOURS AROUND THE WORLD NO. 38 (Gaumont), July 24.—The subjects contained in this number of "Tours Around the World' are Prague, Bohemia, Kairawan, Tunisia, and the Dauphines, France. These subjects are well illustrated and very interesting.

REEL LIFE NO. 65 (Gaumont), July 26.—The subjects contained in this number are "Juvenile Craftsmen," showing children in the millionaire section of Pasadena making toys; "A Dangerous Eagle Hunt"; "Pedigreed Eggs," showing scenes on Madame Schumann-Heink's poultry farm in California; "National Sylvan Theater," showing the opening of this theater at Washington, D. C. Cartoons from "Life" finish the reel.

PRIDE AND THE MAN (American), July 30.—A five-reel production featuring William Russell. In this picture he plays the role of a pugilist, with Francelia Billington playing opposite him. The production is full of interesting action, and is pleasing in outline. It appeals to the sporting blood in most of us. A full review will be found elsewhere.

PIGS AND PEARLS (LaSalle), August 7.—A fairly amusing farce comedy in which a man whose daughter owns a pig as a pet becomes the ideal of a handsome young woman who has seen him push over a tree by sheer physical force. She invites him to her home to a dinner. The daughter and her pig accompanying him, some queer complications occur through which the strong man's hopes of winning the beauty are dashed to earth.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

THE LONG TRAIL (Famous Players), July 23.—A dramatic picture in five reels, with Lou-Tellegen in the leading role, supported by Mary Fuller and a good cast. It is tense, has many beautiful snow pictures with dogs and mountain scenes, and can be recommended to exhibitors. For a longer review see elsewhere in this issue.

MOTOR BOATING (Klever), July 30.—A Victor Moore comedy in which the comedian negotiates for a motor boat to be delivered to him in exchange for his automobile. The automobile happens to be a Ford out of running condition, which he pushes up hill so that it will run down hill to the pier where the "Nifty" is at anchor awaiting his arrival to take possession of it. The game works, and he gets away with the motor boat before the deception is discovered. The disguising of the Ford is a funny bit of business that gets a laugh.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

HEARST-PATHE NEWS NO. 60, July 25.—The news reel shows Horse Racing in New York; I. W. W.'s in New Mexico deported from Bisbee; Zeppelin L-48 destroyed in England; camp of New York State Cadets at Peekskill gathering and threshing seed in world's largest flower garden, and other interesting views.

PHOTOGRAPHING THE MOON (International).—A comprehensive photographic account of the work at the Lick Observatory in California divides the reel with an amusing cartoon by Opper, "The White Hope." Happy Hooligan is the hero.

CAPTAIN KIDDO (Lasalida), August 5.—Little Marie Osborne is the star of this five-part picture, which is admirably adapted to the personality and talents of the youthful actress. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

SOUTHERN COLORADO (Pathe), August 12.—Scenic beauty and industrial features divide the interest in this number of the Combitone series. Fisher Peak, Kit Carson's Monument, Spanish Peaks, the Stonewall country and Savgre de Cristo Mountains are among the beauty spots. The coal and coke industry at Trinidad and the smelters at Pueblo are shown.

THE MAD LOVER (Rapf).—A five-reel production featuring Robert Warwick, assisted by Elaine Hammerstein. In many respects the picture would be termed a good one, although the construction of the story is somewhat at fault. The picture is beautifully set, and is therefore pleasing to the eye. Elaine Hammerstein does admirable work in the feminine lead, and Robert Warwick is finished in style as usual. A full review of the production will be found elsewhere.

Triangle Film Corporation.

AIRED IN COURT, July 1.—A typical Triangle Komedy in which a general mix-up involving a flirtatious husband, his pretty wife, the judge's daughter, and her lover, after a plate throwing episode in a restaurant finally land in the night court over which the girl's father presides. Fairly amusing.

MASTER OF HIS HOME (Triangle), August 12.—A drama of motherhood, with some sensational scenes at the outset and a very happy termination. Well handled, with William Desmond in the title role.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 81 (Universal), July 18.—New York recruits leave for the navy, recruiting work in Chicago, rescuing an injured horse, Elks' convention scenes in Boston, and numerous other features of interest are included in this number.

ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 82 (Universal), July 25.—Demonstrations of a new machine gun designed by Robert Charles Merris lead this. Other subjects touched upon are the Elks' convention at Boston, and recruiting by fireworks celebration in Chicago.

UNIVERSAL CURRENT EVENTS NO. 11, July 28.—Demonstration of a Ford car on forty acres of land, U. S. Torpedo boat building, Fourth of July celebration in Paris, and other interesting and instructive features are included in this.

LIKE BABES IN THE WOOD (Victor), Week of August 6.—A two-reel subject by Karl R. Coolige, featuring Violet MacMillan, Gordon Griffith and Fred Woodward. The latter appears in some of his amusing animal impersonations. The burro is very funny, and the number as a whole will please children immensely. The two children become lost in the woods with the faithful burro. They meet a lion, a bear and a tiger. A good juvenile subject.

O-MY THE TENT MOVER (Joker), Week of August 6.—A comedy subject by Tom Gibson, featuring William Franey, Zasu Pitts and others. Franey appears as a second hand clothing merchant who finds himself in a desert entirely surrounded by camels and Arabs. The situation is amusing, but the plot a little thin. The setting was worth a stronger story, though it is fairly entertaining as it is.

THE LONE SLACKER (Nestor), Week of August 6.—A rural one-reel comedy, with Eddie Lyons as a woman-hater, and Lee Moran as the village heart-breaker and a soda clerk. The story does not hold together well. There are some very funny scenes with an antiquated automobile.

THE VAMP OF THE CAMP (Joker), Week of August 6.—Gale Henry is the vampire. Milt Sims comes to the camp as a tenderfoot. Gale Henry as Little Butterfly boasts that she can vamp him in three days. On the last day she succeeds by stealing for him enough money to save his bungalow from a sheriff's sale, only to find after she has handed over the money that he is Slick Stevens, a confidence man, whose specialty is working women. This is a very funny one-reeler.

THE UNTAMED (Victor), Week of August 6.—A two-reel number by Capt. Leslie T. Peacock, featuring Mary Fuller, William J. Welsh and Johnnie Walker. The plot is conventional in character. It concerns a girl of the words whose father dies leaving her the owner of an illicit still. The appearance of a revenue officer complicates matters, but she saves his life after he is bitten by a rattlesnake and all ends happily. The snakebite feature is well handled.

THE LITTLE FAT RASCAL (L-Ko), Week of August 6.—A two-reel knockabout comedy, featuring Mert Sterling, Phil Dunham and Lucille Hutton. The story concerns a fat girl whose father sends her to a girls' school. Her country lover follows, and enters the school attired in girl's clothng. There is no particular novelty in this number, and the humor is of the rough type. It is all acceptable in its way, but not at all strong. A fair subject.

CAUGHT IN THE WEB (Universal Special), August 6.—No. 7 of "The Gray Ghost" series. The gang is seen bringing its rich haul of loot to the house of mystery in this number, where Hildreth, Morn Light and Young Olmstead are prisoners. Jean, searching for his master, is attacked by gang members. He then enters Morn Light's apartments, where he encounters the Gray Ghost himself. The number does not advance the plot greatly, but is full of interest.

World Pictures.

THE IRON RING (Peerless), August 6.—An excellent cast brings out all the good points in this five-part photoplay. The story is complicated, but much of the material is interesting. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Miscellaneous.

MAZAMAS AND THE THREE SISTERS (Educational Film Corporation).—A beautiful scenic, the work of Robert C. Bruce. Shows a jaunt of the Mazamas, a mountain climbing club, on one of the three peaks of the Cascades known as the Three Sisters; each being over 10,000 feet in height.

THE PLANTER (Manson).—Tyrone Power heads the cast of this ten-part dramatization of the novel by Herman Whitaker. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

PATHE SCHEDULE.

Week of August 12 Offers a Good Number of Strong Features.

GLADYS HULETTE, Pearl White and Ruth Roland are the three stars featured on Pathe's program for the week of August 12. Miss Hulette is starred in "The Streets of Illusion," a five-reel Gold Rooster play produced by Astra under the direction of William Parke, and written by Philip Bartholomae. This is one of the very best Hulette plays, if not the best. The star is supported by a cast not only of unusual size, but also of noteworthy merit. It includes J. H. Gilmour, William Parke, Jr., Richard Warren Cook, Doris Grey, Kathryn Adams, Gerald Badgley, William P. Burt, Logan Caul, William Yearance, William Marion and W. Dudley.

The story tells of the influence of a little girl upon all the kinds and conditions of people who constitute her boarders. Interwoven in the story is a fine love interest which brings to her the happiness that she rightfully deserves.

Pearl White is seen in the sixth episode of "The Fatal Ring" entitled "The Rays of Death," produced by Astra under the direction of George B. Seitz, and written by Fred Jackson and Bertram Milhauser. One of the most diabolical tortures ever recorded in criminal history is vividly shown in this chapter, in which is revealed the secret of the key to world power to use which the violet diamond is necessary.

Ruth Roland is starred in the 14th episode of "The Neglected Wife." The title of this chapter, written by Will M. Ritchey, is entitled "Desperation." This is probably the best episode yet of the serial. In it Kennedy loses money through stock speculation, but Mary throws her own fortune into the balance and saves him. She still loves her husband. Will she go back to him or not?

The nineteenth release of the "Know America" combitone scenics is "Southern Colorado." This release Colorado, noted for the striking magnificence of its scenery, is shown in all its beauty.

International cartoon and scenic, split reel and Hearst-Pathe News No. 66 and No. 67 complete the program.

"HELL'S BELLES" (Mutual).

"Hell's Belles," new Mutual special for immediate release—a twenty-minute review of the dress parade and evolutions of the Forty-eighth Highlanders, crack Canadian regiment that fought at Vimy Ridge—constitutes one of the principal picture news features of recent issue.

The famous regiment appeared in Grant Park, Chicago, Monday morning and the Mutual's five hundred-foot picture was screened the same evening.

"Hell's Belles" was the name given the Forty-eighth by Prince Rupprecht of Bavaria, after the Scots had cut up his troops in disgraceful fashion during the fighting along the Somme and in a finish battle with the bayonet at Laangemarck, during which the Forty-eighth lost half its strength, but wiped out three times their number of the enemy. The regiment has been again recruited in Canada to nearly its full strength and is shortly to return to France.

The picture shows Colonel J. S. Dennis and his staff receiving American army and navy officials and prominent Chicagoans, the salute to the United States Naval Reserves, arriving to act as escort; the flag of the Seventy-first New York Regiment being carried across the continent by the visitors; the march of the Forty-eighth down Michigan boulevard escorted by mounted police and naval reserves, and close-ups of the principal officers, Lt. Col. Denis, Lt. Col. C. V. Darling, Lieut. Aleck Sinclair, who was badly wounded at St. Julien, and other interesting personage.

"THE HOSTAGE" A NEW REID PICTURE.

"The Hostage," a story of modern Europe, written by the well-known authoress, Beulah Marie Dix, is to be the first production in which Wallace Reid will star under the new Paramount selective "star series" booking plan. His leading woman is Dorothy Abril.

ENTERTAINING FLYING PICTURES COMING.

Pell Mitchell, editor of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly, has taken some entertaining pictures of the Government's aviators at work at their training school at Mineola, L. I. These have been submitted to the Government for censoring, and immediately upon passing the censor will be included as an important section of the Gaumont news reel.

Sherman's Activities

Many State Right Deals Negotiated at the Chicago Convention.

WITH the trade showing staged at Chicago serving as an impetus in the stimulation of the state rights and territorial sale of George Loane Tucker's film masterpiece "I Believe," members of the Sherman Pictures Corporation force are busily engaged negotiating for the sale of many sections of the United States and Canada.

Frank Gerston has purchased outright the entire territory of northern New Jersey and he has arranged a special trade showing for Newark next week. A showing before the members of the board of review of New Jersey also has been planned by Mr. Gerston, and it is his intention to book the Tucker masterpiece for dates during late August.

Harry A. Sherman, president of the Sherman Pictures Corporation, has returned from a trip which followed the closing of the Chicago convention and which included Minneapolis, St. Paul, Duluth, Des Moines, Indianapolis and Detroit. Immediately upon his arrival in New York, Mr. Sherman started operations for the sale of the Western Canada rights to a Vancouver, B. C., corporation, and he also has opened negotiations for the sale of territorial rights comprising the states of Minnesota, Iowa, North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana and Wisconsin.

"The Land of the Rising Sun," another feature being handled through the medium of the Sherman Pictures Corporation sales department, also is being disposed of to state rights purchasers, and this serial, which deals directly with the daily life and wonderful scenery in Japan, will be available after August 1. "The Land of the Rising Sun" is a serial of ten reels, which may be run in five showings, two reels to the week, or extended over a period of ten weeks with the exhibition of a reel each week.

A. J. Bimberg, treasurer of the Popular Pictures Corporation of 218 West Forty-second street, has announced the sale of territorial rights to the Jack Gorman cinema feature, "Corruption."

Mr. Bimberg is personally handling the sale of territorial rights to "Corruption," and during the past week he disposed of the entire European rights as well as Greater New York and the New Jersey territories. A. E. Ward is the purchaser of the European rights, and it is the intention of the buyer to exploit the sensational masterpiece abroad early in September.

J. Massel has purchased the New Jersey rights to the picture, while the Rosetwig Film Corporation of New York has taken over the Greater New York rights. Both the Rosetwig company and the New Jersey buyer are planning an early fall campaign of "Corruption." State rights buyers from Middle-West and Far Western districts are negotiating with Mr. Bimberg for other territories, and in the opinion of the New York man the entire rights will have been disposed of before October 1 of the current year.

NEW TERRY BURLESQUE ENTITLED "HIS TRAIL."

Paul Terry, the famous cartoonist and creator of the Terry Feature Burlesques, which are a series of animated cartoon pictures, burlesquing the big features of the day, has just completed his fourth burlesque of the series, namely, "His Trial." "His Trial" is supposed to be a burlesque of "On Trial," the famous play of which a film adaptation has been made. The picture had its first showing last Thursday in the offices of the A. Kay Company, and those who saw the cartoon picture express themselves as highly pleased with it. No doubt it will be just as successful as the former Terry Feature Burlesques, which have already established themselves as a most important factor on the exhibitor's program.

The story of "His Trial" is a rather novel one, and although it does not hold very closely to the film version or play, the interest is carried throughout. Paul Terry's character creation, Farmer Alfalfa, is the star of "His Trial," and he certainly does cause merriment and delight as he romps across the screen.

LOUIS MAYER TAKES "HER CONDONED SIN."

H. H. Bruenner, treasurer of the Biograph Company, while in Chicago during the film men's big week, disposed of the New England rights to "Her Condoned Sin," the six-part Griffith subject, to Louis Mayer of Boston.

"MOTHER O' MINE" BLUEBIRD EXTRAORDINARY.

Following the special release of "The Eagle's Wings" and "Hell Morgan's Girl," distributed on state rights lines, Bluebird branch managers will start circulating "Mother o' Mine" as a Bluebird Extraordinary on Labor Day, Sept. 2. This feature was produced by Rupert Julian from Elliott J. Clawson's story, and Mr. Julian will co-star with Ruth Clifford, a featured player being Ruby La Fayette, who will have the mother role.

Scene from "Mother o' Mine" (Bluebird).

The same branches that serve exhibitors with the regular Bluebird program features will distribute "Mother o' Mine," following the same general ideas adopted by state rights buyers in disposing of their purchases. Exhibitors who use the regular Bluebird service will have first call on the special feature, as they did in the case of "The Eagle's Wings" and "Hell Morgan's Girl."

Bluebird was prompted to make the Rupert Julian production an "Extraordinary" because of the high artistic merits of the feature. Mr. Julian and Miss Clifford will be recalled as co-stars in "A Kentucky Cinderella," and to the merits shown in that feature have been added the work of Ruby La Fayette, a veteran actress, who gets her first screen introduction as a mother.

Elsie Jane Wilson ad E. A. Warren will carry roles in character comedy that promise to further enhance the effectiveness of the result. The artistic merits of "Mother o' Mine" will make up for the lack of sensations and excitement that attend so many photoplays, for the feature will tell a simple and human story made effective by the work of the principals.

"GARDEN OF ALLAH" AT CHICAGO.

Selig's "The Garden of Allah" opened on Sunday, July 22, in the Colonial theater, Chicago, to record-breaking crowds. The Chicago premiere was given by the Edmund M. Allen Film Corp., owners of the rights to Illinois and other states. The "Loop" theater was crowded to the doors all day. Despite the hot wave, it is asserted that all recent attendance records for productions at this theater were broken.

CANADIAN RIGHTS FOR "THE BARRIER" SOLD.

The Barrier (Canada) Syndicate, of which H. B. Wright, of Calgary, a well-known film and theater man of Western Canada, is president and general manager, have purchased the Canadian rights for the Rex Beach film, "The Barrier," from Lewis J. Selznick, who controls the world rights.

"The Barrier" will be released to Canadian exhibitors early in September. Mr. Wright was in New York last week conferring with the publicity department of the Selznick Enterprises regarding the immense publicity campaign that will be launched in Canada. He predicts that "The Barrier" will be the season's biggest success in Canada. The Superfeatures, Limited, with head office in Toronto, will handle the distribution for Eastern Canada, while the National Film Service, Limited, will handle the Western end.

Beatriz Michelena Heads Own Company

"The Dead Line," a Story of the Early West to be Her First State Rights Feature.

Beatriz Michelena, celebrated prima donna-motion picture actress, has just announced that she, accompanied by a notable cast, has invaded Boulder Creek, in the Santa Cruz mountains, and is now producing for state rights distribution an elaborate Western film drama to be entitled "The Dead Line."

Miss Michelena describes this story as a stirring drama of the primitive West, which is in many respects reminiscent of her "Salomy Jane." The story was written especially for her by Earle Snell, who has won considerable recognition through his short story and magazine work, and has been closely associated with Miss Michelena during her entire motion picture career, having studied her work in various roles and types. As a result, so she declares, he has evolved in "The Dead Line" a character that is exactly suited to her individual temperament and sympathies as well as a story of unusual originality and magnitude.

Scene from "The Dead Line."

A promised feature of the production will be its wealth of out of doors settings and early Western atmosphere. In this particular it is expected to rival "Salomy Jane," which like the present production, was photographed largely in the Santa Cruz mountains, which constitute the very heart of California's scenic wonderland.

The picture is being produced under the direction of George E. Middleton. William Pike, who for the past two years has been Miss Michelena's leading man, is playing opposite her in "The Dead Line," while Albert Morrison and Clarence Arper, who have been with Miss Michelena in most of her past productions, are playing roles of first importance in the present cast. In fact, the entire organization formerly associated with Miss Michelena, while with the California Motion Picture Corporation, has followed her to Boulder Creek. She plans on giving from three to four months to the making of the production.

As an adjunct to the natural scenery of the Santa Cruz section, Miss Michelena has had built specially for the picture a log cabin village of a score or more buildings. Beside an abundance of dwellings for the townfolk that the scenario calls for, there is an adequacy of saloons, grocery stores, hotels, post and express offices and other business houses for the "make believe" community. The squat, haphazard village, with its one long street flanked by hitching posts, watering troughs and rickety board sidewalks, is reported rich in the atmosphere of early California.

STANDARD FILM TO ISSUE HOUSE ORGAN.

R. C. Cropper, president of the Standard Film Corporation, distributors of Art Dramas and the Billy West comedies in the Middle West, announced this week that, in response to numerous requests received from exhibitors, the organization would issue a monthly house organ. The name of this publication will be "Fax," and its object will be to help the exhibitor to do a bigger business with Art Dramas and with the Billy West comedies.

Departments of special interest have been provided, such as "The Operator's Arc," "Ideas and Advertising" and a department for the exchange of ideas between exhibitors, which will also be a department of questions and answers. No effort will be spared by the editor, Phil L. Ryan, the sales and advertising manager of the Standard, to make the house organ really helpful and interesting to the exhibitor right from the start. He has sent out a request that exhibitors co-operate with him in getting out each issue of the publication by contributing their opinions as to what they find of interest.

SUCCESS OF "A MORMON MAID" IN AUSTRALIA.

The reception that Australia has given "A Mormon Maid" has been a surprise to everyone concerned in the exploitation of this feature. To date five prints have been working continuously in the Antipodes, and it is very likely that a sixth print will be necessary to take care of the overwhelming demand for bookings. It is quite likely that the news of the popularity of "The Mormon Maid" in Australia has reached London, as three separate cable offers nave just been received from prominent London buyers, one of whom made an offer of $15,000 for the English rights. Instead of accepting any of these offers now, it is proposed to send a special representative to London at the earliest possible moment and screen the picture for a number of buyers who have written and cabled that they were interested in the picture.

NEW MASTER DRAMA OFFICE FOR COAST.

H. O. Martin will leave for the West Saturday, going directly through to San Francisco, where he will establish offices for the handling of the Master Drama Features' sensational picture, "Who's Your Neighbor?" Mr. Martin, in conjunction with Franklin E. Backer, bought the state rights for Colorado, California, Nevada, Utah, Arizona, New Mexico, Oregon, Washington, Montana, Idaho and Wyoming. He is well informed regarding the territory, as he was the Western representative of Clune's "Ramona" and "The Eyes of the World."

GOLDBURG RETURNS FROM TRANSCONTINENTAL TOUR.

Jesse J. Goldburg, who has completed his special engagement as exploitation and service manager of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, returned to New York last Friday with a wealth of data and information concerning the state rights market in the United States, as well as data concerning the wants of exhibitors and exchangemen with respect to the character of productions and advertising and exploitation necessities.

MUTT AND JEFF AT THE RIALTO.

Arrangements have been completed for the new Mutt and Jeff animated cartoons to be shown daily at the Rialto, commencing this week. Mutt and Jeff are sure some devils in their own home town. Not content with the handsome reception accorded them daily at the Strand theater, they have now, with their amusing whimsicalities, laid siege to the Rialto and captured it by storm. And news comes that they are capturing strongholds all over the country with gas attacks—laughing gas.

A CORRECTION.

"The Garden of Allah" territorial rights for the states of Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota are controlled by John Elliott, 507 Produce Exchange, Minneapolis, Minn. Through an error in a recent advertisement this territory was announced as being controlled by others.

"THE GENIUS" (King Bee).

In "The Genius," King-Bee's seventh comedy, which is on the point of being released, Billy West, the star, has a part which perhaps offers him greater scope for the display of his wonderfully versatile powers as a comedian than any that he has so far presented. His abilities as an inventor are supplemented by an unfortunate tenderheartedness which leads him into many matrimonial misadventures. He finds himself obliged for the time being to assume the paternity of a child which is not his, and the equivocal situations in which this circumstance betrays him are full of humor and bustling mirth.

Scene from "The Genius" (King Bee).

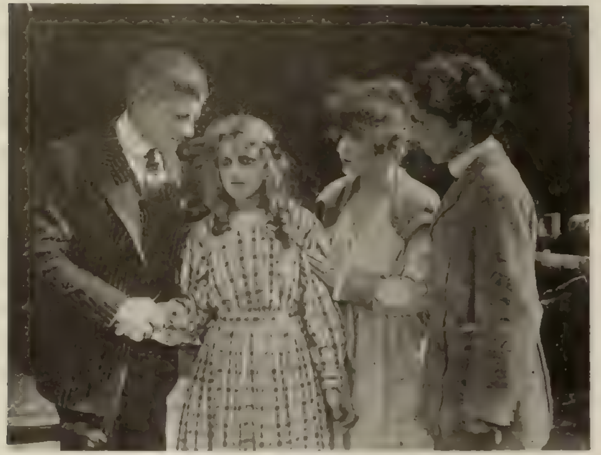
As usual in King-Bee comedies the supporting cast is of the strongest, and the direction in the hands of Arvid E. Gillstrom is of the cleverest.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

Attractive Bluebirds Coming

Will Give Exhibitors Good Material to Keep Opposition Hustling.

PROVISION has been made by Bluebird for a series of releases that will give exhibitors good material with which to keep the "opposition" hustling on "Bluebird Day" throughout the country. With the addition of Mae Murray to the list of Bluebird stars, and the promise of other names to be added in the near future, there will still be the other popular stars remaining in the flock to be "cashed in" on their popularity.



Scene from "The Charmer" (Bluebird).

Miss Murray and her director, Robert Leonard, reached Bluebird's West coast studios during the past week and the supporting company is now being assembled. The first subject Mr. Leonard will direct with Miss Murray as the star has not been definitely selected, but will shortly be announced. Meanwhile exhibitors may prepare for the arrival of the following features:

Dorothy Phillips, in "Triumph," produced by Joseph De Grasse from Samuel Hopkins Adams' magazine story, and "Bondage," directed by Ida May Park, will be among the September and October attractions. Ella Hall, announced for August 27 in "The Charmer," will be seen a little later in "Bitter Sweet," a feature produced by Harry Solter, who has succeeded Jack Conway as Miss Hall's director.

Following "Mother o' Mine," to be released as a "Bluebird Extraordinary," on state rights lines, September 3, Rupert Julian and Ruth Clifford will next be jointly starred in "The Face of Prentice Teller"—both features directed by Mr. Julian from stories by Elliott J. Clawson, of Bluebird's writing staff.

Lynn F. Reynolds' production of Alice Heagan Rice's novel, "Mr. Opp," is scheduled for release August 20, with Arthur Hoyt and Neva Gerber starring and George Hernandez featured in the support. Early in September there will be a Franklyn Farnum-Brownie Vernon mystery comedy, created by Elmer Clifton, their new director.

"MAKE 'EM ROAR" PHRASE MAY REFER TO COMEDIES.

The rumor is afloat in film circles that the "Make 'Em Roar" phrase may, after all, only turn out to be the slogan of a certain comedy producing concern which is keeping its identity in the dark so as to hold those who have become interested in the phrase at bay—at least for the present until further announcements are made. While this rumor remains unconfirmed, there is no doubt but that it may be true. Only the other day a man prominent in the production of comedies was heard to make the remark that "Make 'Em Roar" undoubtedly meant what a certain brand of comedies to be released shortly would do. There is enough sense in this statement to warrant its being true, and yet there is the possibility that it may be wrong, since no word has been received at these offices from any company making or distributing comedies that gave any hint about the "Make 'Em Roar" phrase as a slogan.

"MAN WITHOUT A COUNTRY" (Thanhouser).

"The Man Without a Country" will appear upon the screen shortly, the Thanhouser Film Corporation having just completed a present-day multiple-reel feature, based upon Edward Everett Hale's immortal story. Florence La Badie is featured in the production, in the role of a patriotic American girl, while H. E. Herbert, a well-known Broadway actor, plays Lieut. Nolan, the unfortunate army officer, whose later years are spent as a prisoner on a naval ship. Ernest Warde directed "The Man Without a Country," which will have its initial showing within the next few weeks.

TWO SELIG G. F. RELEASES.

"The Smoldering Spark" is the title of the Selig two-reel drama released in General Film service on Monday, July 30. Colin Campbell directed the drama from the story by Emmet Campbell Hall. Not only is the production noteworthy for direction and authorship, but the play also features Thomas Santschi and Bessie Eyton.

On Saturday, August 4, the Selig company announces the release of "The Love of Madge O'Mara" in General Film service. This drama in one reel was written by Lanier Bartlett and directed by Colin Campbell. Bessie Eyton stars in this most unusual story of a woman's love and hate.

"FOLLOW THE GIRL" (Butterfly).

Ruth Stonehouse and Roy Stewart are the featured players of "Follow the Girl," the Butterfly picture scheduled for release August 5. Written by Fred Myton and directed by L. W. Chaudet, the story deals with the adventures that befall an orphaned Swedish girl, Hilda Swanson, whose dreams of the wonderful attractions of America are suddenly answered one day when the agent of a Swedish-American colonization company agrees to furnish her transportation to this country for a nominal sum.

On the steamer Hilda becomes acquainted with Olaf, a youthful fellow countryman, as well as a beautiful lady, who is in reality the secret agent of one of the foreign governments. In danger of being searched herself, the secret agent "plants" the more important of her documents in the hem of Hilda's skirt one night, planning to have a confederate meet the girl in America and recover the notes. Hilda and Olaf unconsciously evade the person detailed to shadow them, however, and are sent West by the representatives of the colonization company. Missing their train at a stop-over in the Southwestern cattle country, they are taken in by Larry O'Keefe, a big-hearted ranch owner. Hilda thinks that she has found an ideal haven, working amid pleasant surroundings for a generous employer, but the confederates of the secret agent trace her to the ranch. Before she realizes it she becomes entangled in a web of events that threaten the peace of the entire country. Claire DuBrey and Jack Dill are prominent in the support of Ruth Stonehouse and Roy Stewart. Many striking scenes of the big cattle ranches are shown.

Coming Art Dramas Rich in Variety

Exhibitors Can Be Sure of Having Differentiated Types of Pictures in Summer and Fall.

ADVANCE notices on Art Dramas for the months of August and September promise much in the way of variety of releases. No two productions are of the same type, and exhibitors using the program regularly can be sure of showing their patrons something totally unique each week.

In "Eye of Envy," for instance, which is scheduled for release in the near future, patrons will see a dramatic allegory, something which has never before been done on the screen, although on the spoken stage the type has attracted considerable popularity. Possessing all the pictorial and symbolic beauty of an allegory, with the intensity and realism of a drama, this Horsley-Art Drama marks a step in the development of the motion picture.

In this production audiences will have an opportunity to see Crane Wilbur, the world-renowned star, in a role especially written for him, and in which his versatility is displayed to an unusual extent. Harrish Ingraham, who directed "Eye of Envy," is said to have made of it a masterpiece, both as to pictorial beauty and dramatic effect. It is taken from the story by J. Francis Dunbar.

Immediately following "Eye of Envy" will be the U. S. Amusement-Art Drama, "Think It Over," which is best described as an amazing drama. Details of this production given in another column of this issue, prove it to be exceptional in conception, and built up out of a story which is filled with unconventional situations and sprightly humor. Catherine Calvert and Richard Tucker are starred in this, which was written by Herbert Blache, who also directed it.

A comedy-drama of unusual appeal follows this. "The Little Samaritan" is its title, and it proceeds from the Erbograph studios. Marian Swayne, who has won thousands of admirers for her work in her previous Art Dramas, "Little Miss Fortune" and "The Road Between," is starred. The story of "The Little Samaritan" was written by the Reverend Clarence J. Harris, and like all of his scripts abounds in heart interest and wholesome comedy. Joseph Levering is the director of this, which is as different in theme and treatment from the two previously-mentioned as is possible to conceive.

"Behind the Mask," the Apollo picture in which Alma Hanlon makes her next Art Dramas appearance, is, as its title would indicate, a strong drama of a serious nature, affording a vivid contrast to its predecessors. This is from the story by Charles Dazey, adapted by Frederick Rath. In it Miss Hanlon has the role of a girl whose father's life has been ruined by an enemy, and who takes it upon herself to gain revenge. The novelty of the plot comes in the form which her revenge takes, and the consequences which follow upon her daring act.

As far as is known, the next Art Drama after this will be the Van Dyke "Peg o' the Sea," in which Jean Sothern is starred. This, from the story by Winifred Dunn, a young woman who has in a short time advanced to the rank of screen writers, is a play in which the star is given the fullest opportunity to be both charming and expressive. She plays the role of a girl in a seacoast town, daughter of a fisherman. When her father is ill, she takes charge of his men and boats, which she handles with the skill of an old salt. It is from this aptitude that she is given the nickname which forms the title of the picture.

Eugene Nowland directed this, and a competent cast was selected for the supporting roles. Its originality of theme and setting make it a photodrama of distinction, and the producers are confident that it will be a worthy addition to the imposing list of productions now completed for future release.

TIMELY MILITARY SCENES IN UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY.

Scenes incident to the war predominate in the 82d issue of the Universal Animated Weekly just released.

Naval recruits are shown at their training station near San Francisco going through the various tactics that will fit them to be regular war dogs within a few months. A sham battle on Goat Island in which the boys take part adds dramatic punch to the scenes.

Canadian veterans, home from the trenches, are pictured on a visit to a moving picture theater in Montreal, where the feature of the day is the recent Animated Weekly special devoted to General Pershing's reception in France.

Other scenes are devoted to the construction of U. S. cantonments at Yaphank, Long Island, where 40,000 men will be prepared at a time for field service; the recent big recruiting rally in Brooklyn led by Sergt. Richard Fitzgerald of the Canadian Highlanders and an unusually effective series of pictures showing a group of young cadets from St. Agnes Convent going through a maze of military convolutions with the precision and sang froid of grizzled veterans. Hy Mayer contributes his usual timely cartoon features.

"SOULS IN PAWN" (Mutual).

Gail Kane as Liane Dore, the beautiful young Frenchwoman who has sworn to avenge the murder of her husband, mysteriously slain at the door of his palatial home, who becomes a spy in behalf of the German von Kondemarck on his assertion that he will reveal to her the murderer of her child's father, is wonderfully effective in her new Mutual-American production, "Souls in Pawn," released by Mutual August 6.

"Souls in Pawn" is one of the strongest photodramas produced in the United States since the beginning of the war. It has a most brilliantly constructed war plot based on a story by Julius Grinnell Furthmann. The play is superbly directed by Henry King.

Scene from "Souls in Pawn" (Mutual).

The story involves a thrilling series of adventures which display the activity of the German spy system in Paris and France generally, in the period immediately preceding and following the outbreak of war.

Included in the cast are Robert Klein, a well-known character actor with experience on the French stage; Douglas MacLean, who was with Maude Adams in "Peter Pan"; Edward Peil, who was formerly with Modjeska, and Ashton Dearholt. The new play is a love story first and war story second, but in both its aspects it is fascinating.

"BABBLING TONGUES" (Ivan).

"Set society to glancing slyly at a man and a woman whose relationship to each other is really innocent. There is started the impalpable power of suggestive force of whispered opinion, rising into a whirlwind of babbling tongues which will blow its victims giddily into the arms of an awful tragedy."

The above paragraph is the basic argument of the scenario prepared by the combined efforts of William Humphrey and George Edwards Hall. It is very comprehensive, and unquestionably has dramatic possibilities that reach climactic heights—and if a consecutive continuity of accumulating force with culminating power is pictorially presented (and such is the claim of the producers), "Babbling Tongues" should prove one of the foremost pictures presented to the public.

The all star cast—composed of James Morrison, Grace Valentine, Arthur Donaldson, in the leading parts, and such well-known artists as Paul Capellani, Louise Beaudet, Carolyn Birch and Gladden James in support—needs no introduction. They are all prominently fixed in the constellation of the theatrical sky. Their gathering in one production under the masterful direction of William Humphrey promises the finished artistry necessary for so pretentious a theme.

MERIT FILM EXPANDS.

The scope of the operations of the Merit Film Corporation for the coming year will be greatly enlarged. By special arrangement I. E. Chadwick, general manager of the Ivan Film Productions, will supervise the management of the exchange, which will be conducted by Mr. Willis, who for some time has been the manager of the Boston branch of the Merit Film Company.

The fact that Mr. Chadwick is stepping to closer relations with the exchange is in itself a guarantee that the exhibitors in the territory controlled by the Merit Film Corporation will get the progressive and square deal that Mr. Chadwick is known for in the business and that up to date business necessitates.

New Universal Releases

Twenty-three Reels of Laughter, Drama and News Offer Fans Wide Choice.

VARIETY is the distinguishing feature of the Universal releases for the week of August 6. Monday will be Butterfly day, as usual, signalized by the release of "Follow the Girl," a strong Western play, featuring Ruth Stonehouse and Roy Stewart. In addition, several comedies, a Western thriller with Harry Carey in the star role, three big news reels and the latest installment of "The Gray Ghost," the mystery serial that is arousing so much interest, will be released.

"The Soul Herder," a Bison drama of the old frontier, is the offering for Tuesday, August 7. Harry Carey, a player who has won a loyal following by his excellent interpretation of Western characters, will have the leading role. The story was written by George Hively and has been produced by Jack Ford with much realistic effect. It concerns the regeneration of a reckless knight of the plains, who, through force of circumstances, is forced to protect and later provide for two homeless children. At the same time he is obliged to impersonate a parson, and in this guise puts over one of the most effective "sermons" ever heard in the lawless hamlet of Buckhorn.

"The Love Slacker," a Nestor comedy featuring Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, will be shown on the same date. This three hundred and thirty-three-yard dash of fun was written by F. A. Palmer and produced by Roy Clements. It depicts the misadventures of a would-be woman-hater, who finds it impossible to evade the blandishments of the fair ones, despite his most heroic efforts.

J. G. Blystone and Vin Moore, who are jointly responsible for the creation of the two-reel L-Ko comedy, "The Little Fat Rascal," which heads the releases for Wednesday, August 8, have succeeded in bringing the laughter out of a series of incidents that might have seemed unpromising in less skillful hands. Merta Sterling, Phil Dunham, Al Gerard, Lucille Hutton and Charles Inslee take part in this hilarious tale of the struggle of the corn-fed country hero and the darkly-disguised villain for the hand and fortune of Saucy Mert. Number 84 of the Animated Weekly will be issued on the same date, containing all the late news incidents suitable for screen representation.

Mary Fuller will be the star of the dramatic feature for Thursday, August 9. This story, which is entitled "The Untamed," was written by Capt. Leslie Peacocke and directed by Lucius Henderson. It tells of the romance that comes into the life of a daughter of a Southern moonshiner who finds herself thrown into contact with a young revenue officer. Events cause the course of the girl's love to run far from smoothly. Her father is killed in a raid, but the undaunted daughter of the Blue Ridge continues to run the still alone. Striking scenery and the acting of Miss Fuller give this feature unusual charm.

"O-My the Tent Mover," a Joker comedy featuring William Franey, is scheduled for release with "The Untamed." A brief and pungent burlesque of "Omar the Tentmaker," this story of the misadventures that befall one Launcelot Briggs, an old-clothes dealer who is lost on the desert and rescued by a Sheik. At first the members of the caravan demand that Briggs be killed for their amusement, but the Sheik agrees to spare the clothes dealer's life if he will cause the big chief's frame to shake with laughter. As an additional reward for performing this miracle, Briggs is to receive Saharah Sarah, the Sheik's daughter. In going through a series of wild antics, the clothes dealer finally causes the leader of the Bedouins to roar with a heartiness that threatens the loss of his false teeth. E. M. McCall wrote the story, which has been produced by W. W. Beaudine. William Franey is supported by Lillian Peacock, Za Su Pitts and Milburn Moranti

"Like Babes in the Wood," a Victor two-reel comedy of exceptional novelty, featuring Violet MacMillan and Fred Woodward, will be released on Friday, August 10. This is a drama story in which the imaginative adventures of two children are depicted with appealing realism. Violet and her brother Billie, played by Gordon Griffin, are seated on a bear-skin rug before the fire, worn out with a day's play, when a knock comes at the door. A gypsy is outside, and in return for the pennies in Violet's bank, Violet tests out the ring, and she gives the children a wishing-ring. Immediately things begin to happen. The bear skin rug becomes alive and in terror the children flee out into the woods, where other startling events take place before they finally wake up and find it was all a dream. On the same day the 31st issue of the Universal Screen Magazine will make its appearance, filled with news and special features.

Besides a Joker comedy featuring Gale Henry, and entitled "The Vamp of the Camp," there will be a Powers humorous travelogue entitled "Seeing Ceylon with Hy. Mayer," released Saturday, August 11, together with the 13th number of Universal Current Events.

The seventh episode of "The Gray Ghost," the mystery serial featuring Priscilla Dean, Eddie Polo and Harry Carter, released during the week, will be entitled "Caught in the Web."

MISS PICKFORD COMPLETES "REBECCA."

The last foot of film rolled through the camera a few days ago in the making of the new Mary Pickford-Artcraft release "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm." Taking into account the star herself, the story, its adaptation and its direction, there seems no reason to doubt the expectation of all connected with the production that it will take rank as one of Mary Pickford's greatest artistic successes.

Mrs. Wiggin's story, published in October, 1903, attained a sale of 337,000 copies in seven years. The play, "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," in which Mrs. Wiggin and Charlotte Thompson collaborated, was one of the big successes of its season.

GENERAL PERSHING AT FRENCH AVIATION FIELD.

Pictures from France form an important section of the Gaumont company's Mutual Weekly No. 135. First in interest, perhaps, is the visit of General Pershing to a French aviation field. As the American commander will have his own aviation service as soon as he takes over a section of the French front, Americans will be interested in seeing the home of the fliers after which the American flying squadron will model its own quarters. The Mutual Weekly is still showing pictures of the enthusiasm with which Paris received the American troops on Independence Day. Those in this issue are supplemntd by pictures of the rise of an observation balloon just back of the trenches. A motion picture camera in one car was trained upon the observer in the other car under the balloon, and spectators sitting in the theater can see just how the observer works in spotting machinery and movements of enemy troops.

Two cabinet members are pictures in this issue of the Mutual Weekly. Secretary Baker is seen reviewing troops bound for France, and Secretary McAdoo is seen signing the war loan which places three million dollars at the disposal of the Serbian Government. Another development growing out of the war is the employment of women at the Bush Terminal, Brooklyn, N. Y., to do work which formerly was performed by men. There are pictures of women engaged in trucking and working about freight trains.

The suffragists who were released from association with vulgar criminals by Presidential clemency are shown in this issue of the Mutual Weekly. Other pictures include a yacht race on San Francisco bay and the dynamited pipe line at Los Angeles.

"A DOG IN THE MANGER" (Selig).

One of Charles Hoyt's very best comedies, "A Dog in the Manger," will be the Selig release in K-E-S-E service Monday, August 6. It is a two-reel farce and, according to the reviewers, is one of the best of the Selig-Hoyt comedies yet released.

The comedy company which has contributed so much to the success of the Selig-Hoyt comedies enact "A Dog in the Manger." The cast includes Wm. Fables as A. Jackson Bright; James Harris is Colin Early, his partner; Amy Dennis as Gay Somers, the landlord's daughter; Edgar Murray, Sr., as Boniface Somers, the landlord, and Fred Eckhart as Mr. Crump, a star boarder. J. A. Richmond directed the comedy.

The plot concerns two inventors who come to grief when their bogus sausage machine goes to pieces, and they only escape from pursuing policemen by a very close margin. The two arrive at a hotel where all employees have gone on strike. Both fall in love with the landlord's daughter. Mr. Grump, the star boarded, has the gout and his ailment is not relieved any when the hotel strike-breakers wait upon him. He rides in his invalid chair out of the hotel and down the walk. Fearing the loss of his star boarder, the landlord orders a pursuit. The star boarder's chair never stops till it plunges into the lake. Bright and Early, strike-breakers, dive in after the star boarder, who failed to hold his breath as instructed.

There is a series of side-splitting episodes, good photography, and the Selig company promises a laugh in almost every inch of film.

HART'S FIRST ARTCRAFT OF NEW TYPE.

The past week has been a very busy one for Thomas H. Ince and William S. Hart, who accompanied Ince into the Artcraft fold. The name of the first picture is not yet announced, but it is said to be a story of an entirely different type from anything in which Hart has recently appeared. C. Gardner Sullivan, who has provided the gun-fighting star with so many of his best-known vehicles, is the author of the piece. Production is expected to begin in the near future.

ANOTHER HARRIS STORY FOR MARIAN SWAYNE.

Announcement came from the Erbograph Company this week that a story by the Rev. Clarence J. Harris had been selected as the next vehicle in which Marian Swayne will be starred on Art Dramas Program.

The title of this is "The Little Samaritan." It was directed by Joseph Levering, who won so much praise through his previous production with Miss Swayne, notably "Little Miss Fortune" and "The Road Between." A notable cast of popular picture players enacts the supplementary roles.

Mutual Fall Releases

Many Productions Now Under Way for the Early Autumn Schedule.

MUTUAL stars are at work at the studios on nearly a score of five-reel feature productions for release early in the fall on the Mutual schedule. The list includes productions in which the following stars of stellar importance will appear: Mary Miles Minter, William Russell, Gail Kane, Juliette Day, Margarita Fischer, Edna Goodrich, Ann Murdock, Julia Sanderson, Olive Tell, Charles Chaplin.

Miss Minter, whose "Melissa of the Hills" has just been released, has virtually completed "Charity Castle," the first of her productions under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham. Her next will be "Call to Arms."

William Russell has completed "Sands of Sacrifice," and has started work on "The Sea Master," in which his nautical role gives him a chance to be an entirely different kind of hero. Both productions are under the direction of Edward S. Sloman, who has supervised the recent Russell successes, the last of which to be released was "Pride and the Man."

Miss Juliette Day, the new addition to the Mutual-American studio forces, has almost completed "Betty and the Buccaneers" and "The Rainbow Girl" has been selected for her second picture. Miss Day is under the direction of Rollin S. Sturgeon, who formerly directed Miss Gail Kane.

"The Unafraid" will be Miss Gail Kane's next production following "Souls in Pawn," scheduled for release August 6. "The Unafraid" was originally known under the working title of "For the Family Name." Henry King, who directed Miss Kane in "The Upper Crust," has had charge of the production of both "Souls in Pawn" and "The Unafraid." "Southern Pride" will follow.

At the Empire studios in Glendale, L. I., Miss Ann Murdock is at work on "The Imposter." "The Adventure" and "Outcast" have been completed.

Edna Goodrich is producing "A Daughter of Maryland," upon the completion of which it will be released with "Reputation" and "Queen X," productions already finished by the celebrated stage star for release through the Mutual Film Corporation.

Julia Sanderson is at work on "The Runaways," which is nearly completed, and a second production has virtually been decided upon for her. Olive Tell has started her first production at the Empire studios, but thus far the title has not been announced. Miss Tell is the latest of the Frohman stars to come under the Mutual banner.

It was agreed when the project of presenting Frohman's stars in pictures was launched, by John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, and Alf Hayman representing the Frohman interests, that there would be no releases until three subjects had been completed by the stars.

Jackie Saunders has completed "Bab, the Fixer," the sixth of her star productions for Mutual, and has left the Horkheimer studios for Honolulu, where she is spending an extended vacation. "Bab, the Fixer" is set for release August 13.

Miss Margarita Fisher has been recuperating at San Diego from a serious illness and has been working slowly on her forthcoming production, "The Girl Who Couldn't Grow Up," under the direction of her husband, Harry Pollard. Care has been taken not to overtax her strength and for that reason the production of the forthcoming release has been delayed. It will likely be on the Mutual schedule for early fall release.

Charles Chaplin is producing the twelfth of his Mutual specials at the Lone Star studio near Los Angeles. It will follow "The Immigrant," which was released June 18. Chaplin has taken nearly four months to complete his recent comedies so that the date of release of the twelfth is speculative. The title of the production has not been selected by Mr. Chaplin, and probably will not be until it is completed.

METRO STUDIO IN HOLLYWOOD ENLARGED.

Three acres of ground have been added to the Metro studio at Hollywood, California. The additional space was acquired when Director Fred B. Balshofer discovered that to properly stage the forthcoming Metro wonderplay de luxe "Paradise Garden," he would have to have more stage and studio room. "Paradise Garden" is to be a seven-reel Metro special production. It is an adaptation of the popular novel from the pen of George Gibbs and will have as its star the capable and versatile Harold Lockwood.

Close estimates place the cost of this production at not less than $100,000, and it will require months to complete it. Recently Harold Lockwood has been seen in all sorts of roles, from the fantastic light comedy, "The Haunted Pajamas," to the athletic and virile role he portrayed in "Under Handicap." In the new and bigger production Mr. Lockwood will be seen in the role of a society man.

TRIANGLE TO REISSUE HART AND FAIRBANKS PLAYS SEPT. 1ST.

On September 1st the Triangle Distributing Corporation will commence re-issuing its series of Triangle pictures starring Douglas Fairbanks and William S. Hart. The first will be a Fairbanks story, the title of which will be announced within the near future. This will be followed by a Hart subject, to be released about September 15.

Week's Work in Fox Studios

Doings of Players and Directors Both East and West.

"SMILING GEORGE" WALSH, the versatile and athletic William Fox star, is to work under the direction of Richard Stanton, who came to the Fox forces more than a year ago to make "The Beast," Walsh's first starring vehicle in the West.

Mr. Stanton has been supervising four Dustin Farnum pictures since he screened "The Beast." The new George Walsh production on which he has begun will give the effervescent player more chances to risk his life than any of his previous films.

In the supporting cast are Seena Owen, who has just been signed by Mr. Fox, Pomeroy Cannon, Edward Burns, "Big Ed" Sedgwick, A. Burt Wesner, Ralph Lewis and Clyde Hopkins. The company is now in Portland, Ore., where many scenes are to be taken.

Mr. Stanton himself completed last week "The Spy," a dramatic photoplay with the present war as a background, in which Dustin Farnum has the stellar role. Winifred Kingston is the "opposite," and the story is by George Bronson-Howard.

Out on the coast also, Gladys Brockwell, the emotional star, has commenced on another new feature under the direction of Otis Turner, who staged "To Honor and Obey?" just released. Randolph Lewis is the author of the 'script. An unusually fine cast of supporting players has been assembled, the more prominent members of which are William Burress, Charles Clary, Bertram Grassby, Norbet Myles, Joseph Swickard, Frankie Lee and Marie Kierman.

Wheeler Oakman, one of the best-known of screen "heavies," has joined the William Fox players in Hollywood and will be seen in an important part in a forthcoming subject by R. A. Walsh. Miriam Cooper will have the leading role. Mr. Oakman has been in films for six years. His last William Fox feature was "Battle of Hearts," starring William Farnum.

"Every Girl's Dream" has been chosen for the title of June Caprice's ninth film production which Director Harry Millarde has in work at the Fort Lee N. J., studios. This is Mr. Millarde's premier screen product for the Fox program. Margaret Fielding, who was in "The Mischief Maker," one of Miss Caprice's earlier pictures, has been cast for a role in the new play.

"HASHIMURA TOGO" RELEASED AUGUST 19.

"Hashimura Togo," Wallace Irwin's famous and funny Jap hero, will make his bow in pictures August 19, when the film version of the Togo stories will be released by Paramount. Sessue Hayakawa, Paramount's equally famous and funny Jap star, will make his bow on that day as a light comedian. Togo and Hayakawa are, to all intents and purposes, synonymous. The part is admirably suited to Hayakawa.

In much of the dramatic side to the plot Togo's life and Hayakawa's run along similar lines. Marion Fairfax has adapted the stories by Wallace Irwin, and William C. DeMille, who recently has been devoting himself to scenario work in the Lasky studios, has come forth again as director in a production of importance to the literary and picture play world.

"THE OLD WEST PER CONTRACT" FOR UNIVERSAL.

Director Ruth Ann Baldwin of the Universal forces has begun work on a new five-reel Western feature, which is being produced upon a more elaborate scale than any play she has yet handled. This is a dramatization of William Wallace Cook's novel, "The Old West per Contract," which appeared recently in the Argosy magazine. Miss Baldwin is the author of the scenario.

Donna Drew, who aroused such comment recently by her pleasing work in "The Flame of Youth," will have the leading part, opposite Leo Pierson; Jean Hersholt will appear in the heavy role. Other important characters in the production will be played by Joseph Girard and George Pearce.

OUICK BOOKINGS FOR A FEATURE.

As evidence that the Essanay "Skinner" features, presenting Bryant Washburn supported by Hazel Daly, released through Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay, are sought by exhibitors, it is interesting to cite that "Skinner's Baby," successor to "Skinner's Dress Suit" and "Skinner's Bubble," was contracted for by the Rialto theater, New York's greatest picture house, the B. S. Moss circuit, and the Marcus Loew circuit, within five hours after the first print had been received by Manager Raynor of the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay New York branch office. This is a record that K-E-S-E may refer to with pardonable pride.

DOROTHY DALTON BECOMES PARAMOUNT STAR.

Another Ince star has been added to those already announced by the producer as followin, along with him in his new affiliation with Paramount. Mr. Ince announces that Dorothy Dalton's name is to be added to those of Charles Ray and Enid Bennett as Ince stars to appear in pictures hereafter to be released exclusively through Paramount. There will be eight Dorothy Dalton pictures scheduled by Paramount.

General Adds Four-Reel Films

New Weekly Release of "Falcon Features," Dramatic Subjects, Begins August 17.

EXPECTED for some time, General Film's new series of four-reel dramatic features are now definitely announced. The forthcoming productions are the Falcon Features, all big subjects chosen for strength of story under General Film's policy of prime attention to play value.

Every Falcon feature will have a story of first importance. Already a great many productions that have stood the General Film management's searching review for completeness of story interest have been passed and selected. The announcement is now made that the first release will be available about August 17, with a new and powerful release to follow each week. From the date named onward, consequently, General Film exhibitors will be able to book their whole show from this company, making up a bill from the four-reel features and its many two-reel features and one-reel comedies.

"The Mainspring" will be the first of the Falcon Features to be released. This is an impressive adventure story by that master of adventure plot, Louis Joseph Vance, and in fact is a picturization of a great magazine story of that name by this author. "The Mainspring" abounds in thrills. It has been given an admirable production under the direct supervision of H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer. The featured lead is Henry King, whose work is always virile and artistic.

Well-known authors and well-known stars will be featured in all the following Falcon Features, with value in story, however, as the fundamental attraction. Most of the stories would ordinarily be presented in five-reel form, it is stated, but to insure dramatic value they have been restricted by General Film to four-reel length. General Film is also seeing to it that paper and all sorts of advertising matter is prepared in the most artistic form, plentifully and promptly. Every logical merchandising aid will be given exhibitors in connection with Falcon Features.

UNIVERSAL BISON WESTERN FEATURES.

The widespread revival of interest in good Western subjects has brought about a rearrangement of the Universal schedule so that hereafter a Bison feature will be released every other Tuesday, alternating with a Gold Seal drama.

So many requests for full-length Bison pictures have been forwarded from the various Universal exchanges during the past two months that it was deemed advisable to devote more attention to the manufacture of this brand.

"The Soul Herder," a transcript from life on the frontier, featuring Harry Carey, will be the first release under the new arrangement, bearing the date of August 7. Written by George Hively and produced by Jack Ford, this stirring tale of the mixed destinies of a desert ne'er-do-well with a penchant for strong waters and hip artillery and the orphaned family of a sagebrush parson will undoubtedly receive wide favor. Fritzi Ridgeway, Jean Hersholt and Elizabeth Janes offer Carey capable support.

"A DOUBLE DECEPTION" (Kalem).

In "A Double Deception," the sixth episode of "The Further Adventures of Stingaree," now being released by the Kalem Company, author E. W. Hornung again displays his skill in True Boardman appears in his familiar role of Stingaree, supported by Hal Clements, Frederick Vroom, Tom Walsh, Richard Carlyle and Edythe Sterling.

Triangle Bill For August

OLIVE THOMAS, in her second picture, "An Even Break," will be presented on the Triangle program of August 5, together with Wilfred Lucas and Elda Millar in "The Food Gamblers," produced under the supervision of Allan Dean. "An Even Break" is the second play in which Miss Thomas has appeared since signing her contract with Triangle, and it is said to be one of the most pretentious offerings released as a program feature.

The story, which is by Lambert Hillyer, parallels the star's own career from nonentity to Broadway fame. What is said to be the largest and most elaborate settings ever constructed on the Triangle Culver City stages was used for a scene depicting the nocturnal gayeties of a Broadway cafe. More than five hundred people, including dancers, a Jazz band, professional entertainers and a large company of guests assembled about the candle-illumined tables, were employed for this episode. In the large company supporting her appear such Triangle favorites as Charles Gunn, Darrel Foss, Charles K. French, J. Frank Burke, Margaret Thompson and Louis Durham. The production was directed by Lambert Hillyer, the author.

A play that will undoubtedly evoke considerable discussion because of its timely subject is "The Food Gamblers," in which Wilfred Lucas and Elda Millar are featured. Miss Millar has the role of a young newspaper woman who makes a sensational expose of food speculation as practiced by certain prominent financiers. Lucas has the role of Henry Havens, food commissioner, who assists Miss Millar in her struggle to indict the enemies of national welfare.

Among the supporting players are Mac Barnes, Russell Simpson, Jack Snyder and Ednardo Cianelli. The production was directed by Albert Parker under the supervision of Allan Dwan.

"THE WOMAN GOD FORGOT" NEXT FARRAR PRODUCTION.

The first picture made by Geraldine Farrar as an Artcraft star will be out of the beaten track and on an unusual scale of production. The title of the picture will be "The Woman God Forgot." It is a colorful and powerfully dramatic story of Aztec life, introducing the historic character of Montezuma and revealing the splendors of his court. Jeanie Macpherson is the author and Cecil B. De Mille is the director.

Scene from "The Woman God Forgot" (Artcraft).

Among the special sets is a tropical jungle, containing a lake for water fowl, the whole fenced and covered with over 10,000 feet of wire netting, to prevent the escape of the animals and birds.

BLANK GETS NEW STATE RIGHT FEATURES.

A. H. Blank of Dubuque, Ia., has purchased the state rights for "The Submarine Eye" for Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas and Missouri, and has secured the rights for "Her Condoned Sin" in Kansas and Missouri. Mr. Blank also signed for the Goldwyn Pictures in Des Moines. With the Goldwyn, Mr. Blank will have the rights to the Artcraft, Paramount and Selznick productions for his theater, the Garden. He informs us that he is planning to erect a new and up-to-date house in Des Moines in the very near future.

FAIRBANKS FINISHES AUGUST 12 RELEASE.

Douglas Fairbanks has left California for a vacation trip to Wyoming, where he will pursue mountain lions. The vacation trip follows the completion of "Down to Earth," the Fairbanks-Artcraft release of August 12. With Fairbanks were his cameraman, Victor Fleming; Bull Montana, the actor-wrestler-trainer, and a wealthy Easterner named Henry Mosier who is taking a pleasure trip through the West, and was glad to include lions in his itinerary. Three hunting dogs also went along.

Scene from "Down to Earth" (Fairbanks).

While the star is absent from the studio, Anita Loos and Joseph Henaberry, under the supervision of John Emerson, are busy on the next Fairbanks story.

STAHL TO EXPLOIT NEW COMEDIAN.

Walter Richard Stahl, who until a year ago was one of the best known of the younger comedy directors and who of late gained considerable prominence through his production of "Hate" and "Helen of Troy," has formed the Hi-Ro Comedy Company to feature an entirely new style comedian. On a recent trip through the South Mr. Stahl discovered this droll comedian in the person of "Smiling" Roland Hill. So impressed was he with this comedian's work that he immediately placed him under a contract to appear in a series of two-reel subjects which he will himself produce.

The Hi-Ro Comedy Company has been formed by Stahl to exploit Hill in twelve two-reel subjects a year. A large outdoor studio is at present under construction in Greensboro, N. C., at which studio the majority of the comedies will be made.

CANADA AND ALASKAN RIGHTS FOR "GREAT WHITE TRAIL."

With many plans for the benefit of the exhibitor, John C. Green, the veteran pictureman and showman of Galt, Canada, has purchased the entire Canadian and Alaskan rights for "The Great White Trail," the new superfeature of the North by the Whartons of Ithaca. Mr. Green is to begin his campaign within a few weeks.

SPITZER SELLS COAST RIGHTS.

When Nat H. Spitzer, sales manager of the King-Bee Film Corporation, was in San Francisco recently he not only disposed of the California, Arizona and Nevada rights to the Billy West comedies to the All Star Feature Distributors, but also sold the rights in the Northwest, these being purchased by Mike Rosenberg, of Seattle.

BINFORD DISTRIBUTING FOR MOTOY.

William T. Binford, of Denver, Col., has taken over the distributing rights of the Motoy Comedies, produced by the Peter Pan Film Corporation of New York, for the territory of Wyoming, Utah, Colorado and New Mexico. He says that the Motoy Comedies are already in great favor throughout this territory.

"HIS WEDDING NIGHT" (Paramount).

Getting down to figures, Paramount's mirth mountain, Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle, estimates that his recent completed two-reeler, "His Wedding Night," has more laughs to the film than anything he has ever done. The comedy will be released at an early date.

Film News in New England Territory

Draft Call Will Make Many Vacancies Hard to Fill, as the Territory Is Difficult—A Comedy in Park Square—Local Business Notes.

By the Boston Correspondent.

BOSTON, MASS.—One of the industries most vitally affected by the draft is the motion picture industry. About 65 per cent. of the motion picture machine operators and film exchange employes in New England are eligible to draft. The lottery has called practically all these men, and film exchange managers are wondering how they will fill their places when the call to the colors comes.

New England is a difficult territory for a new man to become acquainted with, and breaking in bookers and shippers threatens to be a hard task. Competent operators are scarce, and when the men now turning the cranks in the thousands of New England theaters are mustered into the new army it will be hard to obtain new men to fill their places. Many exhibitors are holding informal conferences, planning against the contingency which faces them. It is possible that women will be called upon to fill the places made vacant by the men.

"Jack" Watts Takes a Ride with Thomas Spry.

Boston, Mass.—"Around and around the merry-go-round—and then walk!" is the refrain sung by "Jack" Watts, manager of the Woburn theater every time he thinks of the ride and luncheon given him by Thomas B. Spry, manager of the New England Metro Exchange recently.

Watts was transacting some business in the Metro office when his friend Spry invited him to take a little ride in his new automobile and then go to lunch. The pair started out, traveling about two miles per hour, which is the fastest that Spry will go, as Spry has not yet become thoroughly acquainted with his machine. Spry and Watts drove to Park Square, where they were to dine at a popular restaurant. Seeing no place at the curbstone where he might park his car, as several machines were lined up before the restaurant, Spry decided to drive around the block, hoping that a machine would leave and give him room. When he came back to the restaurant, room was still lacking, so again he steered his machine around the block. Several times Spry and Watts rode around the block until Watts tired of the scenery. Then Spry decided to drive back to the office and leave his machine there. This was done, and together Spry and Watts walked to the restaurant. The party cost Spry more than he expected, as much gasoline was consumed in the merry-go-round ride, and Watts' appetite was sharpened by the long ride and the longer walk.

Startling Advertising Stand for "The Slacker."

On a rope which is stretched from the roof of one tall building to another skyscraper travels an aeroplane in which is seated a dummy. The aeroplane is brilliantly illuminated and is kept the center of all eyes by a powerful searchlight, the rays of which follow it as it speeds through the air, over the streets of the business section. Each night thousands of people gasp with surprise and fear when they see the realistic-looking dummy fall from the machine and drop like a stone toward the earth. After falling about 150 feet the dummy comes to the end of the thin cord, and he is then mechanically hoisted back to the seat of the airship.

With this startling advertising device in operation each night few Bostonians can be in ignorance of the fact that "The Slacker" is being shown in the city.

J. K. Robinson Promoted to General Sales Manager.

Boston, Mass.—A promotion which was well deserved is that given George K. Robinson, formerly publicity manager of the Paramount and Artcraft pictures in New England who was recently appointed general sales manager in New England. Robinson has a host of acquaintances and friends in this field. Congratulations are pouring in on him.

John McConville Is Paramount Publicity Man.

Boston, Mass.—Of interest to New England exhibitors, newspapermen and publicity men is the appointment of John McConville as New England publicity manager for Paramount and Artcraft pictures.

McConville has a long record as an active publicity man. For many years he has been connected with various newspapers in Portland, Me., and also has served as special correspondent for some of the largest newspapers in the country. He also was secretary to Governor Curtis of Maine. Among the entertainers for whom McConville has done publicity work are the promotors of the Maine Musical Festival.

The Maine man is known as an enterprising, progressive publicity man and a successful career is predicted for him in the new field. His offices will be at 8 Shawmut avenue, Boston.

H. G. Seigel to Become a Benedict.

Boston, Mass.—Because the lottery of the draft has not called him to the colors immediately, Harry G. Siegel, manager of the Globe Film Company, has announced that he will be married in November. Mr. Seigel deferred setting a definite date for his wedding pending the result of the draft. His many friends among the New England exhibitors are congratulating him on his enlistment in the army of benedicts.

Boston, Mass.—The New Goldwyn pictures were shown for the first time in New England Friday, July 20, at the Fenway theater to a large gathering of exhibitors. The exhibition was under the auspices of Mr. Goldfish, president of the Goldwyn Pictures, Inc. The pictures have created such a good impression that a big demand is expected from New England exhibitors by Harry Campbell, manager of the New England exchange.

Boston, Mass.—A large gathering of army and navy officials, exhibitors and invited guests, witnessed a special run-off of the Metro film sensation, "The Slacker," at a special performance at the Park theater preliminary to its release in New England. Those present were intensely interested in the film and when it has been shown were enthusiastic in their praise. "The Slacker" is being booked in New England through the Metro exchange. A phenomenal run is expected for it.

Boston, Mass.—"Civilization," which had a long run at the Tremont theater last season, is now being shown at the Modern theater at popular prices. Attendance has been most gratifying for the past week and a heavy record of attendance is expected while this film is shown. Summer visitors in particular are noticeable at the popular price showing of this spectacular film.

Moncton Theater to Have 700 More Seats.

Moncton, N. B.—F. W. Winter of the Eastern Amusement Company in Moncton tells me that they are starting work on enlarging the Empress theater by adding seventy feet to the length of the building. This will give an addition of about seven hundred seats, making the entire capacity about fourteen hundred seats. The present building will have as big a capacity as almost any other theater in the provinces except the Imperial at St. John. It is expected that the work will be completed by December 1. Messrs. Torrile and Winter, who comprise the firm, use Fox, Brady, Bluebird and Pathe Gold Rooster features, and are running "The Crimson Stain Mystery." Mr. Winter states that business is very quiet in Moncton just at present.

Truro, N. B.—F. G. Spencer has engaged Louis Cheney as pianist at the Princess theater, Truro. Mr. Cheney has been for the last ten years with the orchestra at the Auditorium in Malden, Mass. He played for one day at the Unique theater in St. John and made a splendid impression.

Maryland Censors Arrest Two Exhibitors

Bernard Depkin Supposed Film He Showed Had Been Censored, Is Fined $25 and Costs—V. P. Whitaker Also Pays a Fine.

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Ter., Baltimore, Md.—

BALTIMORE, Md.—Following the onslaught of the moral uplifters and reformers it seems that the whip end of the lash must have touched a raw place for unwonted activities have been observed in censorial endeavors. For instance "The Little Soldier Girl," a Paramount release, was shown at the Parkway theater on Monday, July 16. Bernard Depkin, Jr., the manager, did not know that the film was uncensored. Nevertheless, he was arrested, through the action taken by Charles E. Harper, Chairman of the Board and fined $25 and costs before Justice Packard at the Central. And what could there be in Paramount's "Little Soldier Girl" to cause complaint? Vivian P. Whitaker of Washington, also was fined $5 and costs when omitting the seal of the Maryland Board from pictures shown at the West End theater, Baltimore and Gilmore streets.

Health Department Warning.

Baltimore, Md.—Very recently the Health Department of this city issued a bulletin regarding seriousness of whooping cough as a disease. In its statement the popular idea that this children's ailment is trivial was routed and it was shown that it should be most dread in early childhood. The department does not allow children with whooping cough to go into places of public assembly, such as moving picture parlors, theaters, etc.

Baltimore Business Notes.

Large Theaters and Patriotic Work.

Baltimore, Md.—On Sunday, July 22, three of the largest moving picture theaters in Baltimore gave entertainments and held meetings in the interest of patriotism. In the afternoon and evening of this day, The Citizens Recruiting Committee of the Fifth Regiment held meetings at the Parkway theater 3-9 West North avenue. At the afternoon performance $600 were donated by those present for the good cause. The Parkway was donated for the occasion by Harry W. Province Gets Tax That Once Was Halifax's

City Feels Loss of License Fees for Theaters—Fire Regulations Are Now Being Strictly Enforced—No Friction Between Inspectors and Theaters.

Alice Fairweather, St. John Standard—

HALIFAX, N. S.—The theater tax is being paid in Halifax by the theaters, but in the Province the people pay the extra money and find it no inconvenience. A queer situation has arisen out of the tax in this city. The city of Halifax is actually losing money. The Government imposed the theater tax and the city of Halifax lost as a result of the legislation passed by the Government $1,100 which they formerly received in licences. There is naturally nothing the city can do about it, but the Board of Control are mourning the loss to the City's revenues.

Very strict measures have been ordered regarding the fire regulations in the Halifax theaters and several of the houses have been ordered to comply with the laws. The chief engineer reported that all his recommendations are being carried out.

A. E. Wall, who in addition to being the whole board of censors of the Province of Nova Scotia, is also Inspector for theaters for that Province, says that all his relations with film men and theater managers are of the most pleasant kind, and he finds them willing to abide by his decision and respect the regulations. He finds that comedies are the worst films which he has to censor and that many more comedies have to be cut or condemned than any other style of picture. The rule in N. S. for the censoring of a film is that it must have been passed by at least two boards elsewhere and not condemned by any board in Canada. Then, having received a certificate to this effect from the Film Exchange, Mr. Wall allows the picture to go through. Usually these films have been censored elsewhere before they reach Halifax, but lately pictures have been coming straight from Montreal into the Province. It would be difficult to quarrel with A. E. Wall as the general description of him by theater men is "He's a good fellow." To be a popular censor is surely a test of fairmindness and straight dealing.

Give Service Girl Ushers at Wolfville Opera House.

Wolfville, N. B.—The Wolfville opera house, A. J. Mason manager, sends out the following announcement:

Commencing Monday, July 16th, the young ladies of Wolfville will take over the ticket selling, taking and ushering at the Opera House. The salaries received for their work to be used for Patriotic Purposes as the organization sees fit. The society to be known as "The Give Service Girls Club."

There are eighty girls members of this club which includes many of the first families in the town.

Monday, July 23rd, the theater was used for a performance in aid of The Soldiers' Field Comfort Association.

F. G. Spencer Has His Hands Full.

St. John, N. B.—F. G. Spencer of the Lyric and Unique, St. John, is a busy man these days. He has been recently at Fredericton overseeing the improvements to be made at the Gem theater in that city leased by him. Then his theater, the Empress at Amherst is being rebuilt to be opened on September 5 and he has plans on hand for the Strand, St. John.

The Lyric theater (S. C. Hurley, manager) is to run Paramount pictures starting this week.

St. John, N. B.—J. M. Franklin of the Strand, Halifax, and the Opera House, St. John, was in St. John this week on his way to Boston and New York.

St. John, N. B.—"The Gray Ghost" has been booked quite extensively through the Province. Butterfly pictures are running in Sydney, Wolfville, Glace Bay and Liverpool. The usual summer slump is being felt though Nova Scotia and Cape Breton, though not so severely as usual. J. M. Franklin of the Strand, Halifax, booked the "Gray Ghost."

MORE BALTIMORE NOTES.

Washington Exchanges May Move to Baltimore.

A great undercurernt seems to be gradually gaining force regarding the proposed change of the Washington exchange managers to move their offices to Baltimore. Just whether the proposed changes will eventually take place is a matter for conjecture, for many people, when asked about the matter seem to be doubtful of the event taking place

The Maryland Exhibitors' League, however, has been doing a great deal of hard work on the matter and a committee composed of Frank A. Hornig, president of the League; Louis Schlichter, first vice-president; L. A. DeHoff, secretary; A. S. Gillaspey, Baltimore News, and A. S. Goldsborough, director of the Civic and Industrial Bureau of the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association. The last named has now been in communication with J. H. Butner, president of the Managers' Association in Washington. The Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association, one of the strongest in the country, is interested in the movement, as it will mean the increase in business in Baltimore to the amount of $1,500,000 a year.

On the other hand, when Sam Flax, of the Washington Metro; O. D. Weems of the Baltimore Paramount; C. Eiseman, of the Baltimore Mutual, and M. Siegel, of the Bluebird, were interviewed on the matter they seemed to know very little and did not seem to think the move would be made. P. Oletzky, of the Baltimore Film exchange, seemed to think that it would be impossible for all the exchanges to handle the Virginia, West Virginia and Southern territory from Baltimore owing to the changing of trains at Washington. It seems to be a very difficult matter now to get the films down to express office by eleven o'clock, for, if they are ten minutes late, they can't be sent from Baltimore to a point like Grafton

Pennsylvania's 1917 Record on Film Bills

Legislature Adjoins and No Noteworthy Measure Affecting the Film Business Was Passed—Exhibitors Stopped Some Bad Bills in Committee.

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford St., Philadelphia, Pa.

HARRISBURG, PA.—Efforts on the part of "reform" or meddling members of the Pennsylvania State Legislature of 1917, which only recently adjourned sine die at Harrisburg, to abridge or juggle with existing moving picture laws, proved unavailing.

Every moving picture bill, with but one exception introduced, was "lost in committee" as a result of the strong and united opposition on the part of moving picture men to what threatened to be but did not materialize as '[illegible] legislation."

One bill, sponsored by Representative Eeyer, the Penrose floor leader of the House, proposed a tax of one cent a foot on moving picture films, the proceeds thereof to be diverted to an "Insurance Fund." It passed first reading on May 10, but was sent back to the House committee on appropriations, from which it never again emerged

Another bill, and a most meritorius one, which provided for moving [illegible] on Sunday in Pennsylvania, was fathered by Representative Jefferson W. [illegible] of Philadelphia but was permitted "to die a-bornin'" in the House Law and Order committee.

There was one measure, providing for the regulation of moving picture machine booths and subjecting the same to the Industrial Board of Industry, which the Legislature passed and the Governor signed.

Senator Snyder, now the state auditor general, sponsored a bill, that if it had been enacted, would have provided for a commissioner of amusements to approve and regulate moving pictures instead of the present State Board of Censors. It was defeated on final passage on April 23

Preparing for "The Crisis" at the Garrick.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"The Crisis" will open a three weeks' engagement at the Garrick, beginning on August 13. In addition to the film version itself, which runs for two hours and forty minutes, there will be an orchestra of twenty-four and twenty-two actors, not to mention six men who work effects. There will be nine young women garbed in period costume to act as ushers. The foyer of the theater will be transformed to resemble a living rom in a Southern mansion. A Nigger Mammy will greet the patrons and dispense programs A string orchestra will play Southern melodies—in fact, there will be a general atmosphere of the Southland.

Beautiful Colors at Atlantic City's Bijou.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Louis Bell, the publicity man of the Paramount office, visited Herbert Elliott of the Bijou theater in Atlantic City, last week. He reported that the interior decorations of the auditorium struck him as being out of the ordinary. Instead of the usual ivory and red, he found a combination of light blue and white, which showed up in a most artistic manner. The organist also caught his attention, having a position in a special balcony in the rear of the house where the console has been placed and where he can plainly see the pictures without any distortion.

Two Exhibitors Honored in the Draft.

Philadelphia, Pa.—H. R. Lewis, the popular young proprietor of the Tivoli theater, and Charles A. Burghart, the smiling young proprietor of the Star theater, 31st and Wharton streets, have both been placed on the honor call to join Uncle Sam's big army. Mr. Lewis, if accepted, will go with an excellent record behind him as an up-to-date exhibitor. His theater is in a most presperous condition and contains a $1,500 organ. He has built up a steady clientele and has also taken an active interest in every movement for the advancement of the business. Likewise, Mr. Burghart has a splendid record as an all-round and progressive exhibitor, who is considered one of the most popular men in the South Philadelphia Business Boosters' Association.

First Run Films Here Last Week.

Philadelphia, Pa.—First run photoplays to be introduced at the prominent theaters during the week of July 24 will be Jack Pickford and Louise Huff in "What Money Cannot Buy" and Wallace Reid and Anita King in "The Squaw Man's Son," which will divide honors at the Stanley.

Dorothy Dalton's new starring vehicle, The Flame of the Yukon," which has been hold up by the censors during the past two weeks, will be the chief attraction at the Arcadia during the first three days to be followed by Bessie Love in "The Sawdust Ring" during the remainder of the week.

At the Victoria, Marian Cooper in "The Innocent Sinner" will share honors with Harold Lockwood in "The Hidden Spring.

The Strand will show Kitty Gordon in "The Beloved Adventuress" and Alice Joyce and Harry Morey in "Richard the Brazen."

Business Notes of the Trade.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Allen May, manager of the Bluebird exchange, has purchased an automobile to facilitate his travels around the city and also for his personal enjoyment. He states that a car has become more of a necessity to a live business man to-day than a luxury.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Louis Morris, general manager of M. E. Comerford theaters, which are located in Scranton and its immediate vicinity, paid the Paramount offices a visit last week in company with Mr. Farrell of the Majestic, Carbondale

Philadelphia, Pa.—Smiling "Peggy" Finn, the pretty "hello girl" of the Paramount offices, is always on the job with a radiant smile for the visiting exhibitors, which helps to drive dull care away even in summer time.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The title of "The Little Boy Scout," starring Ann Pennington, released June 28, on the Paramount program, has been changed to "The Little Soldier Girl."

Philadelphia, Pa.—Albert E. Brown, of the Overbrook theater, is holding special children's matinees every Friday and is meeting with considerable success. The occasion is being known as the special Bluebird day by reason of these photoplays being shown on this day.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"Do Children Count?" released by the K-E-S-E, has become a popular novelty on the programs of a large number of houses here. The Conquest program is also attracting considerable attention among the exhibitors.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Dr. S. Steinberg of the Strand theater, 12th and Girard avenue, enjoyed a short vacation in Wildwood last week.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Effinger enjoyed an exciting fishing trip last Saturday and Sunday at Fortescue, N. J. Mrs. Effinger caught an inquisitive sea bass and Mr. Effinger hooked in twice as many.

Varner on the Job for Good of Exhibitors

Heart and Soul Still in the Fight for Exhibitors, Says Henry B. Varner, of North Carolina—Is Keeping in Touch with the War Tax Bill.

By D. M. Bain, Wilmington, N. C.

LEXINGTON. N. C.—Events in Chicago during the recent convention will cut no figure at all with Henry B. Varner's future activities in behalf of the exhibitors of the United States, and he is even now, immediately upon his return from Chicago, lining up matters so as to stay in close touch with the pending joint conference committee of the House and Senate in Washington relative to the War Revenue bill, before which it has been hinted that Chairman Claude Kitchin will fight the exemption clause for theaters, as inserted by the Finance Committee.

In correspondence which Mr. Kitchin has had with friends in this state recently he has intimated very strongly that he will have to stand by the almost unanimous action of the House in passing the bill containing the theater tax without exemptions, stating that, in face of its almost unanimous adoption, the Ways and Means Committee are pledged to support the original draft of the bill.

"My heart and soul is still in this fight for the exhibitors," states Mr. Varner, "and I intend to continue the fight to a finish. However, my future work in this connection will be through the proper channels of our National organization, the American Exhibitors' Association, and I will work in co-operation with Mr. Pettijohn, whom I am sure will take an active interest in the work, and I still hope that we can put through the exemption clause as recommended by the Senate Finance Committee."

Gastonia Theaters Exempted from County Tax.

Gastonia, N. C.—Messrs. J. White Ware, J. E. Simpson and Mr. Beard, representing the motion picture interests of this town, recently appeared before their county commissioners and succeeded in having the theaters exempted from county taxation in line with the recommendation of the Governor, since the error of transcribing the bill exempting all theaters in the state from this tax left the bill as it formerly was, without relief to the shows of the state. The exemption in their case was obtained through a counter proposition by which all the theaters of Gastonia will have a monthly Red Cross benefit day, on which days 30 per cent. of the gross receipts will be given to the Red Cross Society for military relief work.

Big Film Productions at the Royal.

Wilmington, N. C.—The Royal theater, on North Front street, owned by Messrs. Howard and Wells, formerly used as a tab and vaudeville theater, will reopen Monday, July 30, presenting two and three-day runs of the bigger film productions at popular prices. The Royal orchestra will be retained through the summer to furnish music for the pictures.

Victoria Theater Improvements Begun.

Wilmington, N. C.—Work of razing the old buildings on the lot corner Second and and Market streets, next to the Victoria theater, recently purchased by Messrs. Howard and Wells for the building of an addition to that theater, was begun this week, and will be completed within the next ten days. As soon thereafter as plans can be completed work will begin on the alterations and addition, the work to be completed by November 1. The Victoria, with a seating capacity of eleven hundred, has been the home of the big super-productions for the past twelve months, and upon the alterations being finished will be converted into a legitimate house, playing the road attractions after November 1. With the cost of the lot, the improvements to this property will represent an outlay of $35,000, and with the initial cost of the Victoria will bring the total investment up to a little more than one hundred thousand dollars. Supervising architect is Mr. B. H. Stephens, expert specializer on theater building.

Buffalo News Letter

By Joseph McGuire, 152 North Elmwood St., Buffalo, N. Y.

George A. Hickey Heads Goldwyn Office

BUFFALO, N. Y.—George A. Hivkey has been appointed manager of the Buffalo branch of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation at 200 Pearl street. He opened the Triangle exchange in this city nearly two years ago and was its manager up to the time of assuming his present position.

George A. Hickey.

Mr. Rickey is now touring his territory. He is paying the exhibitors a personal visit to introduce the Goldwyn productions. His staff includes G. A. Woodard, formerly with the Triangle, road representative; Miss Grace Redan, bookkeeper, Andrew Biersbach, formerly with the Triangle booker.

As a feature of his introductory work, Mr. Hickey has arranged for a public screening of the Goldwyn pictures in Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse and Utica.

"We want to show our goods before the exhibitors sign the contracts," he said "After the first showing all future screenings will be at our Buffalo headquarters."

The Goldwyn exchange is centrally located in the heart of the downtown district. Mr. Hickey says the first release date of the Goldwyn pictures is September 9. He is now taking contracts.

The first four are Mae Marsh in "Polly of the Circus," Madge Kennedy in "Baby Mine," Maxine Elliott in "Fighting Odds and Jane Cowl in "Spreading Dawn." Mr. Hickey was recently visited by Alfred E

Hustles in View of Higher Postage.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Receiving a tip that three-cent postage is nearly here, several moving picture men in the Buffalo territory are sending out many bills and otherwise cleaning up their correspondence in order to take advantage of the present rate. The advance would mean a lot financially, especially to the exchanges which send out thousands of letters in the course of a year.

Mitchel Mark's Mother Dies.

Chaplain of 74th Takes Film Equipment.

Buffalo, N. Y.—A moving picture machine and a screen will be among the equipment of Rev. John C. Ward, chaplain of the 74th Regiment, this city. He will use the outfit in his work when the 74th goes to France. An automobile truck, a tent, a portable organ and prayer and song books will also be included in the equipment.

Mr. Exhibitor:—You will get more helpful information by carefully reading one trade paper weekly than by skimming over three or four. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD is the paper you need.

W. G. Pond Goes to Salisbury, Md.

Washington, D. C.—William G. Pond, who for the past five years has been in the employ of the Brylawski interests, has gone to Salisbury, Md., to assume charge of the Arcade theater, operated by the Peninsula Amusement Company.

Washington's Metropolitan Theater Begun

Harry M. Crandall Says House Will Not Be Delayed—Will Have Seats for 2,300 —Expected to Open by December of This Year.

By Clarence L. Linz, 622 Riggs Building, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—A statement from Harry M. Crandall will set at rest the many rumors that have been going the rounds to the effect that his Metropolitan theater will be materially delayed because of the inability on the part of the company that is backing the house to utilize alley space at the rear of the F street property.

"There is nothing to any rumor such as this," said Mr. Crandall to the MOVING PICTURE WORLD correspondent, "for we are going right ahead with our F street proposition. The buildings on the site had to be torn down and bids obtained for the construction work as well as for the materials. There was absolutely no delay anywhere. At the rear of the property is an alley that is of no use to anybody but us. We tried to utilize it so that we could get a couple of hundred additional seats. We found, however, that we woud have to secure the enactment of a law by Congress before we could take the alley in. This would represent a great deal of work and trouble, so we concluded that it would not be worth our while to try to go ahead with the plan. All we lose is perhaps [illegible] sufficient to accommodate two hundred seats.

"The new Metropolitan will have a seating capacity of 2,300. The contract for its construction has been awarded to H. L. Wagner of this city, who is also building the Knickerbocker. The contract calls for a period of five months in which to complete the building and it will be ready for use in December. The cost of construction will total $248,000. This does not include electric installation, plumbing, heating and lighting, so that the cost will reach something more than $300,000.

"In line with the campaign all over the United States for the conservation of metal, we have cut down the amount of steel to be used in the building and are substituting concrete for it. At the same time this has resulted in the saving of more than $50,000 in construction costs.

"Jerry" Payne Succeeds J. H. Butner.

Washington, D. C.—The trade in this territory received quite a jolt last week when it was learned that James H. Butner had been superseded as manager of the local Triangle exchange, following the various changes that have occurred in the home office. "Jim" Butner, as he is more familiarly known to a great many of the people here, is one of the best liked and most respected exchange managers doing business in the Washington section. Mr. Butner was out of the city when the Moving Picture World correspondent called upon him, but it is understood that he has "hooked" up with another organization for early service. This, however, will take him out of the Washington territory, a fact greatly regretted by the city and nearby exhibitors.

Mr. Butner came to Washington about a year ago from Philadelphia for the purpose of establishing this branch. He was no stranger here, having previously been engaged in newspaper work for many years and he had retained his acquaintance among the theatrical and news interests. He had been manager of the Philadelphia office of the Triangle for a year or so, previous to which time he was in charge of the Mutual exchange in that city.

The new manager of the Triangle is not by any means a stranger. "Jerry" Payne was schooled first under George M. Mann, when manager of the Paramount exchange, and then with Vernon Whitaker when the latter was in charge of the Artcraft. When Mr. Mann left Paramount he kept Mr. Payne in mind and soon put him in the local Triangle office. Another of his students, E. R. Carr, also joined the Washington Triangle office from Paramount and he since has been put in charge of the St. Louis Triangle exchange. Mr. Carr has the distinction of being perhaps the youngest manager in the exchange business to-day, in charge of a first class office, for it is said he is but [illegible] years of age.

Arthur Price, manager of the Rialto theater of Baltimore, Md., has been appointed a salesman under the local Triangle office to handle the business of his home city.

Airdomes in Capital City Feel Unlucky

Season's Bad Weather Has Given Them a Hard Blow—Only Five Good Show Nights This Summer—Expenses Are a Bigger Factor Than Formerly.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The motion picture exhibitors in the District of Columbia who are operating airdomes are considering themselves very unlucky, especially in cases where they have had to go to more or less expense to put their open-air parks into commission. The cause of the trouble has been the very inclement weather, starting out with unprecedented cold days and nights and winding up with continued rains, so that all the exhibitors get out of their parks are bills for rent, for service, and for repairs, to say nothing of having a weekly payroll to take care of.

"We have had more rain this year than in any other season in the history of the business," said Joseph P. Morgan, manager of the Savoy theater, and associated with Harry M. Crandall. "We have had only about five clear nights since the opening of the season on May 15, and now it is the first of August. The weather conditions have made airdomes very risky propositions to handle. The amount of risk is greater now than in previous years, for in the old days we used the ordinary single reel films in the parks and when a bad night came it was a simple matter to shelve these. The rental price was very low. Because of the low rental price if a man had only one good night in the week he could easily clear up enough to break even and perhaps make a slight profit.

"Then again, the exhibitor formerly could get a credit for the nights on which he did not use the shows in his park. The people, too, were also willing to take a chance and pay 5 cents even though it looked like rain, and would be willing to forego the balance of the entertainment if the drops should fall before the show was over. But things are different now. The people want feature films and these cost a great deal more than the old single reels; we pay for them whether we show them or not, and people do not feel like taking a chance on beating out a rainstorm when they have to pay two and three times the 5 cents they paid in the old days.

"Each year finds a decreasing number of airdomes in this locality and it looks to me as though this season would just about see their finish. At the best, the airdome that is not attached to a closed house is an almost impossible proposition and to keep both running is a great deal of trouble. I have spoken with a number of exhibitors and those who have airdomes shake their heads, while some say 'never again' and others who have given them up declare they are glad to be free of the worry."

Exhibitor Coleman's Son Doing Brilliant Work in Aviation Corps.

Washington, D. C.—"Mose" Coleman, a well known exhibitor of southwest Washington, is another of the proud fathers whose sons are doing service for Uncle Sam. In this case it is Second Lieutenant Henry L. Coleman, of the Signal Corps, who is the assistant instructor in aviation at Atlanta, Ga. The young lieutenant is said to be an expert airman and will probably attain an early promotion.

Coleman Sr. has been operating the Grand, Welcome and Star theaters and the Grand and Island Parks.

Peninsula Amusement Company Formed.

Dover, Del.—The Peninsula Amusement Company is a new organization, of which L. M. Day, of the Metro Film Service, is the president. Associated with him are S. Richard, as secretary-treasurer, and George Schwartz, as general-manager. The corporation contemplates the operation of a number of theaters and expects to open some time next month in Dover, Del., where it has taken a lease to the new theater on the ground floor of the building being erected by the Odd Fellows of that city.

Changes in Louisville --- Expiring Leases

Several Local Picture Houses May See Marked Changes in Early Fall—Leases Expire on Casino, Walnut and Several Smaller Theaters.

Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Building, Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, Ky.—It is probable that several changes will be made in local moving picture circles about September 1. At that time the lease on the Casino theater, the Princess Amusement Co., will expire. Judge W. Allen Kinney has not decided definitely whether he will renew the lease or not.

The Walnut theater, leased to the Spencer Amusement Co., and operated by the Broadway Amusement Interests, may also make a change at that time as the present lease will expire. It is rumored that Sullivan & Constadine will lease the building and put in vaudeville. Nothing definite has been decided in either case, however.

In addition there are several small houses vacant at this time, and it is probable that in September they will be re-opened as fall business is generally active, summer business this far South being dull with the small cramped houses. However, business as a whole has been extremely good all summer, and the outlook is for the biggest fall ever known. This is due to high wages for all classes of labor, good agricultural, manufacturing and jobbing conditions, and the fact that the big local cantonment will open in the fall.

Joe Steurle May Run for City Office.

Louisville, Ky.—Joe Steurle, of the Broadway Amusement Enterprises, is making an excellent campaign to receive the nomination as city auditor on the Democratic ticket. Incidentally all the screen houses in Louisville with the exception of two, are running campaign slides for Mr. Steurle has interests in a number of picture theaters in Louisville, and is unusually well known, with the result that many of his friends predict a walk away in the fall elections.

Will Build Theater at Oldsmar, Fla.

Louisville, Ky.—Jacob Bornstein, of Louisville, manager of the Republic Realty Co., and a well known contractor, is planning to erect a moving picture theater at the new boom town of Oldsmar, Fla., where Mr. Bornstein has considerable realty interests. He is at Oldsmar at the present time, and his exact plans could not be secured. His son, Jacob Bornstein, Jr., stated that the theater would be erected this summer or fall.

Amusement Clean Up Before Camp Opens.

Louisville, Ky.—Due to the fact that the Government cantonment will open at Louisville in the fall an investigation of the amusement enterprises of Louisville has been under way, and it is possible that in the fall certain amusement restrictions will be placed in effect. A general clean up is promised throughout the city. Whether this will have any effect on censored or uncensored films is a question, but it is hardly thought that any films shown would be barred.

New Theaters and Changes in Kentucky.

Louisville, Ky.—In connection with the recent announcement that the International Circuit had taken over the Gayety theater, and that W. Woolfolk had been named as manager, the deal has been actually consummated, and work on remodeling the interior of the house has been started and will be completed in time for opening about September 2.

Louisville, Ky.—At the Hippodrome theater, Second and Market streets, feature pictures are now being shown two days a week at advanced prices. During the balance of the week admission is held at five cents, but on feature days the price is ten, and the crowds have been good for summer.

Helier, Ky.—The New Star theater, capital $3,000, has been incorporated by R. G. Wells, R. R. Armstrong, and R. F. McClure. This company is now erecting a building and recently purchased the equipment of another theater which quit business.

Winchester, Ky.—McMahan & ackson, of Cincinnati, O., recently leased the Family theater, of Winchester, from Bloomfield & Minor, for a two-day run of the film "Purity," which was shown at well attended screenings.

Monticello, Ky.—A lease has been closed whereby C. W. Simmons has taken over the Gem theater from Grover Burton, and will operate it for the next two years. Mr. Simmons is also in the photo business.

Harlan, Ky.—George G. Whitcomb is now the sole owner of the Cumberland theater, having purchased the interest of J. N. Landrum. The latter expects to take a long vacation and rest easy for a while.

Somerset, Ky.—Glenn Lovelass and Forest Shinnemen have closed a deal with Garvel Burton, and have taken over the management of the Dixie theater.

Louisville, Ky.—August Ansbeck, electrician and well known local relief moving picture operator, is the proud father of a fine boy.

Murray, Ky.—Ernest Smith has taken over the active management of the Dixie theater, and is putting up some good feature shows.

Nicholasville, Ky.—Sparks & Nave, owners of the Savoy theater, have sold the property to W. C. Jackson of Franklin, O., possession to be given August 1.

Pembroke, Ky.—The Lyric theater has been sold by Mrs. J. R. Paine to the Board of Education, which will use the theater as an auditorium for school entertaniments, etc., and probably arrange to run shows when the building is not in use otherwise.

Hellier, Ky.—Cockill & Bartley, operating the Princess theater, one of the largest in the Big Sandy valley ,have cancelled their lease and closed the place. The equipment has been purchased by the management of the Star theater, which will be completed shortly. This house will have the stage and screen at the entrance, with passageways at both sides.

Cleveland News Letter

By M. A. Malaney, Columbia Bldg., Cleveland, Ohio.

Fewer New Theaters in Cleveland.

CLEVELAND, O.—According to revised figures, there are 153 theaters in active operation in the city of Cleveland.

About ten theaters are closed, but half of these will open up again in the fall, being closed only temporarily.

Several new theaters are now being built. The following will open in September:

The Gaiety, on East Ninth street, near Superior avenue, seating about 500.

The Yale, East Eighty-second street and St. Clair avenue, seating about 800.

The Union, East 105th street and Union, to seat about 700.

The percentage of new theaters has not been equal to that of former years during 1917. Usually 10 or 12 large theaters are built each year. The reason for this is that most every neighborhood in Cleveland has its full quota of theaters—as many as they can support.

E. E. Oliver Gets Larger Territory.

Cleveland, O.—E. E. Oliver has returned from the Chicago exposition and reports having secured the northeastern Ohio territory for exclusive distribution of the Simplex projection machine.

The Oliver Moving Picture Supply Company has moved to its new location in the Corona theater building, Cleveland, and has the Simplex on the floor at all times for inspection of possible purchasers.

Nelson Morris at Manager's Desk for Time.

Cleveland, O.—C. R. Nelson Morris, the Bluebird road representative in Northern Ohio, has just returned from an extensive trip and is holding down the job as manager while Manager Joe Diener is on a vacation.

Mr. Morris reports conditions to be fair this summer because of the cool weather, which kept up until the 20th of July. Very few theaters were closed, he said.

Loew Promises Beautiful Atlanta Theater

E. A. Schiller Announces Big Extension of Loew Circuit in the South—Will Cover a Dozen or More Cities—Conference in Chicago.

By Alfred M. Beatty, 43 Copenhill Ave., Atlanta, Ga.

ATLANTA, Ga.—E. A. Schiller, local manager for Atlanta and the Loew theaters in Birmingham and Memphis, upon receipt of a telegram from Marcus Loew Saturday, made the announcement that Mr. Loew has definitely decided to establish in the South an extensive cicuit covering a dozen or more cities.

Mr. Schiller also announced that Mr. Loew has decided definitely to build in Atlanta one of the most beautiful vaudevill and motion picture theaters in the South.

Mr. Schiller left Saturday night for Chicago, where he will hold a conference with Mr. Loew as to his plans for Loew's southern circuit and for the new Loew theater for Atlanta. It is likely that Mr. Schiller will be in position to make an announcement in some detail upon his return from Chicago.

W. L. Schmidt Goes to Paramount.

Atlanta, Ga.—W. L. Schmidt, former manager of Savoy theater, has taken service with the Southern Paramount Picture Corporation and is now in Mississippi, for that company.

Worth a Passing Glance.

Atlanta, Ga.—The Georgia Legislature has finished over half of its session and has been kind enough not to have introduce a bill of any nature detrimental to the motion picture industry.

Camp Harris, at Macon, Ga., has added to its amusement features moving pictures, much to the delight of the soldiers of the brigade.

U. T. Koch, one of the Southern Paramount Picture Company's representatives, left this week for a tour through Florida.

Pine Tree State Film News.

Bangor General Film Branch Notes.

Bangor, Me.—The Bangor branch of the General Film is teeming with activity after a comparatively quiet early summer period. Branch Manager Harry P. Smith is most enthusiastic over the program lined up for the fall season and is contracting with some of the leading Maine theaters for the same grade of service that the larger branches of the company are handling. Among the new subjects just being placed on the Maine market are "The American Girl," a Kalem series of 17 weeks' duration, 22 reels of O. Henry stories, the new four-reel Fortune features and the American War News Weekly. These, supplemented with the regular releases of the General, combine in making one of the most attractive programs offered the Pine Tree state exhibitors.

Earle B. Tinker, well known to Maine exhibitors, and one time connected with the Bangor General office, now personal representative of J. D. Levine, Boston branch manager of the company, is spending several days in Bangor in conference with Manager Smith in regard to the future policies of the branch.

Manager Smith, during his year's stay in Bangor, has made many friends among the local exhibitors, and they, like the Moving Picture World correspondent, will no doubt be pleased to learn that his efforts are getting results even in the face of severe competition and the hot weather.

Harry P. Smith Weds.

Bangor, Me.—Announcements have been received in Bangor of the marriage of Harry P. Smith, manager of the Bangor branch of the General Film Co., to Miss Frances Irene Bond, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Bond, of Revere, Mass., in Revere. The ceremony took place at the parochial residence of the Immaculate Conception church and was performed by the Rev. William Tierney. The bridesmaid was Miss Helen Bond, sister of the bride. Herbert Thurston was best man. A reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, where a dainty wedding supper was served. A squad of men from the Fifth company, C. A. N. G., of Chelsea, under command of Sergeant John H. Snow, furnished much entertainment. Mr. and Mrs. Smith spent their wedding trip in Montreal and are now residing in Bangor.

Canadian Picture Business and the War

W. A. Bach of the Toronto Universal Company Says That Film Men in the Dominion Have Not Risen to the Occasion as a Whole.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard Street, East Toronto, Ont.

TORONTO, ONTARIO.—After spending several weeks in New York City, during which time he had his experiences and views somewhat broadened through contact with big men of the American film industry, W. A. Bach, of Toronto, publicity and service supervisor of the Universal company, has rebuked the Canadian moving picture interests for their lack of attention to war matters. Bach says:

"By their business-like attitude, their reasonable demands and oft-expressed desire to cooperate with the Government, the moving picture men of the United States have made the legislative powers respect and admire the moving picture industry.

"In Canada, no concerted action has been taken by moving picture men to co-operate with the Government in the furtherance of the war. True we have paid our share of taxes, perhaps more than our share, but as for the industry as a whole offering its services and working with the Government, such has not been the case to date.

"The result is that the Government in Canada does not respect and admire the industry as [illegible] is held in the United States. Proof of this is found in the statements of men like the Hon. George P. Graham and the Hon Mr. Murphy, both of whom classed moving pictures with the saloons, billiard rooms, and other diversions of like nature in their remarks recently before the Canadian House.

"Moving pictures, it is contended by Mr. Bach, should not be classed with unnecessary luxuries and recreations. Clean, wholesome and educational recreations are essential to the welfare of the community and even more so in the present days of war and its attendant horrors. The industry has been urged to present a solid front, not against the Government, but with the Government, and to prove by its actions and cooperative efforts that it is an industry of such dimensions that the Government cannot afford to despise or neglect it or impose upon it."

Picture Show House for Wounded Soldiers.

Toronto, Ont.—Word has been given by the Dominion Hospitals Commission, Ottawa, that a large theater is being established for the Whitby Convalescent Hospital at Whitby, Ontario. The house will seat 1,000 people it is declared and the latest appliances for the projection of pictures are being installed. Moving pictures will be the main amusement dish served up to these somewhat isolated soldiers. The complaint was made some time ago that time was hanging rather heavily on the many wounded warriors at Whitby, but now the Government has come to the rescue.

Local 173 Elects Officers.

Toronto, Ont.—At the annual meeting of the Moving Picture Operators' Union, Local 173, Charles Dentelbeck, of the York theater, formerly vice-president of the Toronto local, was made president in succession to William Covert of the U-Cum theater, who becomes business agent and organizer. William Dineen, of the Strand theater, was elected vice-president and C. A. McMahon, of the Hippodrome, was re-elected to the post of secretary. Mr. Covert is also representative of the Toronto local to the District Trades' and Labor Council.

Secretary McMahon has just arranged a special question competition for all projection machine operators in Canada, with the conjunction of the Canadian Universal Film company. Two valuable prizes have been offered for the contest, the first of which is a solid gold watch and the second is a pair of field glasses, both of which will be suitably engraved. A series of some twenty questions will be asked. These will bear upon the practical requirements of the operating booth, equipment and allied subjects. The competition will not become a highly technical one, it is announced, nor will the contestants be confronted with difficult mathematical problems. Every contestant must be the holder of a moving picture operators' license and the competition is restricted to Canada. Replies must be mailed to Mr. McMahon within eight days after a question has been issued. The first question will be issued shortly.

Secretary McMahon will be the referee of the test.

Globe and Peerless Exchanges Merge.

Toronto, Ont.—The amalgamation of two exchanges of Canada has just occurred in the joining of the Globe Film Company, Ltd., with the Peerless Film Company. Harry Kauffman, formerly president of the Peerless company, and previously Montreal branch manager of the Famous Players, has become vice-president of the Globe. The president is Arthur Cohen, formerly manager of the Globe and Rialto theaters, Toronto. The Globe exchange will handle Ivan productions, "Mothers of France," Evelyn Nesbit Thaw's "Redemption," and other specials for the whole of Canada.

S. Taube Will Represent Goldwyn in Toronto.

Toronto, Ont.—S. Taube, for some time the Montreal branch manager of the Canadian Universal, has been appointed the special Toronto representative for Goldwyn productions by Regal Films, Ltd., Canadian distributors for the new brand. The Regent theater, Toronto, and the Patricia theater, London, Ont., have already closed for the whole Goldwyn series.

Arthur J. Reddv to Manage Montreal K-E-S-E.

Montral, Que.—Announcement has been made that Arthur J. Reddy, formerly with the General Film Company, Toronto, has been appointed Montreal manager for the K-E-S-E in succession to Arthur Larente, who was with Pathe and Mutual for several years.

Toronto, Ont.—Moving picture projection operators of Toronto are "pulling" for the appointment of Mr. Elliott of the Moving Picture Theater Department of the Ontario Government as chief inspector of theaters in succession to the late Robert C. Newman. Elliott is a former operator and is well versed in the electrical science. His practical knowledge of projection has made him a general favorite in Ontario film circles and he is looked upon as the logical successor to the important position now open.

Toronto, Ont.—Because there are now very few troops in training in Camp Borden, Ontario, the Strand theater, which constitutes the chief amusement center of the encampment, has been cut in half. The screen has been brought half way up the house, thus cutting the throw from 300 feet to 150 feet. The whole building seats 2,300 people, but under the present arrangement the seating capacity is now only about 1,000. If conscriptive measures are adopted by Canada, the camp will again have probably 32,000 troops. R. S. Marvin, manager of the Strand theater at Camp Borden, and of the summer picture theater at Angus, Ont., has been seriously ill in New York City.

City Council and Men in the Film Business Meet in Conference and Reach an Understanding on the Proposed Fire Prevention Ordinance.

From Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—Owners of motion picture theaters and film exchanges of this city have reached an agreement with members of the City Welfare Committee of the city council relative to changes in the proposed new ordinance governing the storage, handling and manufacture of motion picture films. The agreement was reached at a conference last week between representatives of the motion picture industry and the committee.

Following the hearing the motion picture men were advised to seek another conference with Jacob H. Hilkene, city building commissioner, to draw up changes in the proposed measure. It is expected that the revised ordinance will be introduced at the first meeting of the council in August.

Contrary to expectations and despite the stringent provisions of the measure, the motion picture men made only a few objections to it. They let it be known that they wished to assist the authorities in safeguarding life and property, and that they would be willing to conform with any reasonable objections.

On hearing the objections of the motion picture film exchange owners relative to the placing of sprinkler systems in buildings where large quantities of films are handled, the council committee decided to remove the provision, regarding the installation of a sprinkler system, from the ordinance. The proposed measure also provided that a wall of some fireproof material should be built between the vaults where films are stored and where the films are inspected. It was decided to also eliminate this provision, and to substitute a provision that the doors of all valuts should be equipped with self-closing fireproof doors.

The ordinance in its original form provided that it would be unlawful to store films in buildings housing theaters. It was pointed ouf that many of the motion picture theaters have been so constructed as to provide for film exchanges on the second floors of the buildings, and that the enforcement of such a provision would work a hardship on the owners of such properties. The council committee decided to permit the storage of films in buildings of this type, provided that great precautions would be taken in preventing fires.

The provision regarding the employment of a motion picture inspector at a salary of $90 a month was decided, and the motion picture men declared that a competent man should be employed for this position. They suggested that the inspector be paid $100 a month instead of $90 a month, and the members of the committee decided to recommend that change.

E. M. Sellers, manager of the Indiana Inspection bureau, and H. H. Friedley, Indiana state fire marshal, attended the meeting and explained the reasons for inserting some of the provisions in the proposed law. Mr. Friedley also explained to the motion picture men the nature of the fire prevention campaign that he has started throughout the state, and pointed out the importance of such a movement.

New Theater for Crawfordsville.

Crawfordsville, Ind.—The contract has been let for the construction of a modern motion picture theater here, the plans for which indicate that Crawfordsville is going to have one of the most up-to-date photoplay houses in the state. In all likelihood the name of the new house will be "The New Strand."

Realizing the growing need for such a theater in Crawfordsville, R. E. Grimes, manager of the Arc theater, has made arrangements to convert his present theater and the adjoining room, formerly occupied by the French tea room, into a large motion picture theater, with a seating capacity of at least 1,000. The contract for the work was let to Carr & Son, and work will be started immediately.

The new theater will be equipped with a balcony and a wide auditorium down stairs. The front of the place will be built in a manner similar to the Circle theater in Indianapolis and will have a canopy extended over the sidewalk at the entrance. The stage will be large enough so that vaudeville and stock company productions can be given if desired. The stage will be equipped with a full line of scenery, which will be used surrounding the screen.

The operating room for the motion picture machines will be constructed of hollow tile, making it an absolutely fireproof affair. Exits will be built on all sides of the theater, in the auditorium there will be two four-foot aisles, with a section of seats in the center and on each side. A novel system will be installed in the lobby and inside the house.

Manager Grimes has become affiliated with the National Exhibitors' circuit, which assures the patrons of the new theater of some of the best films made. Mr. Grimes has employed Lawrence Jenkins, of Louisville, Ky., as the leader of the new orchestra at the theater. In all probability the place will be ready to open about September 1.

Charles Spray Buys Princess Theater.

Frankfort, Ind.—The Princess theater, the motion picture house on the west side of the public square, has been sold by Joseph Lockwood to Charles Spray. Mr. Spray, who formerly operated motion picture theaters at Sheridan and Covington, took possession Monday. It is also reported here that deals are now pending for the purchase of the Blinn theater, owned by Sam Carlton, and the Royal theater, by a syndicate which Mr. Spray represents.

Operators of Evansville Win Better Scale.

Evansville, Ind.—By all of the big motion picture theater owners here signing the proposed new wage scale of the moving picture machine operators, the new scale will go into effect August 1. Nine hours will constitute a day for the operators, with an increase from $18 to $22 a week. The night men will get an increase from $12 to $13.50 and overtime at 50 cents an hour.

Cincinnati News Letter

From Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank, Cincinnati.

Airdome on Great Baseball Field.

CINCINNATI, O.—The warm weather which finally struck Cincinnati a short time ago, after the most abnormally cool summer the city has ever experienced, has illustrated again that it's an ill wind that blows nobody good. The regular houses have been helped to some extent by the continued cool weather, although bad weather tends on the whole to keep people at home, and therefore hurts business, but up to the recent belated start of summer the airdomes have been badly handicapped, as they have been the reverse of alluring with cold and rainy evenings the rule.

Now, however, they are all doing a rushing business, from the breezy roof of the Orpheum, where Manager Hettesheimer's "sky theater" is as popular as ever, to what is probably the largest airdome in the country, conducted at Redland Field by John J. Huebner, Jr. Mr. Huebner can claim a seating capacity of about 25,000, although a good many of these seats afford a slightly less desirable view of the screen, which is placed on the diamond, than of the ball games. Indications are that Cincinnati is now to have some summer weather, and with the airdome doing a big business and the downtown houses, with the fans and ventilating systems, offering cool comfort indoors, business should be fine for the exhibitors in spite of the heat.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

"Country Store" Night Again Causes Trouble.

Cincinnati, O.—The "country store" question has bobbed up again, the exhibitor now involved being John J. Huebner, Jr., who shows pictures at night at the Cincinnati ball park. He was recently arrested on a charge of violating the city's anti-gambling act by running a "country store" gift stunt in connection with his pictures, and it is to be decided whether this method of getting business and exciting interest is in fact to be classed as gambling, by reason of the drawing for prizes which is involved. The Juvenile Court has frowned on the stunt for some time, holding it tends to impart a gambling interest which is undesirable for children, but none of the other courts have so far indicated that they consider the rather innocuous idea of giving prizes to members of an audience to be in the same category as illegal gambling.

C. C. Hite Organizing Goldwyn Exchange.

Cincinnati, O.—C. C. Hite, who recently gave up the Triangle office in Cincinnati to become manager of the new Goldwyn office, is getting together an organization which promises to be a winner. One of the newest members of his staff is Nate Le Vene, Jr., who was formerly with the Mutual, working there for a time under Mr Hite. He will cover the entire Cincinnati territory with and for Manager Hite, including Ohio and West Virginia, and as he is well known to exhibitors in this section on account of his four years' service hereabouts, Mr. Hite looks for excellent results from him.

Lorain, Ohio, to Have New Theater.

Lorain, O.—A large and modern new theater is planned for the city by the Penfield Theater Co., recently organized by local men with a capital stock of $75,000. Among those interested in the enterprise are George and John Schenker, Wesley L. Grills, F. A. Newhall and C. J. Love.

Cincinnati, O.—One of the most successful of the Strand's recent offerings was the all-star Famous Players production of "What Money Can't Buy," a film version of the Broadhurst play, with Jack Pickford and Louise Huff in the leading parts, while such actors as Theodore Roberts, Hobart Bosworth and James Neill were in the supporting cast. Manager Libson has been handling capacity business pretty regularly at the Strand, which has decided advantages of location, and has been ever since its start one of the most popular houses in the downtown section.

Piqua, O.—The Princess reports excellent results with a showing of the film portraying the life of "Buffalo Bill" on its engagement a short time ago. The publication of the famous scout's autobiography in a popular periodical recently afforded a bit of special advertising for the film which helped materially, according to the management.

IN THE AUTOMOBILE CITY.

Charles Carlisle Dangerously Sick.

Saginaw, Mich.—Charles Carlisle, of the Mecca theater, Saginaw, is dangerously ill with heart trouble. We hope for his speedy recovery.

Among the Names on First Draft.

Detroit, Mich.—Among those hit by the selective draft in Detroit were A. I. Shapiro and Harry Zapp, Goldwyn; Lew Cohen, exhibitor, while W. C. Rowell, traveling for the Casino Feature Film Co., joined the Michigan National Guard.

Metro Service to Release Chaplin Comedies.

Messrs. Kunsky and Trendle, of the Kunsky Enterprises, have decided to release the new Charlie Chaplin comedies (which they secure by virtue of their affiliation with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit) through the Metro Film Service of Michigan, which they own.

Michigan Sabbatarians Would Close Shows.

Detroit, Mich.—Michigan need well be prepared during the ensuing two years for the proposed fight of the Michigan Baptists, who declare that when the legislature convenes in 1919 they are going to propose that theaters be closed on Sundays, are now getting ready for the fight. The officers of the Michigan Association of Exhibitors should get busy with a membership campaign and line up every theater owner in order that there can be the proper opposition to such drastic and unreasonable legislation.

Lew Foster Transferred to Cincinnati.

Detroit, Mich.—Lew Foster, for the past few months with Paramount in Detroit, and who did splendid work, has been transferred to Cincinnati as manager of sales of the Paramount-Artcraft exchange in that city. While Lew hated to leave Detroit he could hardly pass up such a big promotion.

J. V. Pearson New Triangle Manager.

J. V. Pearson has been appointed Triangle manager in Detroit to succeed W. C. Preller. Mr. Pearson has had considerable training in the film industry.

Sandusky Likes Bill Hart.

Sandusky, Ohio.—Over at Sandusky, Ohio, where the World correspondent spent one day last week, he learned that the whole town—comprising three houses—is booked by George J. Schade, proprietor of Schade's theater. In talking with Mr. Schade the World correspondent learned that the town is "Hart crazy." He is the only star for whom Mr. Schade raises his prices to 25 cents. "Well, how about Fairbanks and Pickford," the writer asked. "Oh, they go well, too, but not as well as Hart," came the response.

The Schade theater seats 700, and is one of the prettiest theaters in the state. The other two theaters in Sandusky are the Star and Plaza.

The Broadway-Strand theater, of which Mr. Garson is the managing director, has signed for first-run in Detroit on 52 Artcraft-Paramount pictures, including those featuring Douglas Fairbanks, Marguerite Clark, Pauline Frederick, the Griffith and DeMille productions and others. Each will play at least one full week. At present the Broadway-Strand is showing Fox pictures.

What Michigan Thinks of the Convention

Dissatisfaction with Manner in Which It Was Conducted—Ochs Not Thought to Be Man to Promote Harmony—Strong for the Association.

By Jacob Smith, 718 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—The Michigan visitors to the Chicago convention are now back home recalling the panorama of events that took place in the Windy City. There seems to be general dissatisfaction among the delegates from Michigan as to the method of carrying on the convention, inasmuch as the procedure methods were entirely contrary to parliamentary rules. This probably explains the reason why the Michigan delegation was solidly opposed to the re-election of Ochs, and why they refused to be affiliated with any organization that had such a man at the head

Few of the Michigan exhibitors know Lee Ochs personally, but they do not approve of the tactics he uses and they are very outspoken in the matter. They don't believe that an antagonist is the right man to be at the head of a national organization but rather the president should be a man who can keep the members together in harmony. This Ochs has not and does not seem able to do. Was it any wonder then that the Michigan delegation bolted along with many other states and decided to have their separate organization?

Michigan has two members on the board of directors of the National Exhibitors' Association, namely—S. A. Moran, of Ann Arbor (who is also president of the Michigan association) and Peter Jeup, of Detroit, formerly treasurer of the national organization.

The Michigan delegation to Chicago represented the following: King Perry, Luna theater; F. A. Schneider and E. V. McGrath, Stratford; Peter Jeup, Luna; Wallace Baker, Our; Mr. White, Beechwood; John Brennan, Cozy; Ben Cohen, Coliseum; John E. Niebes, Dawn; John H. Kunsky and George Trendle, Arthur D. Bacht, Crystal and William F. Klatt, Earl Hennessy and Will Richards, all of Detroit; George Wilbur, Wyandotte; Don Miller, Muskegon; Steve Springnett, Jackson; W. S. McLaren, Jackson; H. S. Gallup, Marquette; L. J. Jacobs, Escanaba; Mrs. Florence Signor, Ypsilanti; Col. W. S. Butterfield and Lipp & Cross, Battle Creek; Lew Barnes, Kalamazoo, and A. J. Moeller, Saginaw. Among the allied trades were J. O. Brooks, Madison Film exchange; ;George N. Montgomery, Metro; A. J. Reed, K-E-S-E; A. I. Shapiro, Harry Zapp and Richard Wernicke, Goldwyn; Leo Dennison; Henry Field and Julius Singer, Universal; L. J. Gardiner and A. P. Lombard, Gardiner Theater Equipment Co.; Ray Branch, United Theater Equipment Corp.; Harry S. Lorch, State Film Co.; A. W. Blankmeyer, Tri-State, and Jacob Smith, Moving Picture World.

Prominent Visitors in Detroit.

Detroit, Mich.—This city had a number of very distinguished visitors the week ending July 21. Among them were Adolph Zukor, president of Paramount; Marcus Loew, New York exhibitor; Aaron Jones, Chicago exhibitor; James Steele, district manager for Paramount; Louis J. Selznick and M. H. Hoffman, of New York City.

Selznick-Garsen Suit Again Postponed.

Detroit, Mich.—The Selznick-Garson suit has again been postponed—this time until Saturday, August 4. It is understood that Selznick offered to buy out the Harry I. Garson productions and then to establish his own exchange in Detroit, but nothing of the kind has been consummated.

Geo. W. Weeks a Four-Square Official.

Detroit, Mich.—Another big change in Detroit film circles—George W. Weeks, formerly division manager for Universal, and recently manager for Bluebird in Michigan and Northern Ohio, has resigned to become division manager for M. H. Hoffman, who has Four-Square pictures. Mr. Weeks is succeeded as Bluebird manager by W. W. Drum, who, for the past two years, has been associated with the World Film on the Pacific Coast.

Joseph Kaliska Gets Special Department

Detroit, Mich.—There has been a change and a promotion at the Detroit branch of the Fox Film Corp. Jos. Kaliska, who recently came as manager, succeeding Neil Kingsley, has been promoted to manager of the Special Department handling the Fox-Standard pictures, while J. M. Erickson, recently of New York, has been appointed manager of the program department.

No Smoking in Michigan Projection Booths.

Detroit, Mich.—A representative of the state fire marshal's office visited the World office the other day and requested that attention be called to the Michigan law which prevents absolutely any smoking in projection booths. A number of complaints have reached the fire marshal's office that operators were smoking. Exhibitors are cautioned to keep their eye on the operator's booths and to prevent smoking. An ounce of prevention is surely worth a pound of cure. The law is there and should be obeyed. Its purpose is to protect the property of the exhibitor and that of his neighbors. There is nothing to be gained by permitting operators to smoke. The projection room is no place for such habits.

Harry Zapp and Richard Wernick to Travel for Goldwyn.

Detroit, Mich.—A. I. Shapiro, Goldwyn manager in Michigan, announces the appointment of Harry Zapp and Richard Wernick as traveling representatives. Mr. Zapp was formerly with Paramount, Fox and Casino Feature Film Co., while Mr. Wernick comes direct from the Selznick organization, having been with them a year. Previously he was for 18 months with Fox through the east, and at one time had his own feature film company. His experience in the film business has been both in the United States and England.

Harry Zapp and Richard Wernick.

Palace at Saginaw Changes Hands.

Saginaw, Mich.—The Palace theater in Saginaw, one of the prettiest houses in the state, which has had more or less of a checkered career since it was built, has been taken over by Messrs. Forrest and Oppenheimer, who now operate the Mecca in that city. They have signed for first-run Artcraft and Paramount in town, and will show them at the Palace.

In Minneapolis After the Convention

Local Delegates to League Convention Bring Back Honors—David G. Rogers Is National Organizer—Will Make Excursion Tour in East.

By John L. Johnston, 704 Film Exchange Building, Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—The return of exhibitors and exchangemen from the Chicago festivities and the draft have caused some slight flutter in the local sea of film news and it may be that some of the future changes hereabouts will not be entirely because of desires of film men but more likely because of Uncle Sam's direction.

The draft has not hit local exchanges and exhibitors as hard as in many other cities, but nevertheless the iron hand of war has grasped a sufficent number of film men. William K. Howard, youthful manager of the Minnesota Metro service and Mannie Gottlieb, former manager of the Favorite exchange and now engaged in the launching of the exchange branch of the United Theaters Co., were among the prominent local film men to be called in the first draft. Arthur Lund, Earl C. Sly, Lew Francis and more than a score of other film men have also been honored with selection.

The Minnesota delegation to the Chicago convention returned to the Twin Cities apparently none the worse for exposure to Chicago's extreme heat or the heat of the convention. Nearly all of the Minnesota delegates returned home as members of some national committee and David G. Rodgers returned as national organizer, succeeding Fred Herrington of Pittsbugh. Mr. Rodgers plans an extensive tour of the East beginning next week.

Among the late arrivals at Chicago from the Twin Cities were: Joseph E. Schwartzbine, Pathe; Neton Davis, Universal; Al Steffes, Northern theater; R. E. Bishop, Vitagraph; Harry Graham, K-E-S-E; George W. Malone, Metro; W. K. Howard, Metro; William A. Lochren, Lochren service, of Minneapolis, and Mr. and Mrs. Henry J. Breilein of the Breilein theaters, St. Paul.

One could never expect such a "peppy" manager as Mr. Howard to stand for the street car stuff very long.

Dan Michalove at Triangle Helm.

Minneapolis, Minn.—At last the new manager of the local Triangle exchange has been selected and, to be sure, he's the same gentleman that has been doing the manager's work for three weeks bearing the title of special representative. Dan Michalove is the successor to R. E. Bishop as the Triangle executive. Mr. Michalove comes here from the South where he has had experience at the Lynch and Paramount exchanges of Atlanta and Dallas.

That's the Kind of Fisherman He Is.

George "Governor" Malone, salesman for the Metro exchange has been spending his vacation and some loose change in what he calls "Southern Michigan, fishing." We saw "the Governor" in Chi. Saturday last and expect that he will return home with some Chicago trout or in other words "Southern Lake Michigan fishing." As a fisherman Malone is a darn good film salesman.

At the Twin City Exchanges.

Minneapolis, Minn.—R. E. Bishop, former manager of the Triangle exchange and more recently salesman for the local Greater Vitagraph exchange has resigned his position and is now in Chicago "looking around."

James V. Bryson who controls the Northwest rights for "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" has returned from a nine weeks' trip through Wisconsin and reports that the under sea feature is enjoying good business all through the Badger territory.

D. M. Karalis has resigned as auditor of the Pathe exchange here and has been succeeded by M. Mainen, formerly of the Omaha Pathe branch.

C. A. Novotony of the Palace Theater Co., of Waterloo, Iowa, while spending his vacation in the Twin Cities last week secured the Iowa agency for Teco products from the Theater Equipment Co., here and also bought the entire stock of the American Theater Equipment Co. from O. H. Dutton, of Minneapolis.

R. C. Harper has sold the Grand theater at Enderlin, N. D., to James Moran and has joined the United States Hospital Corps in Minneapolis.

Dan C. McClellan of the Supreme exchange has returned from a long tour of Iowa with "Civilization" and reports film conditions generally good despite the heat.

Walter H. Stafford, former manager of the Minneapolis Mutual exchange, is now in Chicago and expects to line up shortly with the Jones, Linick & Schaefer interests.

Bright Spots from Film Land Hereabouts.

Sprague Greene, former manager of the New Garden theater, Minneapolis, and Rex theater, St. Paul, Minn., is now looking after one of Alfred Hamburger's theaters in Chicago he informed the writer at the convention last week.

Manager Arthur Gossell of the New Unique has begun a four-day run of Triangle's "Flame of the Yukon" with Dorothy Dalton and the film has created more favorable comment amongst film fans than any the New Unique has run in some time.

Billy Moran and George Wilson, two clever local lobby artists have purchased the Strand studios from James A. Keough and are continuing their work in the same quarters in the Jewelers' Exchange building. Mr. Moran came to Minneapolis recently from Chicago and together with Mr. Wilson he has brought before the local theater-going public undoubtedly the most artistic lobby displays it has ever seen.

Stars Will Grace Iowa's Fall Convention

National Association of the Industry Promises Its Support to Local Trade Body and Will Send Stars to Next Convention.

By Dorothy Day, Register-Tribune, Des Moines, Ia.

DES MOINES, IA.—It was officially announced that the officers of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry had promised Iowa a splendid showing of stars and their earnest support at the meeting to be held in Des Moines the first week in October, or about that time.

The first number of the official organ of the Iowa Industry was published the first of July under the title of the Industrial Magazine. The little magazine is edited and published by John J. Clark, of the Clark theater in Bedford, Ia. Hugh Bennet is acting as publicity manager. The slogan is "Real Action by Reel Fellows" and it is sold at the rate of 50 cents a year if paid in advance. The magazine is of value to the exhibitor.

Fire in Unique Theater.

Des Moines, Ia.—On Sunday, the fifteenth, a bad fire was discovered in one of the dressing rooms, back stage, in the Unique theater here. Before Manager Wagner and assistants could get the fire department there, the screen, shadow box and ornamental decoration on the front of the room were badly damaged. It was ten o'clock when the fire was discovered, but by calling in a number of electricians, all lights in the house having been cut off, the Unique was enabled to open its doors at twelve o'clock to the Sunday crowd.

New Manager at Majestic Makes Improvements.

Des Moines, Ia.—Manager O'Hare of the Majestic has put in a new Gold Fibre screen and correcting his projection in very marked degree. Now a perfect picture is obtained. Mr. O'Hare has redecorated the stage with white side trellis work, covered with vines. At the footlights he has installed a beautiful flower box, softly illuminated by dim lights. The whole effect is most pleasing. Mr. O'Hare is making the Majestic into a most desirable photoplay house.

Marty Williams Leaves for Kansas City.

Des Moines, Ia.—Marty Williams, formerly manager of the Standard Film office in this city, left Friday, the 19th, for Kansas City, where at the home office of the Standard he will supervise the distribution of the Billy West comedies. Marty was always a consistent booster for anything and everything that would benefit the industry and always had a helpful and pleasant line of talk for everyone. Kansas City film people lamented his departue to Des Moines and now it is Des Moines people's turn.

Two Successful Iowa Exhibitors in City.

Des Moines, Ia.—W. A. Middleton of the Rex in Iowa Falls was a Des Moines visitor recently. Mr. Middleton has operated the Rex in Iowa Falls for three years this August. While there are but two houses in that little city, there were formerly three. The Rex is an attractive little house, seating 350 people comfortably. He changes his program every day, making it a practice to bring back the good ones in from two to three weeks. He runs the Triangle, Pathe and Mutual. Hart and Fairbanks are the big favorites in Iowa Falls, he says, while Pearl White has a wide following. He opened the Rex with "The Perils of Pauline" and has run a Pearl White serial as often as he could get them, to capacity houses. He witnessed the opening of "The Fatal Ring" in the Pathe projection room Saturday, having already booked the serial, sight unseen. Mr. Middleton is a good-natured fellow who knows his business from A to Z, and has made a success.

The other successful exhibitor is Mrs. C. F. Erickson, of the Empress in Cedar Falls, who was a caller at the Blank office. Mrs. Erickson, with her husband, son and daughter, operates the Empress by themselves. The Empress is a beautiful little house seating 550 easily. They show the Selznick pictures whenever possible to capacity houses and furnish remarkably good music, in fact the Empress can boast of one of the finest motion picture orchestras in the city. Five members of the Musical Faculty of the Iowa State Teachers' College in Cedar Falls come down to the Empress and play for two hours every evening. The Ericksons have operated the Empress for a little more than a year and it can be classed as one of the most successful houses in the state.

Iowa Visitors at Chicago Week of Convention.

Des Moines, Ia.—D. B. Lederman, manager of the local Universal office, and Zach Harris, owner of the Iowa rights to "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," attended the convention. While in Chicago Lederman purchased the Iowa rights for "Come Through" and "Should She Obey?"

L. A. Sheridan, of the local Pathe office, spent a couple of days early in the week at the convention. He was accompanied by E. E. McVicar of the Pathe sales force.

C. C. Quinn, owner of the Iowa theater in Emmettsburg, motored to the convention. He is going from Chicago to Wisconsin on a pleasure tour. A card from him, received at the Pathe office, testified to the good time he is enjoying.

N. C. Rice, one of the foremost of the insurgent exhibitors at the recent formation of the Iowa Motion Picture Industry, also took in the convention.

R. S. Ballantyne, manager of the local Mutual exchange, attended a conference of the Mutual exchange managers in Chicago the week of the convention.

Des Moines Visitors and Trade News.

Des Moines, Ia.—Orpha Keeney, manageress of the Palace theater in Carlisle, was in Des Moines last week, calling at the Pathe.

Herbert J. Billings, salesman for the local Pathe office, is just recovering from a serious illness. Billings was confined to the Mercy Hospital in Cedar Rapids for two weeks and has just returned to his work.

L. C. Williams, manager of the Play House in Cambridge, was a Pathe caller last week, and Frank E. Bryant, of the Plaza in Waterloo, motored to Des Moines the latter part of last week and called on the various exchanges.

Mrs. Ella Farrand, secretary at the Pathe exchange, has resigned from her position to make her home in Denver. Mrs. Farrand has been with the local Pathe office ever since it opened some three yeas ago. Her sister-in-law, Miss Blanche Farrand, will take her place. Mrs. Farrand has become a close friend of the motion picture people of Des Moines and will be missed.

Joe Gerbracht, of the Star theater in Ames, drove down to the A. H. Blank office a few days ago to inquire about the Chaplin comedies. Gerbracht is only one of the many Iowa exhibitors who are anxiously awaiting the first Chaplin release on the Exhibitors' Circuit, the first of October.

H. H. Russell, of the Humboldt opera house in Humboldt, was in the city last week making the rounds of the exchanges.

C. C. Mendenhall, whose continued illness has been the source of great anxiety among his many friends over the state, is reported much improved this week.

A. Kahn, salesman for the A. H. Blank Enterprises, just returned from a most successful tour over his territory in the eastern part of the state.

It is understood that M. A. Hoffman, president of the Four Square Pictures Corporation, is planning placing an office in Des Moines.

M. J. Frisch, branch booker at the local Pathe office, combined business with pleasure and spent a day or two in Webster City with relatives and friends. Upon his arrival he got in touch with the newspapers and screened the opening chapters of the "Battle of the Somme" at the Orpheum. In addition to the War pictures Mr. Frisch booked "Patria" with the Orpheum management and on the train going to Webster City he succeeded in placing "The Fatal Ring" at the opera house in Kamrar. Mr. Frisch is one live Pathe booster.

MORE KANSAS CITY NOTES.

By Kansas City News Service.

New State Law Indirectly Affects Exhibitors.

Paola, Kan.—Kansas exhibitors are up against a new trouble now, because of another state law passed by the latest legislature. This law had nothing to say about moving picture theaters; but it affects them indirectly just the same.

This law is the so-called nine-hour legislation, which says that no female shall be employed in any mercantile establishment in Kansas for more than ten hours a day, and shall not work more than nine hours of such day; except that they may be employed for a twelve-hour day once a week if they are not required to work more than nine hours of such 12-hour day. And no woman can work after 9 o'clock at night.

Here is the way it hits the moving picture theaters: Saturday evenings are busy times in the smaller towns of Kansas as well as in cities. On Saturday evenings, the visitors to town, like to go to the picture shows, either after an afternoon of shopping, or on their arrival from a Saturday afternoon of work. And they have formed the habit of dropping into the stores after the show. This late evening shopping has been profitable for the merchants. But it is now hard trade to handle, for the women and girls, the cashiers, and many of the clerks, have to quit at 9 o'clock.

The issue is therefore becoming direct between the merchants and the moving picture theaters. The shoppers have to get their buying done before 9 o'clock, or run the risk of not getting waited on—and there is a campaign in many towns backed by the state welfare commission and promoted by women's organizations, to urge people to do their shopping early in the evening. The shoppers naturally drift around until 9 o'clock, and many of them find it then too late to go to the second show at the theater, if a second show is given.

In the aggregate, the law may make a considerable cut in the business of Kansas theaters.

Jack Roth, former Fox salesman, has been added to the salesforce of the Kansas City Feature Film Company. He has already left on a long trip in Southern Kansas and Northern Oklahoma.

Division Manager Visits Branch.

San Francisco, Cal.—H. D. Naugle, western division manager of the Greater Vitagraph, paid the local office a visit recently. He was well satisfied with the showing made by this branch, for in spite of the heat in the interior, and the closing of several theaters of good size, Manager Quive was able to report the largest business ever done at this office.

Old Time Exhibitor Retires.

Berkeley, Cal.—C. L. Mehrten, who has conducted the Varsity Theater on San Pablo Avenue for several years, has disposed of this house to Roeder & Lange and expects to locate shortly on a ranch in Northern California. He is one of the pioneer exhibitors of the State, having started in the business more than thirteen years ago with a road show, and for years was treasurer of the State League. He owns a theater building at Mill Valley, which has been leased, and hopes to dispose of this at an early date.

Heat Closes Many California Theaters

Middle July Sees Exhibitors From Other Parts of the State Coming to San Francisco for Holiday and Fall Business Arrangements.

From T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—The past week has witnessed an influx of exhibitors from out-of-town points such as has never been seen before and film exchanges have done a large booking business. The immediate cause of the great rush of exhibitors to this city was the unprecedented intensity and duration of the heat wave that held the southern part of the state, together with the great interior valleys, in its grip for much of July. Following the intense hot spell in June enormous damage has been done to growing crops, especially oranges, and many exhibitors have found it advisable to close their theaters for the time being. In Imperial Valley almost unbelievable heat has been experienced and many persons have died from the effects of it, while the [illegible] cities in the south have been smothering for weeks. At San Francisco temperatures have not reached the ninety degree mark this season and visitors are arriving literally by the thousands daily to secure a respite from the heat.

Among the exhibitors who have been here during the past two weeks to enjoy the cool ocean breezes and to arrange for fall bookings have been: A. A. Richards, Tokay theater, Lodi; C. N. Williams, Fresno; M. R. Parra, Fresno; E. Howell, Porterville; A. H. Chamberlin, Madera; A. A. Berard, Modesto; L. H. Killingsworth, St. Helena; P. J. Rourke, San Anselmo; "Candy" Howard, Oroville; Charles Goddard, Sacramento; I. F. Morris, Sacramento; J. C. Dieppenbrock, Sacramento; C. F. Morse, Empire theater, San Jose; Gillein & Newell, Stockton; L. Frietas, Stockton; Mr. Van Buren, Oakdale; Mrs. May Pettengill, Eureka; P. [illegible], Eureka; W. E. Norton, Montague; O. C. Peters, Gridley; Frank Atkins, Marysville; A. K. Adelberg, Marysville; R. Pezzaglia, Rio Vista; Mr. Alexander, Fort Bragg; Wood & Williams, Grass Valley; W. J. Clark, Martinez; W. D. Martin, Modesto; C. H. Douglas, Merced; S. Enea, Pittsburgh; L. Williams, Santa Cruz; T. C. Reavis, Santa Rosa; E. J. Miller, Williams; Glenn Hurst, Reno, Nev., and J. Di Stasio, Sacramento.

Progressive Exchange Expanding.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Progressive Motion Picture Company, which distributes the Paramount and Artcraft programs through the Pacific Coast, has been compelled to enlarge its quarters in the Pacific building on account of the recent increases in business and has taken over a number of additional offices. This concern is about ready to break into the Portland field with a branch exchange and C. M. Hill, who has been assisting Manager Herman Wobber during the absence of J. W. Allen in the Orient, will go north to open this office early in August. Mr. Allen has returned from his long trip with a fund of useful information concerning conditions in the Far East and the steps that will be necessary to make in order to build up a successful export business.

Attempt Made to Picket Theater.

San Francisco, Cal.—Although there is an anti-picketing ordinance in effect in San Francisco, W. A. Cory, of the Cory theater on Union street, asserts that an attempt was made recently to evade the law and annoy the patrons of this house. Cory Bros., who conduct the house, have always done their own operating, thus doing away with the need of a union operator, but it is alleged by the operators that at times a non-union man is employed there. Recently a picket appeared, the ordinance being evaded by the display of a paper supposed to recount the trouble and to be for sale. Mr. Cory tried to buy a copy, but the picket refused to sell it and the argument resulted in a free-for-all and the unlimbering of heavy artillery which sent both combatants to the rear for first aid.

Frazier Joins Goldwyn Staff.

San Francisco, Cal.—J. L. Frazier, for some time with the Mutual Film Corporation at Salt Lake City, has resigned his position with this concern and affiliated himself with the local Goldwyn office, which is about ready for business. Mr. Frazier has been an exhibitor for fourteen years. Upon joining the Mutual organization he was located for a short time at Phoenix, Ariz., and was later transferred to the Salt Lake City branch. His former position is being filled by James A. Stanley, well known for his work with the North American Film Company.

Selznick Offices Being Improved.

San Francisco, Cal.—The offices of Lewis J. Selznick in the Easton building on Market street have proved so satisfactory that it has been decided to remain here, instead of attempting to secure a place on Golden Gate avenue, as planned. More vault room is being provided, office partitions are being put in and permanent quarters fitted up. District Manager Ben S. Cohen is making an auto trip to Los Angeles and will return to this city only after the Denver and Seattle branches have been visited.

Popular Film Man in Hospital.

San Francisco, Cal.—Nat. A. Magner, of the film distributing company bearing his name, recently underwent a serious operation in St. Luke's Hospital for complaint of long standing. When the operation was performed it was found that he was in worse condition than was anticipated. He has sold most of his sort reels and is now handling feature films almost exclusively, the business being in charge of his partner, Reuben Cohen, during his illness. His latest acquisition, "The Bar Sinister," has been booked over the entire Turner & Dahnken Circuit and will be shown for two weeks at the Tivoli, with a chorus of eight colored singers. Mr. Cohen has also arranged for the presentation of "Beware of Strangers" at a downtown house for the second time.

Expressman's Strike Almost Ties Up Film

By J. S. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

SEATTLE, Wash.—The express drivers' strike which was called more than a week ago came very near being more disastrous to the motion picture business than the street car employes' strike. Seattle's twenty-five exchanges faced the problem of getting their film to the trains without the aid of the express companies or of letting their exhibitors go without shows. As the latter alternative was out of the question, the exchange managers put their heads together and decided on a cooperative course of action. J. A. Koerpel, manager of the World office, volunteered to drive one of the express wagons and deliver the film for all exchanges in his immediate part of town; and the express company agreed to this plan. Mr. Koerpel found that, according to the rules of the union, he could do this without antagonizing them, since he was an employer.

Several managers in other part of town donated the use of their private cars to the delivery of their own and their neighbors' film. George Endert, manager of Pathe, turned his car into a delivery wagon for the exchanges in the Central building, and Al. Rosenberg, of De Luxe Features, delivered for the offices in the extreme north end of town, except Univesal, which boasts a delivery truck of its own.

So far not a single exhibitor has missed a show because of the strike.

Street Car Strike Hits Seattle Downtown Theaters for First Day or Two.

Seattle, Wash.—When conductors and motormen on all cars of the Puget Sound Light, Power and Traction Company, which operates Seattle's street car lines except one, called a strike on July 17th, it killed the downtown picture theater business for one day, at least. The jitney busses had just been ruled off the streets two days before, on account of a suit being brought against them by the traction company; and Seattle residents who did not own motor cars had no way of getting downtown except walking. The consequence was that the big downtown motion picture houses looked pitifully empty. On the second day of the strike, however, the judge who was trying the case against the jitneys gave them permission to operate until the strike was called off; so the downtown motion picture business resumed normal proportions after a day or two, when people got used to the new-order of things. The strike has continued for four days at this writing with no settlement in sight. The neighborhood houses have, however, been prospering during the mix-up. It's an ill wind that blows nobody good, even in the picture business.

Coliseum's Jazz Band Makes Hit.

Seattle, Wash.—Manager E. D. Tate of the Coliseum has introduced something entirely new to Seattle motion picture patrons in the person of "Chief Constable Si Pukkins" and his "Jazz Band." In announcing in the newspapers the inauguration of the "Jazz Band" on Sunday, July 15, J. O. Hovick, advertising manager, promised "Fourteen (14) musicians, every one an artist, playing the sole-tickling, syncopated, hyphenated tintintabulations of our present-day masters of razzin', frazzin', jazzin', 'Jaz Band' music. Directed by Chief Constabule Si Pukkins."

Althouh Mr. Hovick kept the identity of the "Jazz Band" enshrouded in dark mystery, it was none other than the Coliseum Orchestra that had been treating Seattle folk to classical music all winter and spring, and Constabule Si Pukkins was Herr Adelmann, their conductor. They were all dressed as rubes, and the music they rendered was the kind that you just could not listen to and keep your feet still. It is making a big hit with the majority of Coliseum patrons.

Baker, Ore.—J. P. Cotter, formerly of the firm of Haish and Cotter, has bought out Mr. Haish's interest in three of the theaters in Baker, and the only one left, one which belongs to Mr .Haish, has been closed for the summer.

Seattle, Wash.—The De Luxe Feature Film Company is making a special offer to exhibitors of the Northwest of twelve of their big five- and seven-reel subjects at reduced prices for the summer. "Four Minute Men" Organize Here.

Spokane, Wash.—National needs and achievements during the course of the war are to be presented to Spokane moving picture patrons in four-minute speeches during the war. This plan was decided upon at a meeting of Spokane business men and attorneys and a company of "Four Minute Men" to deliver the addresses was partially organized.

This is in connection with the national movement and George Creel will furnish the topics and censor the prepared speeches.

War Pictures in Demand in Spokane.

Spokane, Wash.—Patriotism is running high in Spokane at the present time, and aside from donating heavily to the Red Cross and for Liberty Bonds the people rush in crowds to see any war feature pictures. This was also true of the "official British War Pictures" shown at the Clemmer theater July 18 to 21, which pictures are being distributed under the direction of W. K. Vanderbilt through the Pathe exchange. The pictures drew large audiences at each performance.

"A Modern Babylon" Shown.

Spokane, Wash.—"A Modern Babylon, Depicted by the Movies," proved a good attraction at the Hippodrome theater. Many Spokane people obtained, in this manner, an impression of New York City by day and by night.

Patrons Brave the Heat.

Portland, Ore.—W. E. Tebbetts, Alhambra theater, is an ardent admirer of Douglas Fairbanks, so he puts a lot of enthusiasm into exploiting the famous gloom dispeller. With the Road Men.

Portland, Ore.—R. H. Allan, representative for Greater Vitagraph, stationed here, reports a profitable trip through the Willamette Valley and the South to the state line. He advises that there is very little of the customary summer "holler" among the valley exhibitors this year and that in the Coos Bay country things are excellent.

Jos. Deitch, representing K-E-S-E in this territory, was also a returned traveller from the eastern district, journeying as far as Butte. He stated that business was entirely satisfactory in spite of the hot weather that prevailed in the section he visited.

Distributors Lose Much Oregon Business

Long Distances Make Business Dealings Awkward and Withdrawal of Exchanges from Local Field Shows Marked Decrease in Contracts.

By Abraham Nelson, Majestic Theater Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—Those exchanges which have withdrawn their offices from Portland during the past two years have suffered a heavy loss in business in the Oregon territory, although it was argued when they withdrew that business could be handled just as well from Seattle. That they are doing a minimum business here now is the opinion of exhibitors who formerly did business with them and is not merely prattle of competitors.

The General Film, the last to withdraw from Portland, is a most striking example of this condition. The number of accounts of this firm in the Oregon territory have dropped to a degree that is a matter of open comment among Portland exhibitors. One exhibitor ventured that G. F.'s business in Oregon had dropped to a small per cent. of what it was when the company was establisned in Portland.

It is clear to Oregon exhibitors that the loss of business is not due directly to any fault of the Seattle office, which now serves the territory, but is caused to a large extent by the same unsatisfactory long-distance shipment system that other exchanges have so long unsuccessfully tried to maintain in this district.

Oregon is not the only state in which business has declined by reason of withdrawal of exchange facilities. In Montana, where an exchange has left Butte, the same rule follows, the road men say.

However, several distributors have come to see the advantage of Portland's central location. The establishment of a Paramount and Artcraft exchange is assured and during a recent visit of Mike Rosenberg, plans were discussed for the establishment of a branch of the De Luxe Feature Film Company here.

Baker Theaters Spruce Up.

Portland, Ore.—J. P. Cotter, controlling the Orpheum, Empire and Grand theaters at Baker, Ore., was a visitor in Portland recently and told of a number of improvements he was making in his theaters preparatory to an increase of fall business. He is remodelling the fronts of the Orpheum and Empire and plans to fit the lobbies of both houses with real metropolitan ideas.

The Orpheum is having a new steam plant installed, also a new organ, which, Mr. Cotter says, will be the finest in this part of the state.

Mr. Cotter is a vice-president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oregon.

Some Exchange Inconsistencies.

Portland, Ore.—Four suburban exhibitors met in the rooms of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oregon one day and compared notes. A feature of a well-known brand which has been circuiting in the state recently was under discussion. One exhibitor frankly admitted that he only paid $7.50 for two days for this picture. Another shouted he had been held up. Why, he had been charged $20 for two days for the same picture! The same feature had cost another exhibitor $10; all the exhibitors were getting the picture about the same time and operating about the same class of theaters.

The League room is becoming a great place to exchange trade secrets for the exhibitors' benefit.

Kelso Has Local Troubles.

Kelso, Wash.—To be compelled to pay to the municipality a license fee of $80 for a theater of about 250 capacity as long as the price of admission is not over 10 cents, and then to have to pay $2.50 a night additional license when more than 10 cents is charged, for a feature, for example, is what E. R. Peck, of the Edison theater here must contend with. The condition discourages high-class entertainment in the town and has worked such a hardship on Mr. Peck that he is compelled to close his house occasionally.

Ed. Hudson Gives a Box Party.

Portland, Ore.—The accompanying photograph shows who comprised the box party given by Ed. Hudson, representative for Triangle, to some of the Rose City film fraternity at the recent opening of the Liberty theater. Reading from left to right there is: H. D. Green, Majestic; Frank Lacey, Sunset; W. E. Tebbetts, Ayhambra; F. M. Simonton, Mutual; Ed. Hudson (with his arms folded) Triangle; C. W. Meighan, Peoples; Guy Robinson, Yeager; John A. Portland, Ore.—The following theaters have been reported closed for the summer: Oakland theater, Oakland, Ore., and the Mutual and Broadway theaters, Portland.

Pendleton, Ore.—In spite of the heat at 107 degrees at times, Greulioh & Matlock are doing a nice business in their three theaters and may open the Arcade in the fall.

Hillsboro, Ore.—O. Phelps, Liberty theater, has been touring the Willamette Valley with a war lecturer.

Zeb Hunker, a wise village constable, jumps to the conclusion that the young fellow is a spy. One night Zeb follows Stephen to his cottage and the young man, surprised at seeing him peeking in the window, points a gun at the constable who, badly frightened, disappears. Stephen laughs while Zeb tells his companions that the city fellow was about to fire when he saw his badge and dropped the gun.

One day Stephen sends a message to his firm saying that he is working hard on the fortification grounds. Zeb makes the boy give up the message. His suspicions being confirmed, he rushes madly to the fort and tells the commander that a spy is making sketches. Stephen is arrested. Zeb seizes the drawings and thrusts them in front of the commander's face. The latter drops back bewildered as he finds himself looking at a sketch of a new corset. Not long after, a new chauffeur appears across the street who is soon making love to her. He teaches her to drive the automobile and takes particular interest in Nora's descriptions of her mistress's wonderful jewelry. One bright moonlight night Ferdinand takes Nora to ride, incidentally taking with him a priceless rug from the hall. He speeds up and they go at break-neck speed. Nora begs him to stop, only to discover that her hero is a common thief running away with her mistress' jewels.

Nora drops the rug and when the chauffeur goes back for it she drives off, meets a motorcycle cop, tells her story and they return in time to apprehend her former idol just as he is making his getaway. In the policeman Nora finds the man of her heart.

BROADWAY STAR FEATURE.

THE COMING OUT OF MAGGIE (One of the O. Henry Series—Two Parts).— The cast: Maggie Toole (Miss Nellie Spencer); Dempsey Donovan (Mr. Carlton King). Directed by Martin Justice.

Maggie Toole of the east side is no belle. She is unsought and unsung for by the gallant of the Give and Take Association, which each Saturday night holds a dance for the girls of Rhinegold's paper-box factory. Maggie's hero is Dempsey Donovan, the valiant leader, who wears a dress suit—sometimes. But Dempsey is far beyond poor Maggie's reach, until—

Well, one Saturday Maggie blossoms in with the grandest specimen of dandified manhood ever seen in the district. Terry O'Sullivan, she calls him. After the stranger has danced twice with Dempsey's paper-box factory girl—trouble is in sight. Dempsey, one of "Big Mike" O'Sullivan's lieutenants, ascertains that the latter does not know Terry O'Sullivan. So Dempsey picks a fight, and takes "Terry" to a rear room, where private grudges are settled.

Maggie, learning of this, is panic-stricken. She breaks into the room just in time to catch "Terry's" arm upraised with a stiletto to strike Dempsey. "I knew it, Dempsey," she wails. "His name is Tony Spinelli! Tony and his cheese-cutter are kicked out, and poor Maggie starts to cry. Dempsey, with an altogether new gentleness in his manner, takes one of Maggie's hands and say, "I'll see you home, Mag. And how about next Saturday? Will you come to the hop with me if I call around?" "With you?" she stammers, "Say—will a duck swim?"

THE GHOST OF THE DESERT (Last episode of "The American Girl"—Two Parts).—The cast: Madge King (Marin Sais); Roger King her father (Frank Jonasson); Larry Kerwin (Edward Hearn); Henry Burbank (Frank M. Clark); "Devil" Dorgan (R. E. Bradbury); Piute (Edward Clisbee); Sam Grice (Karl Formes); The Sheriff (Hart Hoxie). Directed by James W. Horne.

Larry Kerwin, the superintendent of the industrial interests of Roger King, asks King for the hand of his daughter, Madge. Upon King's consent, Henry Burbank, a ranchman from a neighboring town, arrives at King's ranch and proposes that they pool their cattle interests. During the discussion, an arrow is shot into the room. Examining the arrow, they find attached to it a note which reads: "The desert has given up its dead. Beware!" Burbank appears visibly affected by the note.

The following morning Sam Grice, a neighboring rancher, informs King that he has just seen "Devil" Dorgan! Burbank explains that such a thing is impossible since, when he was sheriff twenty years ago, he captured Dorgan, who was then a bandit, and killing him after an attempted escape, he buried him in the desert where he fell.

At this point a strange Indian sneaks through the bushes nearby and shoots an arrow into the side of a shed. Attached to the arrow is a note which Burbank gets and reads: "Follow the Indian or I will come." He tries to conceal his intention, but Madge sees him sneak off after the Indian, and she follows him.

The Indian leads Burbank to a shack in the woods, where he finds "Devil" Dorgan. "You sent for me—what do you want?" Burbank asks. Dorgan says he came back because he needs money. He demands five thousand dollars. Burbank leaves for town to get that amount.

On his way to town, Burbank meets King and Larry, and retraces his steps. They follow him to Dorgan's shack, and arrive in time to rescue Madge, who has been made a prisoner. Dorgan tells King his story. When Burbank captured him twenty years ago, he bribed Burbank to let him go. They made a grave to account for his disappearance, and Dorgan promised never to return.

Burbank attempts a getaway, but is captured. Upon the return to the ranch, Madge receives the congratulations of all the "boys" upon the announcement of her engagement to Larry Kerwin.

THE MARK OF STINGAREE (An Episode of "The Further Adventures of Stingaree"—Two Parts).—The cast: Stingaree (True Boardman); Howie (Hal Clements); Jack Falcon (Barney Furey); Nettie (Edythe Sterling).

Stingaree and his partner, Howie, have a friendly argument. Howie boasts that he can hold up a stage singlehanded, and to prove his words rides off to make the attempt.

Stingaree meets a girl whose horse is in trouble. In assisting her, he finds a note on the ground nearby, which reads: Nettie—Meet me at the Three Mile Bridge at two o'clock and we will go to Melbourne and be married. Jack." Nettie acknowledges the note as hers, and when Stingaree puts his monocle to his eye, recognizes him. She rides away in fear.

Howie, successfully holding up the stage, is seen by Jack Falcon, the sender of the note. Falcon, in turn, holds up Howie, and relieving him of the leather pouch of valuables, ties him to a tree and makes a getaway. The troopers of the mounted police find Howie and read the note of bravado which Falcon has pinned to the tree. Several of the troopers take Howie in charge, while the others ride after Falcon.

Stingaree sees Falcon and attempts to hold him up. Falcon flees, and Nettie sees them as Stingaree captures Falcon and takes the valuables from him. Falcon explains where he got them and Stingaree realizes Howie's predicament. In Falcon's boots Stingaree finds thirteen hundred pounds in bank notes. Falcon confesses that he has defaulted with the bank's funds. Stingaree makes him an offer to join hands with himself and Howie, and Falcon, unable to tell Stingaree about his waiting sweetheart, agrees. Nettie has seen Stingaree take the money from Falcon and thinks that the bushranger is robbing him. When Stingaree rides off with Falcon, she follows them. As the troopers had found and taken her horse with them, she is forced to travel on foot, tracking the hoofprints to the bushranger's camp.

That night, as Falcon and Stingaree are sleeping side by side in his camp, Falcon takes Stingaree's gun and is about to shoot the bushranger when he hears a shrill cry. It is Nettie, who has just arrived at the camp. At this point, Howie, who has escaped from the troopers arrives and recognizes Falcon as the man who held him up. Then Stingaree tells the girl the story of Falcon's crimes. Nettie is astounded. She turns to Stingaree with a piteous "Please take me home!" Stingaree instructs Howie to escort the girl to her home.

When they have gone, Stingaree ties Falcon to a tree and heats the end of his shotgun barrel in the camp fire. Then Falcon pays the penalty of his treachery to the girl when Stingaree burns a little round hole in his forehead—the mark of Stingaree.

He chases them into the barn, where they pull the coup d'etat and lock his neck in a cow yoke. They punch him with a pitchfork until the seat of his trousers looks like a salt shaker with the top off. Sophie, his wife, finds him and belabors the unhappy man for spoiling his pants. Both chase the hoboes when they find them swallowing the last of Sophie's pies. The constable joins in. The hoboes leap into the river to escape, but the constable follows and lands them in the calaboose. Escaping, they make love to the debutantes of Snakeville, whose father has just inherited a fortune. He will have none of the two low-brows, but at a blown-in-the-glass society function, the two catch a dress-suit poseur from the city taking the girls' jewels. The hoboes detect him and, after a battle, conquer him and return the jewels and are awarded the hands of the two rich debutantes.

VERNON, THE BOUNTIFUL (A Black Cat Feature—Two Parts).—The cast: Hazel (Virginia Valli); Vernon (Rodney LaRock).

Possessed of millions but little brain power, Vernon is creating a sensation along the primrose paths of the Gay White Way. He is in love with Hazel of the chorus, who regards him rather disdainfully. She marries him, however, at the conclusion of a wild night, then she separates from him and tells him he must earn a living before she will live with him. The trustees of Vernon's vast heritage learn of the marriage and, by virtue of the will, cut off his allowance. It is the girl's rejection of him, more than the loss of the money, that wakes Vernon up to a proper estimation of himself. He staggers his old time friends by going to work in partnership with a fashionable tailor. His reputation draws the moneyed crowds and before long he is enabled to tell the trustees to "keep their money." Hazel comes back to him.

THE LONG-GREEN TRAIL (A Black Cat Feature—Two Parts).—The cast: Yvonne (Virginia Valli); "Bobby" Hopper (Rodney LaRock); Jim Dykeman (J. C. Carroll).

"There's many a slip betwixt the cup and the lip," the adage has it, and so it proves with young Bobby Hopper. His father wants him to marry the daughter of his business competitor in order to consolidate the businesses. Bobby refuses, and his father employs Jim Dykeman, an ex-convict, to force the marriage. Dykeman plans to kidnap the two and force them into marriage. He gets Bobby but mistakes the girl for her maid, Yvonne. Bobby and Yvonne effect a thrilling escape, fall in love with each other and are married. Just how it turns out for the best is told in the next chapter. Sure the whole thing is just the picturization of a newspaper story a hobo is reading.

He chases him up the windmill, and Phil gets caught in the fans, and whirls around at a great rate. Pop thinks he is rid of him for good. However, a change in the wind throws him into Mert's room, and then Pop is mad.

Tinhorn Ted is in jail. However, he steals a saw from a passing workman, and escapes. He hides in a mail bag, and is delivered with the rest of the bags at Pop's place. Pop receives a letter introducing a famous artist, who is recommemnded to him by a friend.

"He wants to paint a pig," says the letter, "so I sent him to you."

Pop is delighted and says the artist shall be Mert's husband. Ted determines to impersonate the artist. He meets the real one, beans him and takes his outfit, locking the senseless artist in the hen house. Ted is then presented to Mert as the artist, and she plays and sings for him, to his great agony. They are spooning under a tree, when Phil puts a hen coop over Ted's head. Pop rescues him and spanks Mert. Phil and Mert then determine to elope. Phil is taking Mert out of her window down a ladder when Pop catches him and he runs off down the street balancing Mert on top of the ladder. Pop overtakes them and sends Mert to school.

Ted meets his accomplice, Melba Sundae, at the school to kidnap Mert, the heiress. The girls are all in overalls, and Melba puts on a wonderful silk pair. Phil arrives, too, following Mert. The snobbish girls are horrid to Mert, but surround Phil. The mistress throws him out, so he disguises as a little girl and returns. Mert says he is her twin. The girls go to bed, and Melba stays up waiting for Ted. The mistress takes Phil to her room to comb his hair, and his wig comes off. He runs. Mert is kidnapped by Melba and Ted, and Phil follows them to the city. Mert is taken to a cafe below the street level, and Phil slides through a manhole to get in. Ted introduces Mert as the new dancer, and Phil comes to rescue her. There is a fight, and Mert is carried off in an auto. Phil takes a bicycle from a cop and gives chase. At last they are both caught in the safety fenders of a street car.

VICTOR.

LIKE BABES IN THE WOOD (Two Parts—Rel. Aug. 6).—The cast: Violet (Violet MacMillan); Billie (Gordon Griffin); Hank (Fred Woodward); Fortune-Teller (Jack Nelson). Story and Scenario by Karl R. Coolidge. Produced by George Cochrane.

Violet and Billie are seated on a polar bear skin by the fireplace, tired from playing so hard. A fortune-teller comes to the door, and they tell the old woman they are alone. She gives them a ring, which she says is a wishing ring; that every wish of the owner's will come true.

Seeing Hank, the mule, in the yard, Violet wishes that he had a bag of oats, and immediately she sees a nose-sack of oats appear. They wish for a story book; it appears and they look at the pictures of the "Babes in the Wood." A spark flies from the fire and burns Billie's hand, and because he pounds the polar bear skin, Violet, to scare him, wishes that the bear would come to life. It does, and begins to chase them. They rush out to Hank and the three start to run. Violet looks back and exclaims:

"I wish it was a lion, I hate bears," and the bear changes into a lion. The children are more frightened than ever and run until they come into some dense woods. Violet becomes tired and wishes that the lion would go away. No sooner said, than the beast is not to be seen.

The children think of the story book and wish that they were the real Babes in the Wood. Their clothes change into rags and they become barefooted. But suddenly they see a big tiger creeping upon them and they begin to run in the opposite direction. The tiger continues to follow them, and finally Violet wishes that the birds would cover them up the way they did the Babes in the Wood, so that the tiger could not find them. A crow starts to fulfill the wish, and Hank and the two children are soon all covered up except their faces. The tiger comes along and the crow drops a huge leaf upon his nose, causing him to start to fight with the leaf, for he thinks it is some one attacking him.

Violet and Billie, lying close together on the polar bear skin, are awakened from their deep sleep by the braying of Hank, who has stuck his head through the window. They realize it was all a dream.

Lee, the son of the owner of the drug store, is the only young man in town, and resents Eddie's arrival. Eddie goes fishing, to be by himself, but the girls find him. He sticks his fishing-rod in the mud, and Lee finds it. He starts to fish, and the constable arrests him, as it is forbidden. He is fined, and this does not make him love Eddie any more.

Lee and the girls are out motoring, and Edith sees Eddie and climbs out of the back of the car to go to him. She complains of a sprained ankle. Eddie is solicitous, until it begins to rain, and then she forgets all about it, and they both run and take refuge under the awning of the drug store. They become so interested in each other that they do not notice when Lee pulls up the awning and lets them get soaked.

Launcelot Briggs, an old-clothes dealer, is lost in the desert. He is found by a caravan, with which the daughter of the Sheik is traveling. The Sheik dooms him to a life of drudgery unless he can make him laugh. Skootch knocks him down repeatedly and this makes the old man laugh, and he gives him his daughter, Saharah Sarah. But Skootch has fallen in love with Paprika, the younger daughter of the Sheik. He writes her a note, asking her to elope, and puts in some reflections against the Sheik. Paprika takes it to her father for translation.

Fortunately he can't read it, either, so Launcelot breathes freely again. He translates it into a flattering message for the Sheik. Plans for the wedding with Sarah are in progress, and Launcelot weighs the pros and cons. If he marries Skootch will kill him, if he does not, the Sheik will. At last he hides in a tent and has the idea of running away inside of it. He pulls up the pole and the last they see of him the tent is careening madly away over the desert, the natives thinking it a manifestation from their gods.

SEEING CEYLON WITH HY MAYER (One Reel Travelaugh—Rel. Week of Aug. 6).—The climate of Colombo, in Ceylon, is very hot, and the costumes of the natives suit it. Lace makers use the same patterns that their ancestors used. We see a Buddhist procession with its dancers in their strange headdresses. Hy Mayer then suggests in a cartoon that this more picturesque headgear should be adopted on Broadway. The foliage of Ceylon is wonderful, and the variety of trees immense. We see the elephants' bathroom, and then Hy Mayer suggests the use of an elephant as a shower bath. Native dancing to the sound of a tom-tom is the suggestion for other cartoons.

TOURS AROUND THE WORLD NO. 40 (Aug. 7).—The Senegal River is the main artery of travel in French West Africa. In this number the spectator is taken on a trip down this tropical stream from Kayes, the head of navigation to St Louis the commercial port seven miles from the Atlantic Ocean. Medina, the stopping place from the north for caravans, is pictured, as well as the Falls of Felou nearby. The spectator is glad he makes the trip only upon the screen, for the next stop is at Podor, a village 170 miles below Kayes, which is said to be the hottest place on earth. There are also entertaining pictures depicting the life of the native Senegalese.

The second section of this reel is devoted to Bruges, an old city of Belgium. The pictures were taken before the war. The city is the capital of West Flanders. Because of its many canals, the city has been called the "Venice of the North" The city is noted for its wonderful chimes Among the places pictured are the Lion's Bridge, the Gruthouse a seignorial residence of the fifteenth century, and a view from the famous Belfry of Bruges.

The reel concludes with pictures of fishing villages of France that cluster about Martigues, a town on the Mediterranean coast not far from Marseilles.

"REEL LIFE" NUMBER 67 (Aug. 9).—In this release is pictured the celebrated sea gardens at Miami, Fla. The views were taken by E. B. Gray. Equipped with a "divinghood," a diver explores the bottom of the ocean among the keys and coral reefs on the edge of the Gulf Stream, every move being caught by a motion picture camera operated from a diving bell. Spectators behold a wonderful display of coral and plant life.

Another interesting picture on this reel is a genuine colored baptizing in Virginia. The negroes make it a picnic and a holiday as well as a religious event. At the ceremony pictured by the Gaumont camera there are two hundred converts in line.

The tallest boy on earth is shown. He is seven feet ten and one-half inches in height. R. E. Madson, known as the Nebraska Boy Giant, is only eighteen years old. He weighs 195 pounds.

Everyone will be interested in seeing the human heart generate electricity. This issue of "Reel Life" has a demonstartion of the electrocardiograph. As each disease of the heart records differently, the instrument is invaluable in making a diagnosis of the disorders of this vital organ. There is also a picture showing how an X-ray picture of the heart is made.

"Making School Safe" is a section which shows how a grammar school has created a fire department from among its own pupils. The school squad makes a splendid showing as it dashes up with its hose and makes a coupling in record time. There are also pictures of the novel fire escape with a fire drill which the pupils always enjoy.

The reel concludes with two "Leaves from Life," animated drawings based upon humorous illustrations in the world's leading magazine of humor and satire. These are called "Not a Shadow of a Doubt" and "A Bomb—and a Bomb-erang."

Marie's widowed mother was constantly annoyed by Mr. Cross, who persistently forced his attentions. Marie detested Cross, but liked Jack Laird, a secret service agent, because he taught her how to box. In search of Marie, one day, her mother found her engaged in a pugilistic match with Jack. At first she became angry but, on being reassured by Marie what a fine fellow Jack was, she relented. This coincidence developed into a close friendship.

Jack on the trail of some opium smugglers found a marked slip which he took as a clue. Suspecting Cross of being connected with the smugglers, Jack demands that he be searched. THE FATAL RING (Episode No. 6, "Rays of Death"—Two Parts—Astra—Aug. 12).—The cast: Pearl Standish (Pearl White); Nicholas Knox (Earle Fox); the Priestess (Ruby Hoffman); Richard Carslake (Warner Oland).

After helping Nicholas Knox recover the violet diamond, Pearl Standish, in a fit of anger at being unable to learn what it means, hurled it from a window in the temple of the Sacred Order of the Violet God and it was picked up by Richard Carslake. In the temple Pearl is slowly being lowered over a caldron of boiling metal. Knox pleads for Pearl's life, but the Priestess informs him that he has but one day more, and if he fails he will receive the same penalty for treachery to the Sacred Order of the Violet God.

Fastening the rope to the floor with a hammer and a clamp, the Priestess orders that some ferrets be placed in a box so that by degrees they will gnaw the rope and when their work is completed Pearl will fall into the blazing caldron. Climbing up the wall Tom Carlton finally manages to reach the window. The rats have gnawed the rope, and it is three-quarters parted. Breaking the window open, Tom gains admittance. He grabs hold of the rope and by deft manipulation he struggles toward her, still keeping the end of the rope in his hands and catching her around the waist swings her outside the caldron and lowers her to the floor. He starts to unbind her, but is attacked by one of the Priestess' followers. Pearl pushes the man backwards into the caldron. Pearl and Tom escape.

Seated at a restaurant table, Carslake, fugitive from justice, sees Detective Hana. Carslake jumps up and makes a hurried escape. Hana follows him. Carslake conceals himself underneath an embankment, where he bides the diamond. Thinking the way clear, Carslake leaves. Just then Hana discovers him, and after a struggle Carslake is finally overpowered and is made a prisoner.

Pearl receives a note from Knox, telling her that she has saved him before and now that his time is up he must die tonight. Escape is impossible and he pleads with her to save him and, as a reward he will tell her the secret of the violet diamond. Pearl 'phones Tom and asks him to meet her. He consents. Pearl and Tom arrive at Knox's house. Looking through the keyhole Pearl sees the Priestess. Knox is pleading with her to spare his life, but she will not listen to him, stating that he had sufficient time to recover the diamond and now that the time is up he must die.

She recalls to him that her father discovered an invention that would make the Secret Order of the Violet Diamond kings of this earth. Taking a crucible he poured some powder from it into a large metal retort. Sealing the retort he held it out and counted a certain number of seconds. Placing a black slave a few feet away from him he pointed the retort at him and in an instant the slave's body dissolved into nothingness. Pearl and Tom are still looking through the keyhole when suddenly four of the Priestess' band grasp them from behind. They are dragged into the den. Knox had met his fate by being strangled and now Pearl and Tom are before the Priestess. The Priestess gazes at Knox and, turning to Pearl tells her that it is her turn to pay the penalty.

Margaret is still afraid that Kennedy will find her, and that she might be unable to resist his influence. Norwood visits her, and is very much pleased to find that she has broken with Kennedy. Norwood suggests that the only way to protect herself from Kennedy is to marry him. Margaret refuses, saying that she cannot.

Having lost income, through neglect of his business, Kennedy wildly turns to speculation in an effort to retrieve his fortune. lieving Aleck has changed his mind and returned, is surprised when she sees a stranger. She gives him the brandy and then notices his wounded hand. Delmore pays her a pretty compliment, and Bess invites him and his sister to meet her husband some time. Young Dr. Hogue is married. He attends to Dorothy's injuries and becomes smitten with her.

The next day, receiving word that Aleck will not return until midnight, Bess is persuaded to go shopping with Georgie Leonard and have luncheon in town. Georgie secretly arranges with Charles Brown, a man-about-town, to meet them at the Plaza. At luncheon, Bess and Georgie are joined by Brown and Delmore (very casually) and Bess notes Georgie's intimacy with Brown.

On his return, Aleck does not tell Bess of his plans, which almost breaks her heart, but he assures her she will become accustomed to it, especially when he begins to shower luxuries upon her. Bess doubts if things will ever be the same again. As time passes, the relations between Bess and Aleck grow more strained despite the improved success.

Delmore, wishing to check the growing intimacy between Dr. Hogue and Dorothy, declares that his professional visits are no longer necessary. Dorothy resents his interference, but Jack assures her that he desires only to cherish and protect her.

Bess confides to Delmore that Aleck and she have drifted apart. Aleck enters unexpectedly and sees Delmore alone with Bess. He commands Bess not to see him and his friends again but she resents this, declaring it only the whim of a neglectful husband.

Ellery denounces Georgie as an unfaithful wife. The next day, she goes to Brown's apartment but he has sent her a letter breaking the engagement for that evening and settling everything between them, as he is to be married shortly to someone else. She fears that Ellery will kill them both if the letter falls into his hands. She goes to Delmore, asking that he send Bess away when she comes to his apartment.

When Bess arrives, Delmore tells her that Georgie is coming with Brown very shortly. Georgie had told Bess she was to come with Ellery. Bess is alarmed at the deception but forgets it in a toast to Delmore. He makes love to her and embraces her forcibly. She struggles and then her screams are smothered in a paroxysm of choking. Frightened, Delmore puts her down while the butler rings for a doctor. The phone rings. It is Mrs. Hogue. She tells Delmore his sister and Dorothy and Dr. Hogue have eloped. She pleads with Delmore to stop them, saying she will forgive her husband everything. Delmore promises to do his best.

Aleck comes to Delmore's apartment and the butler, believing him to be the doctor, shows him in. He sees Delmore alone with Bess. She is in a chair, disheveled and gasping. He denounces Delmore. He tells Delmore to keep Bess. Bess pleads with Aleck to take her home. Aleck takes Bess home. Delmore arrives at the railroad station in time to snatch Dorothy from Hogue. Ashamed, Hogue returns to his wife and children, who welcome him.

Bess and Aleck decide to make their mistakes stepping stones to future happiness and Aleck asks the forgiveness of his Little Partner, which is granted. A reconciliation dinner is tendered by the Hulettes to Stephen Graves and his wife, who was formerly secretary to Graves and Aleck Hulette.

But in time the crash comes and the realization that she never meant anything to these youths. One by one they discard her and Emma finds herself steeped in debt for finery which she expected them to pay for.

Seeing the utter hopelessness of her position, Emma takes a bottle of acid from her husband's satchel and strolls to a brook. As she lifts the vial she gets new courage and determines to face her husband and confess all. But when she turns, the bank of the brook caves in and she is drowned in the swirling current. Philip sees her fall but cannot save her.

When Emma's body is brought home, the doctor has learned all from letters. He faces his neighbors and defends to the last the name of the girl whom he had unconsciously made unhappy.

THE LIVING BOOK OF NATURE.—By Raymond L. Ditmars.—Wolves and Their Allies.—In all parts of the world, from the torrid zones to the arctics, there are various representatives of the tribes of wild canines. These range in size from the savage wolves of Canada, Labrador and Siberia, to the jackals of Africa, the dingoes of Australia and in the New World the diminutive wild dogs of Brazil and Argentina. It is surprising to observe the variety of form existing among these ancestors of the domestic dog. The foxes are included in the scenes and are the most attractive types of their race. Scenes of infant foxes, that have been tamed and are shown in intimate detail, are particularly interesting. There are entertaining portrayals of wolf babies and the photo-story follows the growth and development of one of these animals.

SKIRTS (July 23).—The cast: The Girl (Margaret Gibson); The Boy (Harry Ham); The Chum (James Harrison); The Chaperone (Ethel Lynne); The Landlord (George French).

Having received notice of an inheritance, Harry and his chum, Jimmy, secure an automobile and a beautifully furnished flat on the strength of their anticipated wealth. Harry receives a telegram stating that a later will, just discovered, leaves the entire estate to his cousin, Mary, and to appease the impatient landlord Harry informs him that he will still share in the money, as he is to marry Mary that afternoon. Despite his protests, Jimmy is decked out by Harry in feminine array and paraded before the landlord as the heiress bride.

When the real Mary and her chaperon, Ethel, suddenly appear at the flat the landlord informs them that Harry is upstairs with his bride, at which Mary is greatly surprised and downcast. Jimmy is introduced as the bride, but when the girls go out he insists that upon their return Harry must tell that "she" is ill, and has retired. When Ethel goes to the kitchen to make the "bride' a cup of tea she discovers Harry and Mary in fond embrace, and feels more sympathetic than ever toward the unhappy Jimmy, who during her absence gets up, dresses in his own clothes and attempts to sneak out, only to be seen by Ethel. Harry is called to nab the strange man, and the girls discover Jimmy's discarded feminine togs, so the boys finally decide that their only course is to make a clean breast of the whole affair.

It turns out that everyone is satisfied—even the landlord, who perceives the likelihood of eventually renting two flats.

is kind to travelers and offers to show Louise and her party some of the beauties of the place. On this trip Louise and Andre are separated from the others, are caught in a snowstorm, and obliged to take refuge in his cabin.

The next morning Louise's fiance breaks their engagement. Andre offers her the shelter of his name and home, and after a hasty wedding the two begin a queer sort of double housekeeping arrangement, each keeping strictly to his and her particular room in Andre's shack.

In the meantime, Michette, away at boarding school, is seeing a great deal of young Paul Graham, Louise's brother, and when Andre goes to get her, leaving Louise in the care of an Indian woman, he finds that she has left the convent with Paul. While he is looking for her, Michette herself, a broken-winged butterfly, comes back to the little shack on "The Long Trail." Louise and the Indian woman care for her until she dies.

Andre returns too late, but vows vengeance on the man, and tells the Mounted Police all he knows of him. Paul becomes involved in a gambling fracas and shoots a man. The police are on his trail and a large reward is offered for him. In his flight he stumbles into the shack of Andre, and is overjoyed at finding his sister.

The climax comes when Andre returns and recognizes him. Louise explains that it is her brother, and Andre relents, but after saving him from the police, who come to the shack looking for him, he provisions a sled and starts him on his way out of the country. It is just as they have parted that the police find Paul, and the evidence seems to implicate Andre. He is manacled and the party starts back to civilization, passing Andre's shack, where Louise, frantic at the delay, is waiting.

When she sees her brother dead and Andre, whom she has come to love for the goodness and kind heart, manacled, she explains everything to the mounted policeman, offering her own hands for the manacles. Instead, however, the policeman puts them in Andre's, now free, and rides off down the long trail, leaving the two together at last.

GREATER VITAGRAPH.

BY RIGHT OF POSSESSION (Five Parts—July 30).—The cast: Kate Saxon (Mary Anderson); Tom Baxter (Antonio Moreno); "Bells" (Otto Lederer); Trimble (Leon Kent). Directed by William Wolbert.

Kate Saxon inherits the Blue Goose mine in Colorado, and goes there to manage her property. She arrives as rioting miners and a sheriff's posse are engaged in a battle. She personally quells the disturbance, and later readjusts wages and working conditions.

Affection quickly develops between Tom Baxter, sheriff and wealthy cattleman, and Kate, but neither acknowledges it. It is increased when the pair, on a tour of inspection in the mine, are trapped by a cave-in, and narrowly escape with their lives. Common peril further cements the regard of Kate and the sheriff, and their interest in each other is promoted by old "Bells," the mine engineer.

After a time the woman suffragists urge Kate to run for sheriff. She is reluctant to oppose her friend Tom, but finally accepts the nomination, and in the election is victorious. Tom, to test her mettle, has one of the cowboys tell her that he spent money for votes in the election, thus violating the law. She arrests and handcuffs him and Baxter. When he sees she is in earnest about enforcing the law he acknowledges that the story was false. She frees him, but does not forgive the lie.

She leaves her office, mounts her horse, and goes for a ride in the hills. Baxter follows her, and after riding for several miles suddenly stops, having been startled by an explosion. John Trimble, a labor agitator, has blown up a reservoir which supplied the mine and Baxter's cattle-ranch with water.

The explosion causes a stampede of Baxter's herds, and he and the girl have to race for their lives to avoid being trampled upon. When the danger has passed, Baxter professes his love for Kate, but she spurns him as a liar. She returns to the mine, leaving Baxter alone. However, old "Bells" later brings about a reconciliation.

BUTTERFLY PICTURES.

FOLLOW THE GIRL (Five Parts—Aug. 6).—The cast: Hilda Swanson (Ruth Stonehouse); Olaf (Jack Dill); Larry O'Keefe (Roy Stewart); Mrs. O'Keefe (Mrs. Witting); Donna (Claire Du Brey); Martinez (Alfred Allen); Hong Foo (Harry Dunkinson). Written by Fred Myton. Produced by L. W. Chaudet.

Hilda Swanson, an orphan, bound out to a life on a Swedish farm, but ever dreaming of America, spends much of her time studying English. A traveling agent for a Swedish-American colonization company comes to the farmhouse, and Hilda leaves.

In a foreign country, a woman is sent to America with important papers, her future depending upon their safe delivery. She embarks on the same steamer as Hilda, and soon receives a wireless that the Secret Service is aware of her mission and awaits her arrival.

Hilda has become acquainted with a young Swede named Olaf, and while the two young people are dancing on the steerage deck Donna, the secret agent, notices them. That night when all are sleeping, Donna goes to Hilda's bunk and, ripping a part of the hem of the girl's skirt, places the papers in it and resews the hem. She sends a wireless to Felix Martinez, importer of wines and international plots, telling him to watch out for a Swedish girl with a Belgian hare in a cage.

The steamer lands in New York and Martinez is at the dock waiting for Hilda, whom he follows when she boards a train with others under the direction of the agent of the colonization company. At a small station on the desert, Hilda and Olaf get off the train to get grass for her rabbit. The rabbit cage is broken, and the rabbit runs away, Hilda and Olaf after it. Martinez comes from the station just in time to catch the train. Hilda and Olaf look up from their chase to see the train rapidly deserting them.

Meantime, Larry O'Keefe, a cattle owner, and his mother are, having trouble with their Chinese cook, Hong Foo, who complains of having to wash dishes. Larry starts out to hunt for a dishwasher, and comes upon Hilda and Olaf on the desert. Hilda explains how they were left. He takes them back to the ranch. Hilda thinks him the most wonderful man in the world, while Olaf works in the yard and is the butt of all the cowboys' pranks.

Martinez becomes aware of the disappearance of Hilda when the conductor discovers that two passengers have been left behind. He returns to the station, but is informed that nothing has been seen of the boy and girl. Some days later Larry arrives at the station to inform the agent of Hilda's and Olaf's whereabouts. Martinez is sent for, and accompanies Larry to the ranch. Hilda refuses to leave the ranch. One night she rips the hem of her skirt to make it longer and discovers the hidden papers. She gives them to Larry, who throws them carelessly into a drawer.

Martinez arranges with some Mexican cattle thieves to kidnap Hilda. Donna has arrived on the scene. She is unaware that two Secret Service men have followed her.

When they get Hilda to the hut, they find that the papers are at the ranch house. Martinez determines to raid the house. Hilda escapes from the hut and rides away.

Larry hears of Hilda's kidnapping, and he and the cowboys start out to search for her. They meet her. A fight takes place between the cowboys and the Mexicans, several of whom are killed. The Secret Service men arrive to take Martinez. Hilda gives them the papers and they assure her that she has done a great service to her new country. Taking Hilda in his arms, Larry tells her that he will make an American citizen of her.

led by Cloud, enters and attempts to initiate Joel, but instead of a docile, trembling hick, the Sacred Order finds Joel to be fearless. But proceedings are disturbed by the appearance of "Peg-leg" Duffy, the night watchman.

Remsen, the famous football coach arrives, and Joel asks for a chance. Wesley Blair, the football captain, allows him the chance he asks, and before long Remsen, Blair and the boys in school become admirers of Joel.

Joel is then placed on the substitute team. One day during a football game between the varsity and substitute teams, Cloud kicks Joel in the head because Joel is winning the game. This is seen by the captain and results in Cloud's dismissal from the team. Cloud plots to ruin Joel, and with the assistance of Clausen they cut the chapel bell rope. When "Peg-leg" Duffy goes to ring the bell the rope falls on his head, knocking him unconscious. He is found in this condition and nearby a letter of Joel's which Cloud had taken from his room and placed in the chapel to furnish evidence of Joel's guilt.

The faculty punish Joel, as it is impossible for Joel to prove his innocence. One day Joel, despondent, walks away from the campus and seats himself on the bank of the river. He hears cries, and in mid-stream sees two of his collegiates in a sinking canoe. He goes to the rescue and brings Clausen to shore, for Clausen did not know how to swim. Cloud reaches land unaided.

That evening Joel receives a note telling him that he is appointed to the varsity team and that he is to play halfback against St Eustace the opposing team, in the big game of the season, but Joel is unable to play because of the faculty's ruling, prohibiting him taking part in athletics. The day of all days arrive. The game starts and the Hilltons begin losing. Clausen, who can no longer stand the strain of having the honor of his school lost, tells the faculty of Joel's innocence in connection with the chapel bell incident.

Joel is released. He rushes into the game at the last quarter and saves the day for Hillton, while Cloud is denounced and forced to leave in disgrace. In addition to Joel's football honors he wins a scholarship which entitles him to another year's tuition at Hillton and six hundred dollars in addition. Joel had labored ardently to win this scholarship because he had to depend on it for his next year's schooling, as his parents were barely able to support him.

THE BOY WHO CRIED WOLF (Two Parts—Aug. 4).—The cast: Jimmy (Albert Hackett); Mr. McCoy (De Jalma West); Squire Harry Von Voorst (Jack Meredith), Clavering Gould (S. V. Phillips); The Professor (William Orlamond).

Jimmie, a Boy Scout, famed as a stalker and a path finder, longed for exciting work, and when somebody whispered "spy" to him, he followed the trail of a college professor, tramping through Westchester County, New York, seeking strange insects.

With rare cunning Jimmie shadows and trails the "suspect," often crawling on the ground after the approved fashion of Secret Service men. The explosion comes when Jimmie seeks to arrest the professor.

Another day, however, Jimmie arrests a stranger whom he found making maps of the roads; guarding his prisoner, he takes him before a magistrate, but the latter sets the prisoner free and warns Jimmie to be more prudent.

The former prisoner quickly disappeared and two hours after it is learned that he was a real spy. Jimmie's grief is finally transformed into happiness when he has an opportunity to assist the Secret Service man in capturing the spy for the second time.

CRYSTALS IN FORMATION (398 feet—Aug. 4).—The beauties and marvels of the chemical world are depicted in the changes which occur during the formation of these little-understood phenomenons of nature. Grotesque and fanciful in design, they appear on the screen. Now a regiment of bayonets, now the paved block of a city street, a silver tree branching before one's eyes, a nebula of shooting stars; skyrockets and fantastic flowers come and go, each more wondrous than the last.

PLAYING IN FLORIDA (282 feet—On Same Reel).—This state is the winter mecca for thousands of wealthy people. While the rest of us are worrying with the furnace, these folks are getting sunburned. There the floating palaces of the modern Methusalas dot the rippling waters. We peep on their decks and into their cabins and catch an intimate glimpse of those whose names adorn the Blue Book. We see them at the hotels, promenading the beaches, bathing and riding, or attempting to ride the frolicsome surf toboggan. An aeroplane-taxi costs only a dollar a minute. It was pretty steep, but the cameraman hired one for three minutes and took one of the most remarkable panoramas ever taken from the sky to use in this picture.

A JOY RIDER OF THE OCEAN (320 feet—On Same Reel).—An educational nature film devoted to the life and habits of the Remora, or Shark-Sucker. He inhabits the warm seas of the globe, and reaches a length of nearly three feet and a weight of four pounds. On top of his head is a curious disc which can exert a tremendous suctional power. Many large fish in the tropics carry one or more of these uninvited passengers. The strength with which a Remora can cling to an object is surprising—a 32-pound pail is an easy burden for a one-pound shark-sucker. The natives of China, Africa and Cuba use this strange fish for catching turtles and other denizens of the deep. They tie a string to his tail and haul in the prey to which he attaches himself. The last scene of this entertaining picture shows a turtle weighing 63 pounds which has been caught by a 1½-pound shark-sucker.

IN LOVE'S LABORATORY (One Reel—Aug 4).—The cast: Jimmy Burton (William Wadsworth), Ellen Anderson (Jessie Stevens), Charles Henderson (Ivan Christy).

Jimmy Burton, an inventor, seeks to produce a safe safety match. Jimmy's cousin, Charles Henderson, is wealthy. He is in love with Ellen Anderson. She calls on him in his office and begs him to take her to see his eccentric cousin. He consents.

Jimmy is trying to "put off" several creditors by threatening to destroy them with his chemicals. One creditor, however, will not be dismissed, and Jimmy renders him unconscious with the aid of gas. He hears steps outside, and in order to hide his treachery, places a whiskey flask alongside the creditor, and claims that he entered his laboratory intoxicated. This alibi is accepted by his brother, Charles, and Ellen.

Jimmy makes another attempt to borrow money from Charles, but Charles refuses to lend any more. Ellen overhears this conversation from the outer office, and as she leaves drops her purse. As Jimmy inspects the purse he is caught in the act by a creditor and forced to part with most of the money. The next day Ellen returns on a pretext of looking for her purse. Jimmy confesses to her and offers Ellen ten shares in his safety match company, which she accepts. Charles, who has been waiting outside, enters and finds the couple clasping hands in what appears to be a love scene.

Shortly after, while Ellen is in Charles' office, Jimmy again haunts his cousin for more money. Ellen quietly slips into the outer office and comes to Jimmy's rescue by typewriting a letter, using Charles office letter-head, and enclosing a $1,000 check, requesting Jimmy to burn the letter when he succeeds, but not before. Jimmy receives the letter which contains $1,000, and by means of its aid he succeeds in perfecting his invention and sells it for a large sum. Then he holds the letter over burning sulphur and the words "I will be waiting for your success, Ellen," appear. Jimmy hastens to Ellen and is received in open arms.

Better Projection

means pleased patrons; pleased patrons means increased profits.

Are you always satisfied with the results you get on the screen? Does your light flicker? Any trouble keeping it focused? Do your dense films always come up clear and bright? How about the colored ones?

You've been using alternating current. Perhaps it's the only kind available in your town. Then change it over to direct current with a

Westinghouse-Cooper Hewitt Rectifier Outfit

Direct current doesn't flicker. It's easier to keep in focus because one of the carbons burns very slowly. These Rectifier Outfits give complete regulation of light for the dense and colored films. Operation is simple and noiseless, and your current will cost less than it does now.

Want to know more about them? Ask us for folder 4205-B.

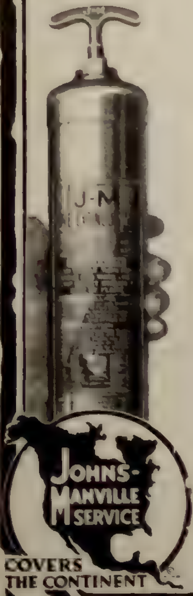
Inflammable film—an open arc—surely here is a fire hazard.



YOU never know where fire may strike—whether from defective wiring or even from a match head on the floor of your theater.

But in the close quarters of the projection booth—here is one place where the fire hazard is always present. The danger is so generally recognized that many progressive cities require an extinguisher in every booth.

Why not protect both your audience and your employees against all fire emergencies by hanging Johns-Manville Fire Extinguishers at every danger point? On all counts it's the best of the hand-operated type. Effective on all incipient fires, the Johns-Manville possesses an exclusive two-way method of operation—may be discharged by pumping or by air pressure previously pumped up. Approved by the Underwriters' Laboratories, Inc.

He Saves Best Whose Saving Lasts

(The Story of a Man Who Disregarded Two Laws.)

Once upon a time there was an Exhibitor.

He found that the best projector cost a little more than others.

It didn't occur to him that the price had to be higher because the Machine was better.

Nor did he realize that it was more better than that the price was higher.

He only thought of the Dollars he could "save."

Well, he "saved" the said "Dollars."

At that time those Dollars looked big to him.

So big that they hid the Law of Business, which says: "It's better to invest more at a profit than less at a loss."

So he patted himself on the back, and thought himself a clever business man.

But he was really a practical man, after all; and the present somehow always seemed more important than the past.

Therefore, as time went on, and he looked at his check book, he couldn't see there those Dollars he so cleverly "saved."

Other things, however, became more evident, and impolitely forced themselves upon his attention.

One of these was the Operator's calls for repairs.

Somehow, the small amounts spent that way looked bigger to him than the dollars of months ago.

Another thing. The picture lost its erstwhile steadiness, and the Dimes diverted to the House in the next block made the Dollars of his memory seem still more insignificant.

Then he saw the light!

He remembered the Law of Compensation, which says:

"You can't get something for nothing.

If you want quality that endures you must pay for it; but you get it back in the long run."

Through this experience he learned a valuable lesson.

But he would have been better off if he had bought the Simplex instead of the Experience.

Experience is a very expensive teacher, but the other man's experience is the cheapest thing on earth.

To profit by it see the Simplex Distributor in your section, or ask us for Catalog "A."

We could tell you how the shutters of some projectors are out of time whenever the picture is framed—

Or, how some projectors will destroy film—

BUT WE HAVEN'T TIME.—There are too many good points on the MOTIOGRAPH to talk about.

(Remember, the MOTIOGRAPH shutter when once set is always set, regardless of how many times you frame your picture.)

We don't say—It is bound to last a long time—or, it should do so and so;

But the user says—the GEARS CAN'T WEAR OUT; that the machine will operate as well after 365 days of use as it did on the day of installation.

The dealer will tell you that every part of the MOTIOGRAPH is guaranteed for one year (and the factory will back him up in this), and that no other machine, regardless of price, will give better service or more perfect projection.

EVERY USER IS A BOOSTER FOR THE MOTIOGRAPH.

THE STANDARD NEGATIVE CARBON

Careful Design Makes Silvertip a Winner

Designed to fill a specific need in the D. C. projection field, Silvertips are the result of painstaking technical design. No guess work or slipshod methods went into the make-up of Silvertips. Every detail was studied with laboratory thoroughness, and when completed, the carbon was subjected to exhaustive tests.

These tests were conducted by trained moving picture men who knew intimately every detail of the projection game. How well they did their work is evidenced by the enthusiasm with which the exhibitors have adopted Silvertips as the "standard negative projection carbon."

These men know that this new carbon is the essence of economy and efficiency.

Every time WOODROW WILSON refers to ABRAHAM LINCOLN

PRIC ... Greater New York ... of Greater New York.

PRESIDENT DEMANDS CONGRESS DROP "WAR COMMITTEE" PLAN AS A REFLECTION ON HIMSELF

Writes to Representative Lever That Rider to Food Bill Would Make His Task of Conducting the War "Practically Impossible".—Joint Supervisory Body, He Says, Would Amount to Assumption of the Executive.

CITES "DISTRESSING HARASSMENT" TO LINCOLN FROM A SIMILAR BODY.

Not Questioning Patriotic Motives of Congress, Mr. Wilson Insists Such Co-operation Is Not Practicable—Can Only Interpret Action as Lack of Confidence in Himself—The Statement Is Taken as Intimation That if Senate Amendment Is Retained He Will Veto Bill—Opposed Also to Triple Food Administration Board.

By Louis Seibold.

WASHINGTON, July 23.—Determined that the Administration shall not be harassed as was the Lincoln regime during the Civil War, President Wilson to-day plainly intimated that he will veto the Food Control Bill unless the section, injected by the Senate, creating a Congressional committee to supervise the conduct and especially the expenditures of the war is eliminated.

He made known his views in the following letter to Congressman A. F. Lever, who managed the bill in the House:

My Dear Mr. Lever:

I am very much obliged to you for your thoughtful courtesy in stating to me the circumstances of the present action on the Food Administration Bill and I am particularly obliged to you for calling my attention to section 23. I deem it my duty to express my opinion about that section and its effect upon the whole administration of the war very frankly indeed, since the public interest manifestly demands that I should do so.

Section 23 is not only entirely foreign to the subject matter of the Food Administration Bill in which it is incorporated but would if enacted into law, render my task of conducting the war practically impossible.

I cannot believe that those who proposed this section scrutinized it with care or analyzed the effects which its operation would necessarily have. The constant supervision of executive action which it contemplates would amount to nothing less than an assumption on the part of the legislative body of the executive work of the Administration.

There is a very ominous precedent in our history which shows how such a supervision would operate. I refer to the Committee on the Conduct of the War constituted by the Congress during the Administration of Lincoln. It was the cause of constant and distressing harassment and rendered Mr. Lincoln's task all but impossible.

I am not, I beg you to believe, in any way questioning what might be the motives or the purpose of the members of such a committee. I am ready to assume that they would wish to co-operate in the most patriotic spirit, but co-operation of that kind is not practicable in the circumstances.

The responsibility rests upon the Administration. There are abundant existing means of investigation and of the effective enforcement of that responsibility.

I sincerely hope that upon the reconsideration of this matter both Houses of Congress will see that my objections rest upon indisputable grounds and that I could only interpret the final adoption of section 23 as arising from a lack of confidence in myself.

Cordially and sincerely yours,

WOODROW WILSON

Ruth Stonehouse — in "The Winning Pair"

Three-Reel Gold Seal Released Week of Aug. 27

Ruth Stonehouse in the winning pair

RUTH STONEHOUSE and Roy Stewart are certainly a winning pair in this dramatic three-reel Gold Seal. They are engaged, and their fathers are rival shoe manufacturers, both at home suffering from gout. Ruth buys a trunkful of fancy footwear from Roy's father and goes to the country to join her family. She stops overnight at a hotel, and the shoe trunk breaking open the clerk sends out word that there is a female "shoe drummer" in town. In the meantime she has got Roy a position selling shoes for her dad, and the lovers meet at Ruth's stopping place as strangers. Roy introduces a big buyer and Ruth lands a huge order. Later she helps Roy get a big army contract, after which they have still to land their belligerent parents. There is a big fight scene, a lot of suspense, complications, and a most delightful love story thruout. The climax is logical and convincing and the whole picture a strong three-reel feature.

The Gaumont-Mutual score was thus nearly twice that of the other two.

"The Gaumont-Mutual showing for the week of July 23 was even better. The Rialto's news reel had seven subjects from the weeklies. VICTOR MOORE

You have heard that there are two things that can't be disguised. We're not sure about the married man, but we do know that Victor Moore disguised a Ford.

He swopped it for a motor boat and all was well for a while—but did you ever have a motor boat?

Better see Vic's before you buy—you'll know more about

"The Most Satisfactory Picture Ever Shown"

SAVOY THEATRE
112 WEST 34th STREET
NEW YORK CITY

July 23, 1917.

Dear Sir:

The writer has been so busy that he has not had an opportunity to write you the fact that "The Flame of Yukon" shown at the Savoy Theatre, 34th Street and Broadway, was pronounced by one of the largest audiences that ever attended the building, the most satisfactory picture ever shown in the premises.

I also wish to call your attention to the fact that I think that you have hit the nail on the head in making seven-reel pictures.

Wish to state that if the Triangle Distributing Corporation continues to make pictures like "The Flame of the Yukon," the exhibitors showing your programme will not miss Douglas Fairbanks, Wm. S. Hart or any other stars that may have left you.

This letter is written absolutely unsolicited and you may use it in any form you like.

Also wish to call to your attention that I shall use the "Flame of the Yukon" to dedicate the new $250,000 St. James Theatre at Asbury Park, N. J., which will open on the 4th of August.

Most respectfully yours,
(Signed) WALTER ROSENBERG.

Jinnie plays:—
her fiddle is peopled with angels' voices — each note speaks to the heart burdened with care, and heals the wounds of a harrowed soul.

The sunshine of her music laves the little sprigs of goodness that still root in the barren heart of the outcast. When Jinnie plays, her listeners know what God looks like.

BESSIE BARRISCALE is Jinnie, a heaven-sent breath of fragrant mountain air in the squalid humdrum of our daily lives.

EXHIBITOR'S TRADE REVIEW

"A clean-up for the theatre owner, a box office attraction of sure fire merit.
Produced in fine style — real story, novel, timely, convincing. The Slacker can be depended upon to get the money."

The Morning Telegraph

"Brilliant performance — guaranteed to arouse the most dormant patriotic spirit — hits the right spot — brought tears to the eyes of nearly everyone in the audience."

MOVING PICTURE WORLD

"The Slacker is the very best plea for loyalty to Old Glory ever shown. As an incentive to enlistment nothing finer has ever been put upon the screen, and as an inspiration for the young it will live in memory."

Motion Picture News

"Until you have seen Metro's production of The Slacker you have not experienced the real, soul-piercing thrill of patriotism. Until you have seen Emily Stevens in the role of Margaret Christy, you have not seen the soul of a woman, an actress, an artist, pour forth through its inspiring channels, the terrible, crushing emotions felt by a mother, a wife, a patriot when the one nearest and dearest to her heart—a 'slacker'—hears the call of his country and leaves for the battlefields of France."

MOTOGRAPHY

"The Slacker promises to be the best bet of the year for showmen. It is a type of picture that stimulates by word of mouth advertising, treating on the foremost subject of the day. It is a play of great dramatic strength."

We want to tell you something more about STANDARD PICTURES.

We spent two and one-half millions making them without saying a word about it.

We won't rent them to you unless you have seen them first; that's how sure we are of their box-office powers.

If you don't think they are as big as we do, we don't want you to play them. If you review STANDARD PICTURES, however, with your own eyes and brain, you will realize their box-office value; you will become enthusiastic, a strong booster, an intelligent advertiser of STANDARD PICTURES. There are men ready to show them to you in any district of the United States and Canada.

William Farnum, the screen's greatest actor, in THE CONQUEROR, follows soon—and others.

THE HONOR SYSTEM you all know— and if you don't, ask any New York or New Jersey Manager for his box office records.

Theda Bara will soon be seen on Broadway in a super-picture production of CLEOPATRA, which will distance anything we have ever seen for splendor—massiveness—and accuracy in production, to say nothing of the wonderful art of Theda Bara.

YOU WILL BE OBLIGED TO SEE ALL STANDARD PICTURES BEFORE BOOKING. THIS IS OUR POSITIVE RULE REGARDING STANDARD PICTURES.

These pictures can each be booked individually, and there is no obligation for you to take any picture that you do not want. You are welcome to one or all.

ATTENTION OF MR. EVANS

Dear Sir:-

The writer takes a great deal of pleasure in stating that, in my opinion, your latest serial "THE FATAL RING" is undoubtedly the greatest Serial I have had the pleasure of witnessing.

As you know, we booked the "FATAL RING" for a week's run at the Kings only after a very thorough investigation covering all serials on the market to-day. After screening "FATAL RING" we did not hesitate to book it because it is infinitely superior to all other serials, and we knew we would do a big business with it. The acting of Pearl White is wonderful, Warner Oland is the best heavy on the screen and his work is perfect And by the way, he is immensely popular in our houses because of his excellent work in "PATRIA".

The photography, cast, story and direction are absolutely perfect, and I know it is going to be a big hit with my patrons. As you know, we draw from the finest people in St. Louis, as we are in a neighborhood composed chiefly of the leading business and professional men of our city. Anything that meets with the approval of our audiences must be the very best the market affords. Our admission is 10 and 20 cents at all times now.

In the opinion of the writer, you should have no difficulty whatever in booking this wonderful picture to the representative houses in any part of the St. Louis territory --- or any other territory.

Thanking you for the courtesy you have shown us, and with kindest wishes I am

Very truly yours,

The SEVEN PEARLS

¶ For nearly four years Pathé has been putting out serials that have unfailingly brought out the crowds and that have meant the difference between profit and loss to many an exhibitor. ¶ For nearly four years Pathé has been advertising serials in newspapers, trade papers and on bill boards to a degree that has never been equalled by any other house in the business. ¶ Pathé knows what the public wants, what kind of a story, what kind of production, what kind of a cast, for long experience, the expenditure of much money and special study have brought definite and positive knowledge, not guess work. ¶ Sixteen successful serials from Pathé prove that Pathé is giving to exhibitor and public alike what they want—to the public solid entertainment; to the Exhibitor crowds of satisfied patrons.

¶ "The Seven Pearls" has a great story, adventurous, romantic, thrilling; Mollie King made a big hit in "Mystery of the Double Cross". She has youth, beauty and talent. Creighton Hale in "The Exploits of Elaine" and "The Iron Claw" was a big favorite. With real feature production and with big advertising in the Hearst and many other large newspapers the exhibitor is assured not only of big interest in the serial at the start but of continued patronage for fifteen weeks.

The most successful exhibitors show Pathé serials—that's one big reason why they are successful.

The Beloved Characters of "O. Henry"

"Major Tom"

"When a man's your friend," began Major Tom, somewhat didactically, "for forty years, and tried by water, fire, earth and cyclones, when you can do him a little favor you feel like doing it."

Loyalty and the friendship of old friends—those deep, melodious vibrations of the human character—O. Henry loved to write about.

And he made them into a story with people as instruments whose every fibre hummed with sincerity.

Such an "old Strad" of a hero is his Major Thomas R. Kingman, Texan banker, a man 60 years of age, rugged and hale—"free, wide, near to nature—not cut to any pattern." Now when he was bank president his old friends of the prairies—of the saddle, tent and trail, found no change in him.

This quaint, powerful character lives vividly on the screen in "Friends in San Rosario."

How the Major "joshes" along a bank examiner with a recital full of underlying pathos—just to give a friend across the street time to meet an ordeal—is dynamically human.

Facts and Comments

WE believe many men in all branches of the industry are realizing the great opportunity that confronts the moving picture interests today. Exhibitors in every part of the country are responding to the call of the different government departments and given their theaters for Red Cross benefits, for recruiting activities, etc. Many more will do so during the next few months. All that is necessary, it seems to us, to secure the co-operation of every ounce of moving picture influence is kowledge of intelligent and clearly defined methods by which we may all assist. We believe that the recently appointed war committees will soon begin to outline ways and means. There are many ways, perhaps not yet thought of, in which we will be able to help the food conservation, the securing of men for the merchant marine, as well as for aviation and the other more directly fighting forces of the country. We have, in short, no misgivings as to how solidly the moving picture interests will be found to stand back of the government if they have proper leadership.

* * *

A WORD of warning at this time to our readers may not be out of place. The multidudinous calls that will come from all quarters for help and support should receive intelligent scrutiny and everyone should be convinced as to their proper credentials. Attempts will undoubtedly be made by unscrupulous people to secure funds fraudulently by improper use of any or all of the plans for government co-operation and help. We do not desire to say a word that will discourage co-operation with every worthy cause but simply to point out the necessity for preventing the misuse and misdirection of all effort and its conservation and direction into the proper channels.

* * *

WE certainly hold no brief for the so-called junk exchange, many of which are a very real handicap to the whole industry. That the majority of them could be eliminated to the distinct benefit of the trade goes without saying. Who is to blame for their existence in the first place, is, however, a question that we are compelled to ask. They cannot do business without films and they cannot get a sufficient number of films from the small independent producer. Are not most of the films in their possession the product of most of our best known firms and where does the remedy for this condition lie. Again, are not many of our smaller theaters forced to do business with these exchanges through their inability to secure even any kind of a service of commercial films at a price they can afford from the regular and larger exchanges. Unless the theater manager can afford their price, his patronage is spurned and there is absolutely no disposition shown in most cases to consider the rental possibilities of the small theater. Consequently the junk renter flourishes but not by what he sells as junk or scrap.

* * *

MANY of the problems confronting the industry require more than ordinary consideration. The exhaustion of good stories or original plots is becoming more and more acute. Readers of this paper are repeatedly calling attention to the waning interest of the public through lack of good stories. "Time was," says a recent correspondent, "when I went to the picture theater to see good stories. Now when I want mental exhilaration I stay home and read the magazines."

* * *

ARE the film manufacturers and renters getting full value out of their best productions? Are they confining their efforts to the first or early run theaters and overlooking the extra income, practically all velvet, that might be secured from a large proportion of the smaller theaters? How many of the really big successes have played in even forty or fifty per cent. of the theaters of the country? How much better entertainment are many of these successful productions than the average weekly programs of many theaters who select their shows simply from what they call new stuff? What are the answers?

Business Versus Artistry

By Louis Reeves Harrison

THERE is an old antagonism, fairly-well regulated in long-established arts and sciences, between the originating and the developing forces brought into play, which has never been adjusted in motion picture production, and which cannot be brought into any sort of harmonious relation until a great deal more light is thrown on the subject than can be reasonably expected in the present more-or-less experimental stage of development. In the interest of general improvement, however, it is possible to establish some sort of relationship between the two great factors in successful production, leaving the accomplishment of a fine unity of purpose and action to the future.

A consistent effort has been made in this column for many years toward bringing about a better understanding between naturally opposed elements in the making of moving pictures, but the necessity for it is growing more and more urgent, a lack of it causing many failures of concerns starting with bright prospects, but the truths involved are far from being capable of simple demonstration. They have been taken up one by one and set forth as intelligently as possible, but the trouble with us poor mortals is that it takes a long time to get the real truth about any subject well planted in our minds.

To an extent probably never before observed in our history the conduct of business and that of war have recently been brought into comparison. The battle grounds of commerce require men well set up to stand the strain; they must go through a general training for the fight and then a specific one to fit them for the particular duties they will be called upon to perform. The man of affairs has to have a good many of the qualifications of a hard-fighting soldier.

All normal men have sensibilities, the man with a sword as well as the man with the pen, but these become dulled in the constant struggle for existence, especially in the face of active opposition. It is a matter of hard, cold determination to win, hence the common expression that there is no sentiment in business. There often is, but when a "cold proposition" accumulates enough headway to disregard the claims of sentiment, and finds it advantageous to do so, he either puts a stiff disciplinarian in charge of his affairs, or sends his conscience away on a protracted vacation.

Discipline, system and mass effort are deemed necessary to the successful prosecution of business affairs. Leaders who have learned this lesson in bitter experience are beyond argument when their attention is called to the fact that the very finest creative artists the world has ever known find it impossible to work under dictation, that sentiment with them must be the dominant factor—they cannot arouse it unless they have it tremendously active in their characters and daily trend of thought, and then it comes in the nature of a disagreeable jolt to the business leader, accustomed to command, that the creator of a thing should assume the attitude of a dictator.

The creator of a thing is its natural dictator from the moment of conception to its final finished expression. The creative genius, no matter how poor in money, has his own full supply of egotism. He sometimes excites the contempt of the business leader, and he returns it with interest. Live business men have been heard to say "there is nothing new under the sun" and they are liable to say it over a telephone, put it on a typing machine or a dictaphone, telegraph it or write it by the glow of an electric light.

The trained soldier would fight bravely on in the same old way but for the inventor in his workroom, the experimental chemist in his laboratory. The business man is one of action. He is mainly concerned about getting things done, and he has a high value. It would be obviously foolish to underestimate those fine qualities which he brings to the performance of his duties. He is essentially a hustler, all out of patience with the dreamer. In his own peculiar way the dreamer may be just busily occupied, but he would deaden his finest qualities by "hustle."

An author wishes to show in story form the heroism of a wife and mother whose husband and son are with the "Sammies" in France. There are a thousand ways of doing it. One is conceived and rejected, then another and another, until the subject is dismissed in sickening despair, completely forgotten until, one day, a beautiful solution comes unsought, the product of subconscious thought, or what is called "unconscious cerebration." No amount of hustle can force the solution—it comes of itself.

The mind of a creative artist works by an entirely different method from that used in the conduct of business, but the artist is beginning to appreciate the value of those qualities which make for lucrative careers, and the most intelligent of business men are yielding to the claims of sentiment in dealing with those who do the world's work. It has been my idea for many years to draw them nearer together in the production of what necessarily appeals to the sentimental side of human nature, but which cannot be properly published, marketed and distributed without business sagacity and system.

The definite policy of the program system can have many advantages, depending largely upon the purpose back of it. To use a business illustration without prejudice, the right transaction of commercial affairs depends upon a combination of good qualities in those engaged in conducting it. It is just so with the right production of moving pictures. Dependence cannot be placed alone on an author of standing, a fine performer or a capable director—it is a question of combining the good qualities of creative talent, interpretation and direction.

Now the contract system which calls for the delivery of so many plays in a specified time from a staff of writers either compels true artists to become grinds, or it puts second-class men in first-class places. Nothing is more unwise than to appraise the product of inventive minds by the unsuitable standards of contract requirements. Every man gifted with creative talent knows there is one right and a hundred wrong ways to develop his theme. Once in a while he may strike the right method at the outset, as if by intuition, but, as a rule, he is compelled to wait and use his selective taste in order to reach the finest possible results.

Nothing will so swiftly contribute to a greater success for moving pictures, magnificent examples scarcely dreamed of in our present stage of evolution, as the exercise of more intelligent consideration by artists and business men for each other and for one another. The two great essential factors should not stand apart, glaring at each other, but try to reach a finer mutual comprehension. There is nothing the matter with the art itself, but its possibilities are unsounded—only the surface has been barely scratched.

Observations

By Sam Spedon

JUDGING from the attendance at most of the theaters in this part of the country just now it must be hot enough for everybody and too hot to look at pictures. Last year we suffered from an epidemic of paralysis and now we are suffering with the heat. We only need some one to tell us to "Keep cool and not get excited" to drive us "batty." Before it happens just give these the "once over."

A Hard Proposition.

The split in the National Exhibitors' League of America places the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry between the devil and the deep blue sea. If it recognizes the League to the exclusion of the American Exhibitors' Association, what then? If it recognizes the American Association, then what? This rupture among the exhibitors occurred just when the National Association was in a position to weld the industry into a complete whole, with every possibility of establishing harmony throughout. Here's where we must pause and meditate.

Opportunity.

What an opportunity the president of the National Exhibitors' League had of making himself the man of the hour by refusing to be a candidate for re-election for the sake of harmony. Opportunity knocks but once at the same door.

Out of the Mouth of Babes, Etc.

We like the tone of the American Exhibitors' Association as set forth in its organization policies. They savor of the right idea and promise great things for a model exhibitors' organzation, based on business principles that will benefit most and gain the confidence of the whole industry. If these same views were inculcated in the National League there would have been no division and a stronger organization. We hope they will be absorbed, and some day in the near future we will have one big exhibitors' organization including every worth-while exhibitor in the country.

Lets Have Something or Nothing.

The importance to the industry of the right kind of a national exhibitors' league or organization and the direct influence it can bring to bear on local, state and national representatives to protect it from detrimental and deterrent legislation cannot be overestimated. We all agree that in unity there is strength. While we recognize the value of organization we also know that the exhibition of pictures will go on whether we have an exhibitors' league or not. By all means let us have a national exhibitors' organization, one big, united body that will do something more than hold a convention for some one's election and vindication and the indorsement of something that should not be made the concern of the exhibitors or any other branch of the industry.

Another Exposition.

WHAT'S all this talk about not holding another exposition? There is going to be another in Boston next year, league or no league. It may be the last and we hope it will, but we are willing to bet dollars to doughnuts Boston will go through with it. The "booming boosters for Boston" were in earnest when they "plugged" for it and got it. Boston is the greatest little bean and fan town on the map and it knows it can make it pay regardless of all outside patronage. If you have ever attended one of its annual "movie" balls you know all it would have to do is to call this annual affair a moving picture exposition and the rest would be easy.

Our expositions in the past have been anomalies; they should be confined to the display and exploiting of mechanical, inanimate and dumb products; the day has passed when motion picture stars should be exhibited in booths like a lot of animals. Their voluntary attendance as invited guests of aids, under proper conditions, is another matter and a complimentary acknowledgment of their prominence.

Advancing the Art of the Screen

By Edward Weitzel.

ONE of the interesting evidences of new leaven working to advance the art of the motion picture is the recent entrance of several recognized artists into this new field as designers of stage settings—artists who are closely identified with the reproduction of either still life, mural drawing or some other branch of the painter's profession. This can but work for good. The camera photographs with impartial and, sometimes, embarrassing truth everything that comes within its range. Consequently, it is all the more imperative that whatever is placed before it even of artificial background shall be artistically correct and, if possible, an artistic novelty as well. Just as there are many ways to depart from the method of the photograph and yet suggest the desired effect with greater truth by brush or pencil, when working on canvas, so also are there means of varying the backgrounds of the moving picture, of getting away from the familiar interiors and exteriors that are found in nearly all screen dramas at the present time. How far this new tendency may be carried by the knights of the brush is a matter of fascinating conjecture. One picture has been made recently that was played almost entirely against a black velvet background "with occasionally the suggestion of a building or a room."

The artists have not stopped here, however, within the legitimate boundaries of their own domain. One of them, Alexander Bakshy, has taken up the study of acting for the camera and, in an article in the "Atlantic Monthly," advocates the theory that the wants of the motion picture would best be served if the screen actors were to copy the methods of the Russian ballet dancers and express emotion by interpretative movements and not by trying to reproduce human beings as it is done on the spoken stage.

In one extract Mr. Bakshy has this to say: "The laws of movement should reign supreme. The camera is dynamic. It is necessary at this point to realize the effect of picture plays. If this principle of pure movement were recognized throughout, rolling eyes and wild gesticulation would be abolished. Slow 'natural' talking would give place to mimicry and gesture, free and eloquent. The movements of the actor would no longer intimate actual life, but would synthetically express it in the peculiar laws of rhythmic motion."

Such a method would be a radical departure from the present one, to say the least, but only a hasty judgment would set down as impractical so revolutionary a line of reasoning. A school of histrionic art of this description will probably never flourish to the exclusion of its old sister, but the possibility of its becoming a friendly rival is by no means so very remote.

To quote further from Mr. Bakshy's article: "To the spectator of some artistic culture it is in a sense irrelevant whether the acting on the stage is performed by living persons, by dolls, or by cinematographic shadows. . . . Their absolute artistic value remains unaffected by their being animate or inanimate. In fact, it is open to argument whether man is at all suitable as a medium of dramatic art. But we need not go so far!" A sentiment which the members of the Screen Club will, without doubt, unanimously indorse.

"Open Booking"—What Is It?

By Sam Spedon.

WE HAVE been asked by several exhibitors to tell them how they can make money. We don't mind trying anything once and we are willing to admit; if we were able to tell them how to make money, we would lay aside our pencil, build a skyscraper and start in business for ourselves. Such a business!

The New Open Booking.

The open booking system based on the merits of the stars and directors employed in the making of the pictures has already caused a deal of speculation in the minds of the exhibitors as to how they are going to make these pictures pay and at the same time pay the increased rental price for them. They have asked us for the answer.

The Answer Is Easy.

This question can best be answered by the exhibitor himself. If he has to pay one hundred dollars a day for the picture and his overhead is twenty-five dollars, he must needs make one hundred and twenty-five dollars to break even. If he only has a capacity or patronage of one hundred and fifteen dollars, he loses ten dollars. That's plain addition and subtraction. If, on the other hand, he has a capacity of two hundred dollars a day and a possible patronage in his community equal to that amount, it is fair to suppose he might draw more money and show to capacity with the big stars and the big directors' pictures. That is, if his community prefers them to less expensive productions. If you can't make more money with these open booking star propositions, you can't afford to book them. You would only be taking out at the spigot what you put in at the bung. This would be doing business without profit.

Advantages and Disadvantages.

Aside from the drawing capacity of the famous stars and directors, you are getting no advantage at the usual prices of admissions than you are getting with the program system. You get rid of the deposit system, but you are obliged to book on contract, for a certain number of star pictures at an increased rental price. In having the exclusive showing of certain stars, you have an advantage over your competitors, but you would have no advantage if you lack capacity and patronage to draw from, while your competitor might be making money on a less expensive program. Evidently the open booking star picture proposition was designed for the larger theaters and not for smaller competitors.

A Different Meaning Now.

Undoubtedly the term "open booking" as applied to star pictures is misleading. We always thought it meant the privilege of renting any picture, any time we wanted it without being obliged to take any others if we didn't want them. We must not forget, however, that things have changed since the term "open booking" was coined. We didn't have to pay for "self-made" stars then and the exhibitors probably got a consideration in price for helping make them. We didn't have expensive studios and properties and advertising, and the public wasn't so exacting. All these things must be taken into consideration.

What You Can Do.

There is only one of two things to do, namely, decline to book the star pictures if you can't afford them, or move to a bigger community that want them, and build a bigger house to accommodate them.

Oh, yes! There is another thing you can do; wait patiently until the star pictures are shown in the larger places, that pay the first cost, and then you will probably get them at a lower price.

N. A. M. P. I. Annual Meeting

The following amendments to the by-laws were adopted by a vote of thirty-six to thirty-three: Class five to be known as General Division in place of Miscellaneous; the government of the Association to be vested in a board of forty-two directors in place of thirty; two directors were added to each of classes one, three, four and five and four directors to class two.

Directors named in addition to those elected at Chicago, reported in the Moving Picture World of August 4, are: Class 1—Samuel Goldfish, William Fox; Class 3—John F. Freuler, Stephen A. Lynch; Class 4—N. C. Cotabish, Joseph F. Coufal; Class 5—Fred J. Beecroft, George Irving.

Exhibitors directors, Class 2—Lee A. Ochs, New York; Alfred Hamburger, Chicago; N. C. Rice, Iowa; C. E. Glamann, Kansas; A. S. Black, Maine; Thomas Furniss, Minnesota; Eugene M. Clarke, Mississippi; Louis F. Blumenthal, New Jersey; J. H. O'Donnell, Pennsylvania; Daniel Chamberlain, North Dakota; Hector Pasmazoglu, Missouri; Robert Levy, Illinois; Frank D. Eager, Nebraska.

It was also voted to hold meetings of the directors quarterly, on twenty days' written notice, in the months of March, June, September and December at the office of the Association.

On behalf of the American Exhibitors' Association, Charles C. Pettijohn applied for certificate of affiliation under article two. This request was referred to the Board of Directors. On motion the first annual meeting of the Association was adjourned.

A meeting of the Board of Directors was immediately called to order by President Brady. This meeting was adjourned until August 27 to comply with the legal requirement of twenty-one days' notice.

GERARD'S WORK GETS HIM A CONTRACT.

As a reward for his exceptional characterization of a difficult part, Charles Gerard, a member of Douglas Fairbanks' supporting cast in "Down to Earth," has received from Fairbanks a contract calling for his appearance in the next two productions which the actor-athlete will make for Artcraft. Gerard played speaking parts on Broadway for several seasons and went West a year or so ago to do picture work in the Morosco studios, going from there to the Lasky Company, where Fairbanks found him.

EUGENE B. LEWIS WITH PARALTA.

Eugene B. Lewis, a well-known writer and editor, has been engaged to devote his time to the scenario staff maintained jointly by the Bessie Barriscale and the J. Warren Kerrigan Feature Corporations. He is now located at the Hollywood studios of the two organizations and will immediately enter on the task of providing a story for one of the stars.

What Varner Has Done for Exhibitors

North Carolina Official Tells World Correspondent He Believes Bolters Acted in Best Interests of Exhibitors and Industry.

By E. E. Witherspoon.

AFTER a ten days' trip to Chicago, where he went as a delegate to the National Exhibitors' League Convention, H. B. Varner, secretary and treasurer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association in North Carolina, has returned to his home in Lexington, N. C. Mr. Varner went to Chicago as a candidate for League President, unanimously urged by the exhibitors of a number of southern states, as well as by friends in different sections of the country at large. He consented to allow his friends to use his name as a candidate when they insisted he could be of great service to the exhibitors of the nation in organizing the country at large as he had organized North Carolina.

It is a known fact Mr. Varner has been fighting the battles for the exhibitors of the entire nation in Washington during the past three years. In 1914, when the lower house of Congress put a flat tax of $100 on all theaters, regardless of their seating capacity or the size of the town, Mr. Varner was urged to go to Washington by some of his exhibitor friends and get this law modified—which he did, which has been worth hundreds of dollars to every small theater owner in the nation.

In 1916 an official representing the Motion Picture Board of Trade of New York recommended to the House Ways and Means Committee that a tax of one-half of 1 per cent. be placed on gross receipts of all theaters. This tax measure passed the House and was being considered in the Senate when it was discovered by the North Carolina exhibitors, and they again urged Mr. Varner to go to Washington and fight this proposition. At their request he spent the last week in July at the Capitol and persuaded the Senate Finance Committee that this tax was unjust and should not be levied. It was defeated, and again he saved the exhibitors of the nation the sum of four and one-half million dollars per year.

During the latter part of April, 1917, Mr. Varner was in Washington and discovered that the Revenue bill that was being prepared by the House Ways and Means Committee would contain a clause taxing admission to motion picture theaters 10 per cent. on gross receipts, and it was proposed to put a tax of 1½ cents a foot on motion pcture films. He realized this would mean confiscation of the property and the destruction of the business of many theaters. He sounded an alarm to the exhibitors and some of the manufacturers, saying he was informed this tax was recommended by the head of the organization in New York.

Denials came thick and fast, and Mr. Varner was wired and urged to attend a dinner and make a speech at a meeting of exhibitors in New York City on the night of May 10. Mr. Varner, thinking the New York exhibitors wanted to do him honor, and he being vain enough to think he might be of service to them, accepted the invitation and went to New York and attended the dinner and made a talk denouncing the injustice of this burdensome tax of 10 per cent. on gross receipts; but he failed to get any response. The crowd that Mr. Varner was talking to did not agree with him. It had figured out what they called the Canadian tax system of passing this 10 per cent. tax on to the consumer.

So Mr. Varner soon discovered he was not invited to New York to make a speech, but he was invited there by Louis F. Blumenthal, secretary and treasurer of the Exhibitors' Trade Review and others for the purpose of lining him up and getting his support for a tax of 10 per cent. on gross receipts of motion picture theaters and to get a tax of 1½ cents a foot removed from films, that the manufacturers would have been forced to pay. Mr. Varner refused to be lined up, but he did accept his expenses, which were paid to him by Mr. Blumenthal.

On the morning of May 11, on invitation, Mr. Varner made a talk before the Executive Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry on the tax question, where again he found the sentiment unanimous against him, and he informed the committee that while he would like very much to work in harmony with them that he was going to return to Washington and enter the strongest protest that he knew how against a tax that would put 90 per cent. of the theaters of his own state out of business.

He arrived in Washington on May 12, where he found a number of exhibitors, headed by Lee A. Ochs, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, who had prepared a brief advocating that the manufacturer's tax of 1½ cents a foot on films be eliminated, and that a tax of 10 per cent. on gross receipts be put on all admissions to motion picture theaters and that that tax be passed on to the public. After the brief had been filed and a very able speech delivered to the Finance Committee advocating it by William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, Mr. Ochs and some of his henchmen went to Mr. Varner and asked him what he was going to do about it, and he replied:

"I am going to make a fight for the honest, innocent exhibitors who cannot be here to defend themselves. I may not be able to win this battle single-handed and alone, but I will enter a protest and advertise to the world that there is one exhibitor who is going to fight for the best interest of the exhibitors of the nation regardless of results, and I believe that I can win because I am standing for right and justice."

Your correspondent is glad to say Mr. Varner did win this fight before the Finance Committee for the exhibitors practically single-handed and alone. It is true he enlisted the aid of Attorney A. F. Sams, of Winston-Salem, N. C., and they were the only two exhibitors who appeared before the Senate Finance Committee on Monday, May 14, opposing the 10 per cent. tax that had been proposed and advocated by Ochs and others, who, it would seem, were not interested in the exhibitors but were interested in getting the footage tax off of films that would necessarily have been paid by the manufacturers. These two North Carolina exhibitors did this work without a cent of pay from anybody and without hope of reward; hence as the Revenue bill stands today there is no tax on films and there is no tax on admissions to motion picture theaters up to and including 25-cent admissions.

Your correspondent has recited these facts to show that Mr. Varner has worked in season and out of season, in face of the opposition of the officials of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, in behalf of the exhibitors and the industry at large without reward.

When asked what he thought of the Chicago Convention, Mr. Varner said: "I have attended conventions from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from Canada to the Gulf of Mexico; I have attended National Editorial conventions, I have attended National Good Roads conventions, National Democratic conventions and various other conventions of national bodies, as well as state, district and county conventions of every kind and description, and I have never yet in my twenty years' experience seen anything in the same class with the convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America as conducted in Chicago, with the exception of a Republican County convention in one of the negro sections of the South fifteen to twenty years ago.

"The Chicago convention was pitiful—it was a real tragedy. I went to Chicago in good faith, foolishly thinking I might be of service; but after I saw the first session and realized the spirit that was dominating that body I felt deeply humiliated that I had made so foolish a trip, that I had permitted my name to be used as a candidate, and I informed my friends to do me the kindness to forget that my name had ever been mentioned—that I would not accept the presidency of that body if it were handed me on a silver waiter. Reverently speaking, that night when I got down on my knees I asked the Lord to forgive me for committing such a foolish act and promised him if he would I would never do it again.

"The honest, conscientious exhibitors who bolted and organized the American Exhibitors' Association unquestionably did one of the best things that has been done in the interest of the exhibitors and the industry at large in many years, and I feel confident that they have started right and that the organization has a great future, as it is dominated by the spirit of service to protect and help each other and further the elevation and betterment of the industry at large.

"It is not the purpose of the American Exhibitors' Association to fight any honest exhibitor or to fight any branch of the industry; but to organize the different sections of the country into real exhibitors' associations and build up a great national body—all working to the same end to make the exhibitor a great power for good that he should be in the cities, states and the nation. My best wishes for the success of the American Exhibitors' Association, believing that it will work unselfishly for the common good and for the glory of the nation."

Exhibitors to Hold Tri-State Meeting

Virginia, Maryland and North Carolina and District of Columbia to Hold Convention Beginning August 30.

ARRANGEMENTS have been perfected for a meeting of the affiliated motion picture exhibitors of Virginia, Maryland, North Carolina and District of Columbia to be held on August 30, 31 and September 1 at Ocean View, the famous "Atlantic City of the South," near Norfolk, Va. At this meeting is planned the organization of an association of exhibitors having for its purpose the improvement of the picture business in these States, as well as to formulate plans looking to the protection of exhibitors.

Practically every producing company in the east has signified its intention of having representatives present at the meeting, and many have already promised to send their stars to the convention, the feature of which will be a great ball and banquet on the final night. Plans are being made for a great display of photoplay apparatus and other features patterned somewhat after the exhibits at the recent national convention in Chicago.

Various forms of entertainment are being prepared for the visitors, and the committee on arrangements hopes to have every exhibitor in the three States and District present. Ocean View is accessible by rail and water, and it is promised that the matters to be considered at the convention will justify the attendance of every man engaged in the motion picture industry. Methods of handling the publicity sought by the government through the means of the screen as well as relations between exhibitors and film exchanges and producers will be considered seriously.

There were hundreds a dis- [illegible] and to every other—a real man and a great educator. His perception was keen and he was always on the side of right and reason. He knew that right was might; he also knew that right did not always triumph over might. You doubtless have guessed—I refer to no other man than the lamented founder of the Moving Picture World.

Many great reforms were brought about by his steadfast allegiance and high aims for his "child," the "movie" (though I remember he derided the use of the word). He could, if living today, derive great satisfaction from seeing in force upon thousands of screens the greatness of the once "toy-child" grown to manhood—as good as it is and as big as it is directly traceable to his inspiring support and unfaltering devotion; to his efforts and demand for highest culture and attainment of higher ideals in the great and growing art of motion picture production. He was the greatest friend the exhibitor as well as the producer ever had. Nor did he fear to expose the evils that existed. His vitriolic remarks about "dark caverns" led many theater owners and managers to see the necessity of interior illumination in their "caverns," and other reforms were directly traceable to his inspiring editorials. His projection department at once eclipsed all would-be experts in giving the exhibitor and operator valued information upon all subjects concerning this vital topic. Every manager and operator alike shared in the illuminating articles on every phase of the business. He left an organization composed of men of character, pledged to carry out to the fullest the great aims and policies of their revered editor and co-worker.

Had I been present at the Chicago convention I should have flatly and hotly refused to sanction any action to recognize any journal of the industry that could not prove its case in as clean and just cause as could the Moving Picture World. And I do not think I am mistaken when I state that the Moving Picture World has never asked for recognition as the official organ (though entitled by precedent and power and allegiance to the exhibitors' cause) of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

WHY AN OFFICIAL ORGAN, ANYWAY?

Why is it so imperative that such an organization should have such an organ? If imperative, why not select of the older and trustworthy trade journals who have not used the sledge in an effort to bend the will of the delegates and which are ostensibly above corruption by producing magnates or others? The road to hell is paved with good intentions and the worthy (?) president's aspirations to be the head of both an exhibitors' association and a trade journal may have been intended (?) to be of great benefit to the exhibitor. I cannot concede that any good could come out of such an arrangement, but I am frank in stating that such a proceeding would be great injustice to the other trade journals who have labored assiduously for the exhibitor, whose cause was ever their cause and whose battle their battle. Honestly, Mr. Self-respecting Exhibitor, would not that have been the height of duplicity? And could you then expect the ones who had been your stanch friends and supporters to have remained such? And forever support your every grievance? And continue to fight for you? Or would you expect them to develop a vat of venom to fight you with? (Which would have been just reward for your duplicity.)

Politics the way it is played is not a clean game and cannot be played as one. No one need warm his brain in deducing why the game at Chicago as played by the "stand-patters" was repugnant to the "babies." These self-same "babies" constitute a very formidable force, and the president past and newly-elected may find his time limit for their return to the cradle too short. Likewise he will find bitter truth in this statement: that the henchmen who "put him over" were not the spokesmen for the exhibitors of the nation on the whole, and that his title, presented on a silver-backed tray, is merely a hollow shell.

After the president had finished his eulogy of self-praise a scholar and a gentleman rose to tender his respects, which were a delight to the remnant organization. Few caught the quiet significance of Mr. Pettijohn's remarks until he had finished with "Indiana bids you Good Night." * * * Then there was quiet—as usual, after a storm.

Exhibitors of the Nation Need Organization—now more than ever. And they need co-operation of each other and individual support of every exhibitor in the great enterprise. It is only through well developed organization can they hope for equal rights with other lines of endeavor which are represented by solid organization. Therefore it behooves each carefully to weigh in the scales of Justice and Impartiality the events which led—and the causes of those events—to the disruption of the old organization and formation of a newly chartered, business and efficiency and ability managed, dyed-in-the-wool, 100 per cent. exhibitors' organization, "and to at once affiliate for his own protection and best interests, letting conscience be guide, with the plan for making the business of exhibiting motion pictures more lucrative and enjoyable for the man of high efficiency who still entertains a feeling of self respect and who, unselfishly, loves his neighbor as himself."

Let your conscience be your guide.

I have the honor to remain,

Yours very truly,
C. EDGAR MOMAND,
Manager Bijou Theater.

Saginaw, Mich., July 26, 1917.

DETROIT EXHIBITORS FORM NEW ORGANIZATION

C. C. Pettijohn, general manager af the American Exhibitors' Association of Detroit, who is stopping at the Hotel Astor, New York, received Saturday, August 4, a telegram from King Perry, secretary of the association, stating that a big meeting of Detroit exhibitors was held on August 3. The wire further informed that F. F. Schneider was elected president, William Schittenhelm vice-president, John Breunon treasurer and King Perry secretary. Mr. Perry says that all are striving to make the organization a success, that state members are working with the Detroit men, and that a meeting will be held every Thursday.

CHESTER BEECROFT ESCAPES U-BOAT.

A cablegram has been received in New York to the effect that the steamer upon which Chester Beecroft was making his way to a Norwegian port was sunk by a U-boat and that the survivors, of whom Mr. Beecroft was one, were landed at a Shetland port. Mr. Beecroft intends to continue on his way to Petrograd by the next available steamer.

Wells and Pettijohn in New York

Executives of American Exhibitors' Association Open Offices and Issue Bulletin.

Jake Wells, of Virginia, president of the new American Exhibtors' Association, and Charles C. Pettijohn, of Indiana, general manager, arrived in New York last week and opened offices in 1110 Times Building, in the heart of the film district. They issued the first of what they announced would be regular weekly bulletins, issued in season for incorporation in all trade papers.

The two officials announced new organizations completed or old groups reorganized and affiliated with the American to include Michigan State, Detroit local, Buffalo local, Indiana State and Chicago local. Total states in which there are bona fide members were stated to be thirty-one. It was stated the total membership will be published as soon as the figures can be accurately compiled and a request is made that all state directors have their membership lists in the office of the association not later than Friday, August 10.

The first bulletin, which is to the "exhibitors of America," and sets forth that the association is an organization of "exhibitors only," is as follows:

"The purpose of the American Exhibitors' Association is to create and maintain a national body of motion picture exhibitors, to improve and protect the motion picture business, to encourage the production and showing of motion pictures of high character, to protect the individual member from unfair methods of trade and other abuse, to work for the best interests of the industry as a whole, to adjust and arbitrate differences between members and various other branches of the industry, to assist the United States Government in the work of public information in times of war and other great crises, and in every lawful way to promote generally, the prosperity, uplift and betterment of the motion picture industry.

"In accordance with this purpose, and fulfilling the fundamental idea that the American Exhibtors' Association is, in deed as well as in fact, a true exhibitors' organization, a bulletin will be issued each week in time for the editions of the trade papers, in which the doings of the Association to date will be concisely given for the information of all exhibitors.

"The organization is already started in thirty states, and is working. By the time of the Detroit convention next year we expect to be organized in every state.

"What is now desired are applications for membership. Within the next week we wish to reach every exhibitor in the United States with a personal letter, in which an application for membership will be enclosed. Please respond promptly. Return applications filled out, and your check for $3 or $6—six months' or a year's dues—at your option.

"The general manager is the personal representative in New York City of every legitimate exhibitor, and is being paid for the purpose of representing exhibitors in any business pertaining to the motion picture industry.

"This service is designed to save busy exhibitors time and money. The establishment of an office in New York by the general manager is to further this purpose. Business which would ordinarily exact attention and time from the exhibitor will be looked after from these headquarters without trouble or expense to him.

"Should any exhibitor fail to receive the letter and application card, will he please send at once his name, name of theater, and complete address. Prompt response in the way of membership and dues is important. All communications should be addressed to the American Exhibitors' Association."

J. Stuart Blackton, whose affiliation with Paramount was announced recently, has begun his first big spectacular feature for release by that organization. In Mr. Blackton's announcement of his new association he stated that he held the picture rights to almost all of Sir Gilbert Parker's books. His first Paramount picture will be an adaptation of one of the most famous of the great English-Canadian author's novels, "The World for Sale." The book was written in 1911 and finished in 1912, two years before the war broke out. Sir Gilbert, in a foreword, asks that it go to the public "on the basis of its merits alone and as a picture of the peace-life of the great Northwest."

Work was begun in New Jersey last week where some of the exteriors are being taken. The interior scenes will be filmed in Brooklyn, where Mr. Blackton has his studios ready for any requirement of interior work. Sir Gilbert Parker is now in New York and has been in daily conference with Mr. Blackton.

Washington Film Building Discussed

Exchange Men Hold Session at K-E-S-E Office—Still Talk of Moving.

THE new film building regulations were the subject of a great deal of discussion at a recent meeting of the Washington Exchange Managers' Association, held in the offices of the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay exchange. The association had before it thirty or more letters from real estate men, property owners and others in Baltimore inviting the members to consider moving their exchanges to that city, and setting forth the advantages that would be derived by locating there.

It was suggested that the Commissioners might possibly be prevailed upon to reconsider their action in adopting the regulations at this time and delay the date of their taking effect indefinitely. Conditions are such in the film business today that there should be no upheavals, such as would come about through moving to another city, and the exchange managers do not look with any great degree of favor upon that course. They are determined, however, if the regulations are to go into effect as contemplated, to go to a city where the laws are more reasonable, for there is said to be no place in the District of Columbia to which they could go if their present quarters are declared to be occupied in violation of law.

It was with a great deal of regret that the members present accepted the resignation of James H. Butner as president. Mr. Butner, in a short speech, announced his separation from the Triangle Film Distributing Corporation, for which he has been managing the Washington exchange, and stated that he did not feel that he was eligible to continue in the office of president. He thereupon turned over the gavel to Sidney B. Lust, sergeant-at-arms, who acted as chairman of the meeting in the absence of Vice President Day, of the Metro Film Service, who is elevated to the position of president.

On behalf of the members, Mr. Lust accepted the resignation of Mr. Butner and entertained a motion that the latter be unanimously elected to honorary membership with full privileges. Mr. Butner was urged to continue the good work he has been doing since the organization was formed.

Express and parcel post service also came up for discussion at this meeting. Complaint was made of the former because of the cutting out of the late pick-up service; the latter because of its inefficiency so far as meeting the needs of the exchange managers is concerned.

The practices of "bicycling" and "railroading" films was condemned by several speakers, who voiced the opinion that where an exhibitor works a film in more than one house he should pay service charges accordingly and should make known his intention of so showing the film. A large number of instances where films had been shown in two houses or in a theater and airdome the same evening were spoken of. Some method will be arrived at whereby the exchangemen will be able to collect a proper charge for the extra service these theater men derive from the films.

BENJAMIN CHAPIN HELPS RECRUITING.

A motion picture man has won the distinction of attracting the largest number of enlistments at the meetings held by the Mid-Day Recruiting Committee of New York City. He is Benjamin Chapin, producer and star of the Lincoln Cycle Pictures, and he earned this distinction in competition with the following speakers: Justice Charles L. Guy, Marcus M. Marks, Justice L. Ford, Justice Bartow S. Weeks, Arnold Daly, E. H. Sothern, Senator Robert F. Wagner, Sir Herbert Tree, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Jane Cowl, Job E. Hedges, Robert Edeson, Annette Kellermann, Bird S. Coler (former Controller), Janet Beecher, Bainbridge Colby, De Wolf Hopper, Oscar Straus, Julia Marlowe, Controller Prendergast, Rev. John Wesley Hill, John McGraw, George Gordon Battle, Benjamin Greenhut and Raymond Hitchcock.

TRADE SHOWING OF "THE SPY."

William Fox will give a private screening of the timely and sensational photodrama, "The Spy," by George Bronson Howard, at the Globe theater, on Thursday morning, August 9, at 10:30 o'clock. "The Spy" exposes the operations of enemy secret police in America, and is expected to create a sensation. The showing will be especially for exhibitors and newspapermen. Mr. Fox is especially anxious that exhibitors and reviewers should see "The Spy" before its release on August 19.

Beck General Manager of Art Dramas

Experienced Executive to Have Entire Charge of Distributing Organization—Was Founder of F. I. L. M. Club.

AFTER several weeks of negotiations, arrangements were concluded this week with Arthur F. Beck, to assume executive management of Art Dramas, Inc. Mr. Beck is rapidly lining up exchange problems and rearranging territorial divisions throughout the United States and Canada. He states that it is his intention to open up at least twelve new offices at strategic points as quickly as he can obtain the best possible people.

Arthur F. Beck.

Mr. Beck has probably the largest personal acquaintanceship with exhibitors of any individual in the industry, having conducted offices in Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Louisville, St. Louis, Kansas City, Oklahoma City and Chicago. Although a young man, being still in the early thirties, he has been eleven years in the moving picture business.

Mr. Beck came to New York from St. Louis to take the general management of Mutual Exchanges, and in a short time became personally acquainted with nearly every exhibitor in the east. During his stay here his name has been constantly in the foreground of exchange circles, and he attained considerable celebrity by his work in cleaning out film pirates and thieves who had made dupes and reprints of the Chaplin pictures. Mr. Beck is also the holder of the New York City film booking record, his office handling and booking eighty-six prints of each Mutual Chaplin release.

Mr. Beck was the founder and first president of the F. I. L. M. Club, and did much to put that organization on a sound basis.

VANDIVERT JOINS PETER PAN COMPANY.

The trade will be interested to learn that R. M. Vandivert, for the past three and a half years advertising manager of the Motion Picture News, has accepted the position of general manager of the Peter Pan Film Corporation, and will take up his new duties in that capacity early this week.

Although a young man, Mr. Vandivert is old in the business and has crowded an extraordinary amount of experience into his career. He will prove an extremely valuable man to the Peter Pan aggregation. He started as a reporter, and then went into the advertising department of McBride, Nast and Company. Then when the Abbott, Briggs Company, publishers of the semi-monthly magazine section, needed a Western manager, they sent him out to Chicago. From that position he came to be the special representative of a string of farm and weekly papers. Finally about three and a half years ago an opportunity was offered him on the News, and he returned to the East.

He is joining the Peter Pan Company as vice president and general manager, and has already evolved several new features in distribution. He said yesterdayy that the present plans were to release 1,000 feet each week, composed of two 500 foot novelties, the novelties to be released on alternate weeks. After September 1st a one-reel subject will be released each week in addition to this program, and after December 1st this plan will be augmented by a further release of one reel a week.

GOLDBURG JOINS OGDEN PICTURES STAFF.

Jesse J. Goldburg, formerly of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, has been engaged by Albert Scowcroft, President, and Lester Park, General Manager, of the Ogden Pictures Corporation, as exploitation and sales manager. Mr. Goldburg's first operations will be in connection with that company's initial cinema masterpiece, "The Lust of the Ages," starring Lillian Walker.

James M. Sheldon

New President of Empire All-Star Corporation Has Handled Successful Serials.

JAMES M. SHELDON was elected president of the Empire All Star Corporation, at a meeting of the Board of Directors of that company, held on Friday, July 27. Mr. Sheldon was formerly president of the Syndicate Film Corporation, which brought out "The Million-Dollar Mystery," the serial that established a record for continued photoplay productions.

Recently Mr. Sheldon, as president of the Randolph Film Corporation, succeeded in securing Billie Burke for a serial made by George Kleine. At a time when serials were scoffed at by certain exhibitors, Mr. Sheldon's faith in their box-office possibilities was so steadfast that he launched "The Million-Dollar Mystery." For twelve years prior to entering the film industry, Mr. Sheldon was engaged in the practice of law in Chicago.

James M. Sheldon.

In discussing the forthcoming activities of the Empire All Star Corporation, Mr. Sheldon said: "As has been announced in the trade journals, the Empire All Star Corporation was organized especially to produce the Charles Frohman successes in motion pictures.

"Already completed are such subjects as Ann Murdock in 'Outcast,' 'The Impostor' and 'The Beautiful Adventure,' and Julia Sanderson in 'The Runaway,' all directed by Dell Henderson. Director Albert Capelanni has also completed 'The Richest Girl,' starring Ann Murdock.

"Since I took up my headquarters at the Glendale, L. I., studios of the Empire All Star Corporation there have been put in production such plays as 'My Wife,' with Ann Murdock, directed by Dell Henderson, and 'The Unforseen,' starring Olive Tell, under the direction of John B. O'Brien.

"The above list of Charles Frohman successes in motion pictures should clearly indicate to exhibitors the high class of offerings that will shortly be ready for release through the Mutual Film Exchanges. From time to time we shall have other announcements of importance to make. Surely no exhibitor can afford to arrange his Fall bookings until he has at least witnessed the screening of the first offerings of the Empire All Star Corporation. The pictures can be seen shortly at any of the Mutual Exchanges; and the manager of each exchange will gladly give all exhibitors, who so desire, a chance to see the films before booking them."

WERTHEIMER PAYS $375,000 FOR "INTOLERANCE."

Emile Wertheimer, of London, has acquired the entire British and African rights to "Intolerance" from D. W. Griffith. A check was handed to Mr. Griffith for seventy five thousand pounds, and this is but the beginning of Mr. Wertheimer's activity in the handling of superfeatures in his territory, as he is in the market to acquire anything which can be truly described as extraordinary.

Advices from London state that toward the end of the run of "Intolerance" at the Theater Royal, Drury Lane, it was specially played before their Majesties, King George, Queen Mary, Queen Alexandra and the royal family. A performance was also given for Premier Lloyd George and his cabinet. Despite the little time at the disposal of His Majesty during these busy days, King George joined the party unexpectedly and remained until the end of the performance.

"Intolerance" has beaten all Drury Lane records and the colossal amount paid by Mr. Wertheimer for this production seems fully justified when one considers that he will place at least twenty companies on the road, which will show at all the first clas theaters only throughout the British Isles and Africa.

Schlesinger Troubled by Reissues

President of Mayfair Would Invoke the Law to Lay the Players' Ghosts of Other Days.

M. A. Schlesinger, president of the Mayfair Film Corporation, is not an enthusiastic supporter of the practice of releasing "reissue" subjects of ancient vintage in which the immature work of the prominent stars of the day is shown. Especially does he object to the practice when the aforesaid reissues are particularly bad and the exhibitor is led to believe that they are the more recent work of the aforesaid star. "This," he says, "is an imposition on the exhibitor and upon the public and should be prohibited by law."

Mr. Schlesinger proposes to appeal to the legislature to pass a law compelling the firm which releases such reissues to fix the date of the first issue upon them so that the exhibitor and the public may know what they are getting.

He also suggests that a good remedy would be to induce stars to insist that a time limit to releases be placed in their contracts and that no reissues be made without the stars' permission.

Mr. Schlesinger will find others who will subscribe to his proposition.

Guy McConnell With Wholesome Films

GUY McCONNELL, widely known as a motion picture producer and a magazine writer of note, has joined Wholesome Films Corporation in the capacity of director general. McConnell's genius will guide the continuity and production of all Wholesome subjects.

Wholesome Films already has begun productions under Guy McConnell's direction of "The Penny Philanthropist," by Clara E. Laughlin. Ralph Morgan, of the Turn to the Right Company, has been cast in the leading masculine role. Production is to begin soon, M. J. Weisfeldt, general manager, announces, on a serial picture from McConnell's talented pen.

Guy McConnell.

The basic idea of Wholesome Films, of which the company's name itself is indicative, is proving a Mecca for leading lights in film and literary circles. Mr. Weisfeldt declares that more than fifty leading writers have already agreed to bring their pen creations to Wholesome for production.

"The Wholesome Films idea," asserted Guy McConnell, "has long appealed to me. I have wanted to be identified with just such an 'uplift' move in motion pictures. How, as director general of Wholesome Films Company, I shall bend my every effort to an accurate mirroring on the screen of the author's point of view. In no way will the works of recognized good authors be sullied by cheap thrill injected by directors—in no way will false action be thrust upon the motion picture public in order to put the so-called 'punch' in mediocre stories.

"The Wholesome policy is the section only of the best, cleanest and cleverest stories—the Wholesome kind—and the rigid, exclusive of all else. Wholesome Films Corporation is dedicated to a new high standard of motion picture entertainment. It shall be my duty, and I shall strive in every way, to see that this new standard is in all respects maintained."

MISS YOUNG BACK FROM VACATION.

Clara Kimball Young returned to New York August 2 from her camp in Maine, and is now actively engaged in New Rochelle. Miss Young has returned with glowing accounts of her trip, looking the picture of health, and is now working hard on the first picture of her new venture, which will be ready for release September 1.

Fox Fairy Tales

Producer Announces Scope of His Plan for Future Productions of Famous Children's Stories.

WILLIAM FOX has established a unique cycle in the production each year of colossal picturizations of fairy and folk-lore stories, all of compelling interest to children and grownups. He has adopted as his basis the immortal fables and fairy stories which have appealed to all for centuries. During 1916 he produced that wonderfully spectacular "A Daughter of the Gods," with Annette Kellermann, which ran for practically an entire season at the Lyric Theater in New York, and has since been shown in practically every town and city in the United States and Canada, as well as in England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales, Australia and New Zealand, and the South Pacific Islands.

The William Fox offering in this series for 1917 is the beautiful "Jack and the Beanstalk," in which 1,300 children, and an eight-and-a-half-foot giant appear, which opened at the Globe Theater on Monday evening, July 30. He will also offer in this connection "Babes in the Wood," "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," "The Brownies," "Mikado," "Pinafore," "Alice's Adventure in Wonderland" and "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves."

From these titles some idea may be had of the magnitude and scope of the cycle of fairy stories and others particularly adapted to the amusement of children, but furnishing genuine entertainment for their elders as well.

The 1918 production of this class will be announced shortly, and will be in keeping with those which have preceded it.

In turning to these subjects, Mr. Fox feels that there is a bit of the child in everybody, and that the tired business man and his wife, as well as their children, will welcome productions of this class.

"These productions will be the cinema fountains of youth," Mr. Fox said in discussing the matter. "They will be sought for as eagerly as Ponce de Leon searched for the fabled spring of antiquity.

"The average child possesses dramatic instinct to a remarkable degree. The acting of the children in 'Jack and the Beanstalk' is done with an artlessness that gives added charm to the production, and this follows in the other fairy stories which we shall show to the public. All the principal parts are taken by juveniles—children from three and four years old to ten and twelve.

"I defy anyone who sees one of these kiddie features to deny that the hundreds of children who take the parts can act. They portray all the emotions—love, fear, sorrow, joy, jealousy, malice. They enter into their parts, and it becomes a part of them. They live the roles assigned them, just as they enter into any childish game. Who is there who has not seen the boy play that he is a pirate? The youngster lives his part. He unconsciously assumes the swagger of the buccaneer, and his face takes on such a ferocious expression that Capt. Kidd, himself, might tremble in his boots."

Fairy and folk-lore stories afford an unlimited field for spectacular settings. Those in "Jack and the Beanstalk" were built on a scale to correspond with the children who played the parts. The diminutiveness of the children is accentuated in the massiveness of the giant's castle.

Any child from nine to ninety wants to see in actual pictures the stories that thrilled and entertained him in kindergaren days.

Southerners Looking for Ad. Solicitor

Merchants Buy Space of "Paramount Program Company," a Publication of Which There Is No Trace.

THE Moving Picture World has received from Southern Paramount Pictures Corporation of Atlanta information regarding the activities in Live Oak, Fla., of a man giving the name of J. Davis, and in Washington, N. C., of one describing himself as Boyd. In the first instance Davis, late in March, called on Charles Smith, a jeweler, stating he was representing the Paramount Program Company and sold advertising space to the extent of $2, for which he gave receipt. The solicitor said he had been sent by Exhibitor Rhea, of Live Oak, but when Mr. Rhea was asked in regard to the matter he informed Mr. Smith he knew nothing of the transaction. When a hotel register was consulted the name C. J. Davis, Tampa, was found, but the signer had departed.

On July 18 Southern Paramount received a letter from the New theater, of Washington, N. C., dated the day previously, stating a man giving the name of Boyd had sold ads for the Paramount Program Company to several business men in the town and that nothing further had been heard from him.

The Southern has replied to the complaints informing its correspondents that while it has received numerous letters from towns in its territory in regard to similar operations it has no such representative nor has it ever heard of any such concern as the Paramount Program Company. John R. Simpson, Jr., manager of Southern, expresses the hope that the impostor may be properly dealt with.

While in the particular cases instanced herein theater men were not the victims, as is usually the case, they illustrate the necessity for exhibitors not only to be on their guard against persons without proper credentials, but they also point the necessity for the warning of business men by theater managers also to beware of smooth tongues and insubstantial business schemes.

P. AGENT SUFFERS FROM SUB-COLLAR HEAT.

Editor Moving Picture World:

It has long been the policy of the Moving Picture World to advocate clean pictures and truthful advertising, and much good has been accomplished by this constant preachment and cultivation of high ideals. Now, why shouldn't the Moving Picture World set a good example and practice what it preaches? Imagine my horror and surprise, not to say disgust, in discovering that your monthly News Reel—a reel that is generally rich in humor—had pictured an untruth. I refer to last week's issue, in which your funny man got his views of humor crossed and tried to be too funny, probably due to the hot spell—more humidity than humor—for it made me hot under the collar and did not hand me even a little laugh.

The untruth I refer to was that intellectual spasm in one scene, and titled as follows: "Clara Kimball Young and Selznick report at Camp Zukor." The scene depicted a robust gentleman sporting a turned-up nose, with a beautiful lady on his off side—almost in total eclipse. There is not the slightest doubt that the portly man is intended for Mr. Selznick, while what little we can see of the beautiful lady must be Miss Young—for she is beautiful, isn't she? Both are saluting an intelligent looking gentleman who has the word "Zukor" printed on his shirt, and the sub-title says, "We have the honor to report for duty in your division."

The impression is conveyed to the unsuspecting public that Miss Young and Mr. Selznick had gone hand in hand to the Zukor camp to enlist in the cause of good pictures; that they present a solid and united front, one of each, and each for t'other. Nothin' doin'! Might as well draw a picture of General Goethals and Mr. Denman fishing together in a rowboat, or Lee Ochs reading the Bible to Sam Trigger.

Miss Young is fighting her own battles and is standing "shoulder to shoulder" with herself only. While it is true that Miss Young has settled her legal difficulties with Lewis J. Selznick, she has no entanglements whatsoever, and Mr. Selznick has no interest in the Clara Kimball Young productions. As stated before, all Clara Kimball Young productions will be under the direct supervision of Clara Kimball Young personally, by her own organization, and will be released through the C. K. Y. Film Corporation.

P. AGENT.

KLEINE EMPLOYE INHERITS $1,750,000 CASH.

From shipping clerk in a film exchange to a millionaire's estate with a bank account of $1,750,000, is some shifting of positons. That is exactly what has happened to Thomas S. Hackett, employed, until last week, in George Kleine's K-E-S. E. Branch Office at Washington, D. C.

Mr. Hackett was recently notified that this sum, representing his grandfather's estate, had been placed to his credit in the Bank of England. He left with his wife last week to claim the fortune.

Mr. Hackett is only thirty-four years old and among the other keepsakes which he says he will always treasure is a letter from Branch Manager Bergh of Mr. Kleine's Washington Office, testifying to his ability and fidelity. Mr. Hackett asked for this, not because he ever expects to find it necessary to use it, but more as a matter of sentiment. He says that after he takes hold of his fortune in England he may decide to enter the motion picture industry on his own account.

EWAN JUSTICE ON THE JOB.

Ewan Justice, formerly in charge of the publicity department of the Fox Films, is back in the harness looking after the presentation of "Jack and the Beanstalk" at the Globe theater, New York. Mr. Justice is looking some thinner, but much fitter after his rest.

Richardson Has Busy Week in Chicago

Gets Glad Hand from President Armstrong and Leading Members of Local Union 110—Describes Transformation of Operators' Organization

Chicago, Illinois.

FROM Winona I traveled eastward, stopping over one night in Malwaukee to visit an old friend. I had written the Milwaukee operators' union, telling them I would be in the city that night and offering to address them, but they did not think the matter worth a reply, so nothing further was done.

I am sorry now that I did not take more strenuous means for waking them up, because I later discovered the operators and managers of Kenosha, a more progressive city, had merely on the published itinerary statement that I would be in Milwaukee on that date, traveled to that city to hear the lecture. Next morning myself and my better half entrained for the Windy City by the Lakes, Chicago, not, however, in any very certain frame of mind as to what was going to happen when we got there. Local Union 110 had invited me and had informed me that I would be its guest while in the city, but———??

Well, what happened was good and plenty. No sooner had our feet plunked down on the platform than Paul Hinz, of the Moving Picture World Chicago office, stepped up, shook hands, and said, "They're waiting outside," and they were, too, as follows: J. P. Armstrong, president Local Union 110; Fred Havill, chairman reception committee, Local Union 110; H. Laugenbacker, member executive board; B. Hannaberger, member executive board; Herman Mintz, recording secretary; Hal Johnstone, secretary-treasurer; F. Clifford, vice-president; W. Connelly, trustee; A. Tuckmair, trustee; Ed LeRoy, trustee; P. Cunniff, local organizer; T. Maloy, business agent (all of Local Union No. 110); Miss E. Tyler, vice-president, and Miss Rose Calvert, secretary-treasurer, Film Inspectors' Local.

After introductions, handshaking, the smoking of the pipe of peace, and the burial of the tomahawk and scalping knife underneath the station platform, we marched valiantly forth, to the clicking of moving picture cameras, and climbed into three banner-decorated automobiles bearing the legend, "Richardson Welcome to Chicago by Local Union 110, I. A. T. S. E."; thus endeth Chapter 1.

RICHARDSON
WELCOME TO CHICAGO!
LOCAL
110.
I.A.T.S.E.

Hood Covering of One of the Automobiles.

And the Chicago boys started right in to do the job up brown. An automobile was placed at my disposal during the entire week of my visit, and President Armstrong and the executive board evidenced their sincerity by inviting me to make any investigation I might think proper as to the genuineness and sincerity of the change in the conduct of affairs of Local Union 110. President Armstrong made a good impression right from the start. He is one of those rugged, red-blooded men who are blessed with an abundance of brains to back up superb physical strength. He is not, and never has been, a believer in or an advocate of rough-house methods. He has for years fought the "gang" which had control of the affairs of the Chicago Union, and which has not only brought it into disrepute, but committed outrages which almost pass the limits of belief.

I entered Chicago even a bit suspicious, and not at all certain that the invitation might not be a means of getting me into a position where I could be effectually dealt with, after the favorite gang method which has been altogether too much in evidence in Chicago during the past four years. I can say, however, after having made a thorough canvass of the situation, and a very complete and careful investigation with regard to the acts of brother Armstrong in the past, that he, aided by a predominating element of clean men who, under the old regime, were literally browbeaten into submission, has put the gang out of business and has replaced their tactics by procedure which is, from any point of view, absolutely clean, and now I want to call the attention of exhibitors and exchangemen of Chicago to this hugely important point—viz., the affairs of Local Union No. 110 are now in the hands of men who will give you an absolutely square deal—men who will conduct the affairs of the organization as they ought to be conducted. It is, therefore, up to you to encourage President Armstrong, and help him and his lieutenants in every reasonable way, thus insuring the permanency of the reforms which have been inaugurated.

In speaking of the things which have been done by the "gang," I am adhering, by comparison, to extremely mild terms. I thought I knew pretty well what had taken place in Chicago, but bad as I believed the acts of the gang to be, I find I did not even begin to understand the depths of their depravity. In closing this particular incident I want again to impress upon Chicago managers and exchangemen the fact that, in order to overcome the gang, Armstrong has had to put up a literally fearful battle—a battle which may well daunt the bravest. He has succeeded, but as you know, a rattlesnake dies hard, and is not dead, so it is said, until sundown.

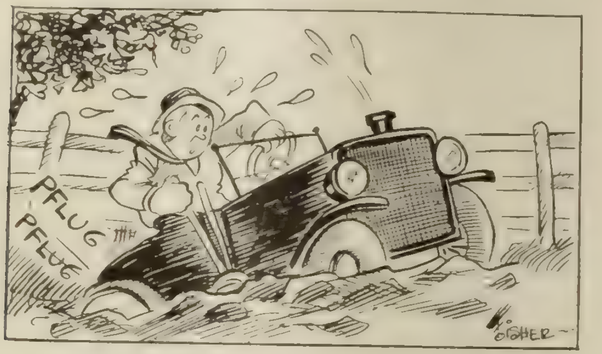
President Armstrong has not in any way intimated to me that he desires any support, other than fair treatment, from managers or exchanges, nor has he done more than set before me the barest skeleton of fact with regard to what he has accomplished. He simply said: "Make your own investigation, Brother Richardson, and form your own judgment." And that is precisely what I did.

In my judgment and opinion, after a very careful investigation, local Union 110 had absolutely nothing to do with the Pathe Film Exchange fire. This opinion is only expressed after having held a personal consultation with Mr. McDonnell, chief of the Bureau of Fire Prevention and Public Safety, who informed me personally and officially that the city officials had found nothing in any way connecting local Union No. 110 with the fire. When the fire occurred the daily papers, always eager for sensation, and not overly particular with regard to that little item the truth, remembering that Local Union No. 110 had, in the past, due to the activities of the elements of which I have spoken, borne a bad name, seized eagerly upon the fire incident to try to push her yet further down into the mire, and that was absolutely all there was to it.

I am taking it upon myself to tell you, absolutely upon my own responsibility, Mr. Chicago Theater Manager and Exchange Manager, that if you want clean conditions—if you want the conditions of which you have justly complained, which are now, thanks to Mr. Armstrong and what he represents, done away with, to stay done away with for good and all, then you should and must give your active support to the man who has, literally, at the risk of his own life and at the risk of the life of his family (you understand what I mean, and know that it is true), bludgeoned the snake of graft, and that which goes with it, into insensibility. But don't forget this—insensibility is not death.

In a private conversation President Armstrong said to me, and I think I am able to pretty well judge as to a man's sincerity, "You may take it from me as a statement of fact that the conditions of which you have complained no longer exist, and I am the happiest man alive. I have gone through much, but the result has more than justified all my suffering."

During my stay in the city Local Union 110 presented me with an entirely unsolicited honorary membership—a thing you could not have handed me at the end of a ten-foot pole six months ago. Today I am very proud of that membership, because it is to me an indication that I have the good will and the friendship and co-operation of a large and powerful organization, which is today as clean as any other organization in the land. Therefore, let us forget the mistakes of the past, and live for the future, giving to President Armstrong and his colleagues that credit which is their due and that support which they must have in order to maintain the condition they, and they alone, have brought about.



The first day of my stay in Chicago was something of a merry-go-round performance. Chicago had started in to entertain the writer, and apparently intended to do the job up brown. Three automobile loads of us went out to Hammond Beach Inn, where by the side of the raging waters of Lake Michigan, we partook of home brewed Illinois chicken, with solid and liquid trimmings. Then we started in to devour quite some several tens of miles of asphalt, stopping at various places of entertainment along the way, finally arriving at our hotel at 1:30 A. M., to be informed that the Kenosha Operators' Local Union was tearing up the telephonic scenery in an endeavor to get into touch with our humble self. This little item was attended to, and arrangements made for us to visit Kenosha on Friday of the following week, and address the managers and operators of that city.

The next day R. H. Fulton, manager Chicago office United Theater Equipment Corporation, appeared and informed us that we were expected in Gary that day; also that he had one perfectly good gas buggy waiting downstairs partly loaded with picture shooters, and that it was up to Mrs. R. and myself to climb aboard. The Gary date on that particular day, was new to us, but being some considerable sport, also in order to prevent being kidnapped bodily, we agreed, instructing friend Fulton to call up President Armstrong of Local 110 and inform him of the change in plans. The net result of this latter was that instead of one automobile load there were three, with a total company of something like twenty. Well, we bubbled down to Gary, and out four miles to the camp, which the Gary boys have established, only to find that, due to the uncertainty as to our arrival, no arrangement had been made for an address. It was therefore planned to hold a meeting of Gary exhibitors and operators at the camp the following Wednesday at 10 A. M., at which time we were to again wear out some rubber tires in another journey to the City of the Steel Mills The total trip consumed about ten hours and somethig like 100 miles. At one point Business Agent Malloy, Local 110, who was driving one of the cars, undertook to turn around in a narrow road. The look on Tommy's face as friend car scooted down into the ditch was worth miles of travel to see.

During my stay in the city practically every hour of my time was taken up, and although I remained for more than a week I could have used more than double that time to good advantage. I visited a few of the newer examples of the Chicago photoplay theater, the first one being Ascher's Metropolitan at Forty-seventh and Grand Boulevard. I arrived about 8 P. M. and found both sides of the street in front of the theater lined for more than a block with automobiles, ranging from the humble flivver to limousines costing well up into the thousands; there were fully fifty of them, if not more. The Metropolitan seats 1,608; it is managed by H. E. Ascher, with whom I had an extended and a very pleasant chat concerning various details of the theater. The Metropolitan cost, Mr. Ascher informed me, $350,000. The auditorium lighting is excellent, but the picture is in my opinion too large, being 25 feet 6 inches wide. The auditorium is lofty, impressive and beautiful. Between the main floor of the auditorium and the rear block of seats (the seats are nearly all on one floor) is a marble-lined promenade, in front of which is a marble balustrade about three feet high, curving in around the front block of seats. It is an odd and thoroughly charming arrangement.

The operating room is 15 by 18 feet, with a 14-foot ceiling. Two Simplex machines and the Martin converter are used. Felix Menleck is in charge of projection. Adjoining the operating room is another large room, in whch Manager Ascher insures me is his intention immediately to install shower baths and other conveniences for his employees. The room will be carpeted, and there will be comfortable chairs, tables and books and magazines tending to instruct and educate employees in their work.

Admission to the Metropolitan is fifteen cents, and right here I want to mention something which, is to my mind, outrageous. Imagine giving a photoplay, the production of which certainly did run into the tens of thousands, and which may have run into the hundreds of thousands of dollars, in a house costing $350,000, all for an admission of fifteen cents. Gentlemen, it is ridiculous; it is absurd; it is outrageous; it is sheer folly; it is analogous to selling a five dollar bill for a dime. I had a long talk with Manager Ascher regarding this proposition, he claiming that, while he and his associates are working for a higher admission price, and whereas he believed Chicago would eventually come up to at least a twenty-five or fifty cent admission, still the man who tried that now would face financial ruin.

Well, that may be true, though I am inclined to be just a bit skeptical, but if it is true, it is simply further evidence of the urgent need of a really effective exhibitors' league in Chicago. However, it is an indisputable fact that New York has reached a twenty-five, fifty and even one dollar admission price in its high-class theaters, without any sort of aid from the Exhibitors' League. New York City has comparatively small houses away out in the outskirts that get twenty-five and fifty cents, and there are lots of them, too. However, Manager Ascher tells me that when he opened the Metropolitan at 15 cents there were many who predicted ruin, but ruin did not follow.

At the Michigan theater, Fifty-fifth and Michigan, owned by Lubliner & Trinz, A. J. Kaufman, manager, I also found, at the least calculation, fifty automobiles standing in front, while their owners enjoyed a photoplay which probably cost not less than $50,000 to produce, in a house costing up into the hundreds of thousands of dollars, and all for the ridiculously inadequate sum of 15 cents. B. Hannaberg is in charge of the projection. The operating room is approximately twenty feet square, has black walls and good ventilation. The port shutters are held by a master cord in which are film links located directly over and not more than one foot from the upper magazine of each machine, all of which is good. The projectors are Simplex. Current is taken through a Fort Wayne motor generator set. Rewinding is done too fast, and that is distinctly bad.

The Michigan seats 1,437, all on one floor. The picture is of correct size, but the orchestra lights are bad; also four blue lights, two on each side of the screen, are highly objectionable, and the side lights are by no means good. The auditorium presents a most pleasing appearance, and the work on the screen, at the time of my visit, was good.

Down in the "Loop" I visited the Rose, where I am told the films are ordinarily put through at race-horse speed, though at the time of my visit this was not true. The operating room at the Rose would be fairly satisfactory as to size, but has not adequate ventilation. The lamphouses are piped to the vent flue. The walls are light and the rewinding is done too fast. The ventilation is very poor, hence the condition in the operating room is unhealthful. The observation ports are too narrow and the poits are not covever with glass. Corkey Smith is operator.

The Chateau seats 1,985. It is owned by Ascher Brothers, and is managed by Harry Beaumont, who I want to say right here and now, impressed me as a progressive, careful and an intelligent theater man, who realizes the responsibility resting upon his shoulders, and uses his every endeavor to improve and make perfect the conditions in the theater he manages.

The Chateau is Chicago's newest addition in the way of theater de luxe, and that is precisely what it is. One enters a lobby 45 feet wide at the street end and 31 feet wide at its inner end by 130 feet long. This lobby is decorated in old ivory and rose, which same scheme is carried out throughout the entire building. Passing through the lobby one enters a curved promenade-foyer. The stage set is perhaps as pretty as any I have seen, though conditions have rendered it impossible to get as wide a band of black around the picture as would be desirable. The auditorium is 97 feet wide, yet Manager Beaumont finds an 18-foot picture to be of ample size. The lighting of the auditorium is excellent, but for one or two minor items, concerning which manager Beaumont and myself held executive session. And here is a hot one—the Chateau maintains a ladies' parlor and smoking room on both floors, though whither or no cigarettes are furnished the deponent sayeth not.

One passes to the balcony floor by way of a stairway 14 feet wide, the trimmings of which are in polished brass and the steps and wainscoting of Italian marble. At the top of this stair is a spacious and thoroughly beautiful mezzanine promenade, on the walls of which are beautifully framed, large oil paintings of film celebrities. The furniture consists of easy chairs and divans, appropriately upholstered. This promenade is, I am told, a favorite place with women, who come to the matinee, bring along their knitting or crochet work and wait amid these charming surroundings for their escort, untroubled as to the item "on time" or "late," and thus you see the promenade is a blessing to the gentlemen as well as to the other sex.

The operating room is in charge of Ed Haliday. Its observation ports are too narrow, the light ray between the condenser and the aperture is not sufficiently protected and the front wall is altogether too light. I called the attention of both manager Beaumont and operator Haliday to these errors, and secured from them the tacit agreement that they would be remedied. Screen results were good. Aside from the faults named the room is excellent; also, if I rightly remember, it is opposite the screen.

I visited the Covent Garden, Diversey and Clark, owned by Lubliner & Trinz. This house seats approximately 3,000. It is a great big barn of a place, which has undergone many vicissitudes. It is now being tried out by Messers. Lubliner and Trinz, but, if they will pardon the statement, it is not being given anything even faintly resembling a fair show to succeed. Imagine a 3,000-seat house with a glorified cigar box for an operating room. If you stood in the center of the "operating room" of the Covent Garden and undertook to swing a cat by the tail, there would not be anything left but the tail before the circle was even half way complete. Moreover, its location is away above the highest balcony, and the distance of projection about 150 feet. There is a chance for ideal auditorium lighting in this house, but as it is at present the lighting is by no means to be described by that term.

There were many other theaters I should have visited, among them the Rialto, owned by Jones, Linick & Schaeffer, a new, and I am told, very beautiful house, situated in the Loop section, at State and Van Buren streets. Time would not, however, permit of doing more than I did. I should have remained another week in Chicago. There were many manufacturers I ought of right to have called upon, and whom I would have really liked to meet again. As it was the only one visited was the Enterprise Optical Company. Even there I did little more than swap howdy do's, glad-to-see-you-agains and good-byes with friend Spahr, general manager, who, by the way, assured me that Motiograph would be kept right up in the forefront of the procession, receiving such improvements from time to time as experience may seem to indicate are advisable.

Oh yes, by the way, a most important item came close to being overlooked. I also met our old-time friend, A. C. Roebuck, daddy of the Motiograph, who has for some years past been busily engaged in inventing and perfecting a new typewriter. That machine is, so he tells me, now complete, and his energies will now be devoted to further improvement of the Motiograph. With both himself and Live Wire Spahr on the job, we shall look confidently forward to still further improvements in the Chicago projector, the Motiograph. And might I suggest that among the first things to receive attention should be the mechanism frame. The Motiograph is now an excellent projector, but all things in this valley of sorrow are susceptible to improvement, and when Brother Roebuck evolved the mechanism frame of that particular machine I think he did his crochetting just a little bit too close. Do it over again, is my advice, and drop a stitch here and there. Make it larger and more—well, you know what I mean, just 'larger' covers it, I think.

I sincerely hope that other Chicago manufacturers will forgive me for my seeming neglect. It was really nothing of the sort. I simply couldn't do it in the time allotted, and no more time under the circumstances was available. I will try and get back to the Windy City before very long, just to do justice to those whom I was literally compelled to neglect this time.

I had been invited by the local committee which made the arrangements for the national convention to address that body on the opening day. I had personally seen the chairman of the committee, Joseph Hopp, and was by him assured it was intended I should address the convention. I had personally seen national president Ochs and was by him assured that whatever arrangements had been made by the local committee would be adhered to by him. On the opening day of the convention I was present with many operators who had been given to understand by the local committee they would be welcome to listen to my address.

Immediately after the convention was called to order, four hours later than the time originally set, the president ruled that only delegates and alternates and members of the national executive committee of the League and of the National Association were entitled to remain in the hall. That ruling, of course, barred the operators and myself. So far as I am aware we were not again invited to visit the convention.

My only concern in the whole matter, then and now, was the seeming slight put upon the operators. It may not have been intended as a slight. That they feel that way about it I am certain, but the fault was not that of yours truly, and the chief concern of the writer is to set forth his regret that there should have been any occasion for that feeling.

On Thursday it was my privilege to address three hundred and twenty Chicago operators, a number of supply men, several machine manufacturers and a sprinkling of Chicago managers and exhibitors, among whom were some of the larger exhibitors in the city. I shall long remember the words of kindness spoken by President Armstrong after the lecture. He commented at length, and announced that we would next day be escorted to Kenosha, Wis., in which city I was "booked" to address the managers and operators by Local 110, in a fleet of automobiles.

J. H. Hallberg, New York City, also delivered a brief but interesting address, as did Will C. Smith, assistant general manager Nicholas Power Company, New York City. Edward Earl, vice-president Nicholas Power Company, was present. The chief of the bureau of fire prevention and public safety was also there, though a previous engagement prevented him remaining for the entire address. Mr. Spahr, general manager of the Enterprise Optical company, was among those present, too. Mr. Goldberg, a member of Local 110, also spoke briefly, informing the assemblage that he did not believe in books, and that it was not, in his opinion either desirable or necessary that the operator understand light ray action and such things, merely in order to save his employer money. In his opinion makers of books were merely "pirates" who scribbled a lot of junk together in a book and sold it to suckers. Friend Goldberg's view did not seem to make much of a hit. I only mention the circumstance as showing what extremely queer ideas it is possible for some men to accumulate. But for the embarrassment he very evidently caused fellow members his odd views would have been quite amusing.

I believe the seed sowed in the minds of the Chicago men fell in fertile soil, and will bear fruit in good time. I sincerely trust it may be so. Chicago is the second city on the Western Hemisphere. Local union 110, now that it is purged of that element which was its disgrace, is a splendid body of men. Chicago operators are 100 per cent organized, and by using their power wisely and well they may work wonderful things for themselves, for their employers and for the industry. I hope to see the time when I can hold Local 110 up as an example which operators all over the country may emulate, and I here and now offer to her, freely and sincerely, any and all help it is possible for the writer, personally or through the Projection Department of the Moving Picture World, to give.

At 11:45 P. M. Friday night, July 22, a delegation for Local 110, headed by President Armstrong and the members of the Executive Board, escorted us to the station, and incidentally woke passengers in the pullmans of at least half a dozen waiting trains, when, led by Fred Havill, they gave "three cheers for Richardson," which must have been heard fully three blocks away.

CHASE IS PATHE'S CINCINNATI SALESMAN.

F. B. Chase has recently been engaged by Manager Wessling as city salesman at Pathe's Cincinnati office. Mr. Chase is known to every theater man in the City of Cincinnati as well as the surrounding territory, having recently resigned as McClure manager to assume his new duties with Pathe. He is a hustler, believing that the success of the industry will be assured not by following the old adage, "Honesty is the best policy," but the new one, "Honesty is the only policy."

BRABIN TO DIRECT BUSHMAN AND BAYNE.

Charles Brabin, director of note who has but recently finished a picture with Peggy Hyland for Mayfair, has signed with Metro to take the direction of Francis Bushman and Beverly Bayne.

Among the Picture Theaters

Bijou Theater, Nashville, Tenn.

Manager Starr Operates 1,500-Seat House Exclusively for Negro Population—Colored People Show Tendency for Serial Pictures.

NASHVILLE lays claim to possessing one of the finest moving picture theaters operated exclusively for colored patronage in the entire United States—The Bijou. Through its excellent program service, which is offered the negro public at the nominal admission price of five and ten cents, its comfortable and well-kept surroundings, and the general tone of quality, the Bijou has attracted thousands within its portals who would have otherwise sought amusements along other lines.

This theater is operated by the Bijou Amusement Company, with Milton Starr as manager. The members of the company are white. Mr. Starr has active supervision over all details in connection with operating the house, and it has been largely through the efficient and capable manner of handling his work that the Bijou has risen to its present high standard of quality. The capacity of the house is 1,500, having both a balcony and gallery, with a large number of boxes. The building was formerly used as a first class road show house for white people, and is one of the largest theaters in the city, but since the negro business section has been drawn toward this locality the theater has become ideally situated for a negro moving picture house of quality. It has been running in this capacity for over a year under the present management, and the building was recently purchased by Michael Starr, a brother of the manager, from the Chatt-Nash Corporation, a New York concern, through local realty dealers.

Bijou Theater, Nashville, Tenn.

When the Bijou was erected especial care was taken toward the ventilation feature, resulting in a practically perfect air circulation, with steam heating facilities of a modern type during the cold weather. The front of the building itself is equipped with seven sets of double doors, and can be readily emptied after each performance. The outer lobby arrangement is spacious, being substantially built of stone and tile, with brass railings ornamenting both the inner and outer corridors. The floors follow the lines of a graceful decline, and the screen is plainly visible from either of the three floors. Wide stairs on both sides of the corridor facilitate prompt handling of crowds, and the manager's office, film storage rooms, advertising department, etc., are located over the ticket booth, on the second floor.

The front of the building is finished in cream colored brick, faced with white beams of stone and steel, with all woodwork finished in white enamel. Each of the fourteen front doors in the outer tier is of heavy plate glass, trimmed with brass. The interior lighting effect is splendid, there being sufficient light to provide a deluge of brilliancy for an intermission or overture, but properly adjustable through the means of soft shades to furnish just the proper amount of current for a moving picture show. Extensive renovating work was undergone when the building was converted from a road show house to a moving picture theater, resulting in a harmonious blending of decorative effects.

With regard to the pictures used, a strong tendency has been noted on behalf of the patrons toward serial productions. The negro as a rule enjoys a sensational serial chapter better than anything else, with the possible exception of a picture of the Wm. S. Hart type or some A-1 comedy, and as a result the plan of offering many serials at the Bijou has met with popular favor.

The operating booth is installed on the second floor, or balcony, and the Power's machines throw out a clear and well-defined picture. At present the music is furnished by an electric instrument, except on special occasions, when an orchestra is provided, but a pipe organ will be installed in the near future. Taken from an all around viewpoint, Nashville's Bijou is hard to beat as a negro picture theater.

Reopens Theatorium in Lewiston

Binnard and Burford Make Extensive Alterations in Popular Picture House.

AFTER being entirely remodeled and redecorated at a cost of several thousand dollars, the New Theatorium in Lewiston, Idaho, was recently reopened, and is now one of the most attractive theaters in the Northwest devoted to motion pictures. It reflects great credit upon the enterprise of I. M. Binnard, lessee and manager, and W. D. Burford, owner, who are responsible for the numerous improvements. Modeled after one of the finest houses in Los Angeles, the theater is now one which would evoke favorable comment in a city of even much larger size.

Among the improvements are the installation of a double ventilating system, insuring a plentiful supply of fresh air at all times and adding greatly to the comfort of the patrons, an attractive foyer with a beautiful fountain in the center, and a spacious and handsomely decorated rest room for women and children.

French Renaissance is the scheme of the interior decorations, the coloring used being old rose, gray, ivory and gold, with the curtaining in French velour, tinted to match. The addition of a prism glass and metal marquee also adds greatly to the attractive appearance of the facade.

Manager Binnard, in addition to operating the Theatorium, has the Temple Theater, which is devoted to high class road attractions. He has been connected with the theatrical business in Lewiston for seventeen years, beginning his career with the old Binnard Opera House on Second, Main and D streets. As manager of this house he established a record for the Northwest by playing the same stock company for forty-two weeks without interruption. About eight years ago he opened the first motion picture show in the People's Theater, now the Grand.

GROGG OPERATES THE HIPPODROME.

Charles Grogg, the popular theatrical man of Bakersfield, Cal., who operates the Grogg theater and Bakersfield Opera House, recently secured the Hippodrome theater. This gives Mr. Grogg control of three of the leading houses in this thriving California town.

Indian Notes

By S. B. Banerjea.

THE Royal Opera House of Bombay has just screened that particularly fine play, "In the Heart of New York." The insight which it gives of the American apache affords much food for thought.

* * *

The Empire theater, of Bombay, is presenting the "Who's Guilty?" serial. It will be shown in Calcutta later on.

* * *

The authorities of the Bombay New Alexandria cinema have begun exhibiting "Liberty." It is attracting large houses. At the evening show one war loan lottery ticket is being given away.

* * *

The Pathe super-serial, "The Shielding Shadow," will be shown at the Imperial cinema shortly. It is bound to prove a success, considering the fact that every episode contains a thrill of an unusual kind. I trust Mr. Madan will exhibit it at his Picture Palace, Calcutta, and I dare say he will have no cause to regret the exhibition.

* * *

The Picture Palace has just concluded showing "The Red Circle." Whenever I went I found crowded houses, and the playgoers enthusiastic. Mr. Madan's next serial will be "Peg o' the Ring." It will be shown at his New Cornwallis very shortly.

* * *

Mr. Incasse, of the Bijou, does not go in for serials. He specializes in British films, but cannot do without those of American manufacture. He knows the secret of attracting large houses, hence the instantaneous success of the Bijou. He opens his second theater with "The Lost Chord" shortly.

* * *

In the issue of April 21 I referred at length to the case instituted by Mr. Cochrane, of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., against the Neikban Cinema Syndicate, of Rangoon. The counsel for the plaintiffs explained to the court certain difficulties which had arisen owing to the non-arrival of the affidavit of documents, which his clients had been ordered to file. It was presumed that they had been lost at sea in transit from America, and his instructions were to allow the case to be dismissed. The court has accordingly dismissed the suit with costs.

For the first time in the history of the Indian film world, a big film fire has to be recorded. It occurred in Calcutta, the victim being M. L. Sen, proprietor of the Royal Bioscope Co., who lost about 200,000 feet of film, due to careless handling of a gas generator.

* * *

In view of the paper shortage, the question of posters has cropped up. In India attractive posters are absolutely necessary. Hundreds of illiterate people patronize the bioscopes. They are attracted by posters alone. Why not have posters in Indian vernaculars? For Bengal, Bengali and Hindi posters are required; for Bombay the posters should be in Malnatti and Guzrati, and so on. I trust film manufacturers who cater to Indian markets will consider my suggestion.

* * *

I have said more than once that there is a big field in India for capitalists desirous of opening cinema shows. Nobody should think of starting a show unless he has at least $20,000 at his back. He must also possess a knack for business. It must not be thought that one has only to open a show, and the rupees will flow in. He must give his patrons their money's worth. Indian playgoers do not care whether a film has been manufactured by this renowned company or that. Serials always attract big audiences. Mr. J. F. Madan, of Calcutta, knows this fact, and hence his success. He specializes in serials; nobody else in Calcutta does so. I want to therefore advise parties who might feel inclined to open cinema shows in India to exhibit serials at frequent intervals. A very large number of serials have not yet been exhibited in India; for instance, the 50-part series, "The Girl from 'Frisco"; the 32-part serial, "J. Dale," etc. Open a show with such a serial; its instantaneous success is certain.

The accompanying illustration is a view of The Picture House, one of the best motion picture houses in Calcutta, India. It is owned and managed by K. D. & Brothers of Benares City, India. K. D. & Brothers are the sole agents in India, Burma and Ceylon for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and the Nicholas Power Company.

Australian Notes

COMPLAINTS are still numerous among the film exchanges as to the unwarrantable holding up of films submitted to the Federal Censor Board for approval. All pictures, even of the topical and scenic variety, have to be submitted, and where a synopsis is deemed insufficient on which to base a judgment the films themselves must be sent to Melbourne. All this means expense to the film importers, whose headquarters are in Sydney, and when the pictures are held for days, and, in some cases, weeks, awaiting a decision, the exchanges are obliged to suffer losing their dates in other States.

* * *

Backed by a big advertising campaign, the Friedman subject, "A Mormon Maid," is doing tremendous business in Sydney and Melbourne, and has broken all records in both cities. R. J. Dexter, publicity manager for Australasian Films, Ltd., has been very successful in working up public interest over the film, and the result has been long lines of people waiting outside the theaters for admission. The press publicity given to the cable from the Governor of Utah, asking the Censor Board to hold the picture, also helped much in this direction.

The Southern Cross Feature Film Company has been formed in Adelaide, South Australia, with the object of producing feature photoplays with well-known Australian stage players in the leading roles. The company has made arrangements with a leading producer here, and it is estimated that six or eight five-reelers can be made during the coming twelve months. W. T. Plank, an American who recently arrived in this country, is guiding the destinies of the new concern, and in addition will personally supervise each production.

Under the working title of "The Song That Reached My Heart," John F. Gavin is busy on a feature production with Vera Amee in the leading role.

Beaumont Smith has completed the second of his "Hayseed" series of comedies, which is entitled "The Hayseeds in Sydney." This will be released as soon as new supplies of unexposed raw film comes to hand. Fred McDonald, who is one of the most prominent Australian actors, is the leading player.

Reference has been made in previous letters to the possibility of there being six State Censorship Boards in addition to the Federal Board. A recent proposition, made seriously by the Local Government Association to the Minister for Local Government, would lead to the institution of about 300 censorships in the State of New South Wales alone. It was asked that each municipal or shire council should control the picture theaters in its area. Even the minister was startled, and exclaimed, "There are 300 councils in this State, and you want me to set up 300 censorships." One member of the deputation replied, "We want control of the pictures to be shown. But the pictures are on before we find it out, . . . the harm is done. We would like the surveillance—not that we want to interfere with the Censorship Board—but we think that if a picture had passed the censors, surely the council ought to report."

The State Recruiting Committee is largely using films to aid in appeals for volunteers. These include the training of various units of the Australian Imperial Forces, and are very interesting.

Owing to the difficulty in securing freight space in vessels for Australia, there is a great shortage of raw, unexposed film at present, and several producers are being held up because of this. Local news gazettes have also been obliged to cut down footage.

Australasian Films, Ltd., announces the release shortly of the following special attractions: "The Seven Deadly Sins" (McClure), "The Whip" (Paragon), "The Bar Sinister" (Edgar Lewis Production) and "The Manxman" (London).

During the month Mr. Justice Powers in the Federal Arbitration Court, Melbourne, gave his award in the theatrical employees' claims. The minimum wages fixed include: Biograph operators, continuous shows in capital cities, £5 per week, not exceeding thirty-six hours; night shows in capital cities, not exceeding thirty hours, £4 10/; if employed on Sundays, £1 per week extra. Operators in night shows are to be paid at the rate of 15/ per performance. Female ushers are to receive £1 15/ per week: female ticket sellers, £1 5/.

Alfred L. Grey, direct representative in Australia of D. W. Griffith, is now in New Zealand in connection with the tour of "Intolerance." Several copies of the big film are now operating in Australian territory under the management of J. C. Williamson, Ltd., and big business is reported everywhere.

The Fox production, "The Honor System," is to be presented in Sydney at the Theater Royal on or about June 23, according to present arrangements. This film is at present doing good business in Melbourne.

Big programs are still in vogue among the metropolitan picture theaters giving night shows only. The following is a sample of the entertainment given by one suburban house: "The Girl Phillippa" (Vitagraph), "Truthful Tulliver" (Ince), "The Road Agent" (one reel Triangle comedy) and in addition to this a two-reel Keystone. This is not at all an unusual bill, and comprises an evening's amusement.

GLUCKSMANN TO BROADEN SCOPE.

Max Glucksmann of Buenos Aires has recently established a New York office in the Worlds Tower building, in charge of his brother, Jacobo Glucksmann. The house of Max Glucksmann is one of the largest exchanges in the world. An entire building in Buenos Aires is given over to film and moving picture theater accessories. It is situated at Callao and extends from number 45 to 83 on this wide boulevard.

Jacobo Glucksmann has recently stated that his company is now negotiating with one of the largest and best American producers in order to control entire foreign rights of this company's output. This will mean that Glucksmann will be one of the largest exporters as well as the strongest importers in South America.

GIBBONS GOES TO CLEVELAND.

Miles F. Gibbons, formerly branch manager of George Kleine's K-E-S-E branch at Pittsburgh, has been transferred by Mr. Kleine to the Cleveland branch. Mr. Gibbons is one of Mr. Kleine's oldest employees and substantial success has attended his efforts as branch manager wherever located. It is expected that Cleveland will be no exception.

EVEN THE SUB-SEA SAILORS CRY FOR IT.

Even at the depth of the ocean, the Moving Picture World has friends. This fact was demonstrated last week when two British submarines and mother ship suddenly appeared in a west coast harbor. No sooner had the undersea craft been sighted than L. C. Hutt, motion picture operator for the Hearst-Pathe News hired a tug and hurriedly drew up alongside the visitors. The captain of one of the submarines was on deck.

The British Submarine Captain Gets His Moving Picture Worlds.

Photographing submarines in wartimes is not the easiest thing in the world, and Hutt started with his usual blandishments. "Have you had any papers lately?" asked Hutt. Papers? My word," replied the captain, "the only papers we have had aboard for three weeks are cigarette papers." Hutt asked him what he would like to have in the way of reading matter and promptly the answer came: "If you can give me the latest issue of the Moving Picture World and some of today's newspapers, everybody aboard will be happy," replied the captain.

Hutt sent a rowboat ashore and secured a half dozen copies of the Moving Picture World and an equal number of the local newspapers. A still photographer snapped Hutt as he was passing the reading matter from the tug to the captain of the British submarine.

"The captain and the sailors were profuse in their thanks," said Hutt, relating the experience, "and willingly posed for all the pictures that we wanted, which is a very unusual thing, for, as a rule, they are very much afraid of a motion picture camera."

The pictures that Hutt took of the submarine and the mother ship are now being shown in the Hearst-Pathe News.

AL. KAUFMAN JOINS BIG "U."

George Marshall, director of western dramas for Universal, has added Al Kaufman, the well known pugilist, to his company.

Kaufman, who stands six feet two inches and weighs two hundred and five pounds, has had a large following in this country since 1904 when he first gave evidence of real prowess in the squared circle. He has faced many of the best heavyweights in the business, and in 1909 gained much prestige by battling Jack Johnson to a standstill.

In all of the pictures produced by George Marshall, rough and tumble scenes occur, and both the director and his new player take keen delight in putting on the strenuous stuff. Neal Hart is the only actor in Marshall's company who is able to give Kaufman a real work-out, although the fighter is some three inches taller and weighs at least twenty pounds more.

LARRY McGILL SIGNED BY ASTRA.

Lawrence B. McGill has been signed by Astra and will assist George Fitzmaurice, the well known director, on various Pathe features. This is not the first time that "Larry" has been identified with the Pathe program. When Arrow was producing "Who's Guilty?" the serial which was widely distributed by Pathe, Mr. McGill was one of the two directors who alternated on the episodes.

"Submarine Chasers" (Universal).

THE manner in which submarine chasers, hundreds of which are being built for Uncle Sam for use in the present war are made, is an attractive subject of the Screen Magazine No. 29. The first steps toward erecting the skeleton are shown when the ribs are placed on the keel. The bed for the engines is then put in, the planking of the ship is begun, the hull is planed, and the seams are caulked with oakum. After the erection of the wheelhouse or shelter, we are given a view of the bow, and a stern view shows the rudder and two propellers. The launching of the "chaser" is also interesting. Other features are views of the completed wheel-house or steering shelter, a small high-power wireless outfit with a communication radius of 100 miles, the engine room equipped with two four-hundred-horsepower engines capable of developing speed of 35 knots, and a speed test.

"The Ruined Palace of Tiberius" (Mutual-Gaumont).

The ruins of the palace of Tiberius at Capri is included in the 37th number of "Tours Around the World." Only some of the walls are now left standing, but there are still evidences of what parts of the building were used for, such as the baths. The palace was situated on a promontory and from a certain part of this promontory Tiberius was wont to take his pleasure in watching his victims thrown over the cliff to death on the rocks below. This picture will be found interesting as a study of that period.

"Avignon, France" (Mutual-Gaumont).

In "Tours Around the World" No. 37 are some attractive scenes in and about Avignon, France. In Avignon, which is in the southeastern part of France, one of the Popes lived in the fourteenth century. In the picture the palace in which he lived is shown, the ramparts which surround the city, and the fortress of St. Andre, which was built in the fourteenth century. The remainder of the renowned St. Benedict bridge is also shown. A view of the river Rhone is seen and from its banks Villeneuve in the distance. The parks and gardens of the city are also of interest.

"Southern Colorado" (Pathe-Combitone).

Some unusually fine material will be found in the 19th number of "Know America, the Land We Love." Delightful views of Fisher Peak are among the opening scenes. Kit Carson's monument also claims attention and the views of the Spanish Peaks and the Sangre de Christo mountains will be much enjoyed by those who love the beautiful. A resume of the coal and coke industry at Trinidad, Colorado, takes up part of the reel, which closes with scenes at the immense smelter at Pueblo.

"Timbuktu, the Mysterious" (Mutual-Gaumont).

In "Tours Around the World" No. 37 are some attractive views in and about the city of Timbuktu, which lies nine miles north of the river Niger, on the edge of the Desert of Sahara. Here is the meeting place of the camel and the canoe, where the tourist coming by way of Timbuktu gets his first experience with the "ship of the desert." Many of the types of Sudan are shown in the picture, and interesting street scenes, including an open-air bakery, a meat shop, also in the open, and the market place.

"Alaska in Motion No. 4" (Educational).

The fourth number of "Alaska in Motion" takes us to Kodiak Island where hunters from all over the world go to hunt bear. The picture is an unusually interesting one and shows the hunters en route to the island, landing there, portaging canoes to avoid the rapids, and finally, after a climb among the mountains, sighting their first bear. A view showing a mother bear and her two cubs eating clams on the shore is interesting. Another scene shows a big bear traveling toward the beach by himself. The final scenes show the bear being shot and the hunters carrying his skin to camp where they stretch it to dry.

"Wolves and Their Allies" (Educational-Ditmars).

In this number of the Ditmars series the wolf family and its relatives of the dog family are presented. Various species are shown, including the ordinary wolf and its cubs, the dingoes of Australia, and the diminutive wild dogs of Brazil and Argentine. Foxes are also included in the collection, and the scenes showing the capture and taming of baby foxes are very entertaining.

"World's Greatest Police Training School" (Paramount-Bray).

This subject, contained in the 78th release of the Pictograph, tells of the manner in which the policemen who protect the citizens of New York are trained for the efficient service which they are expected to render. Jiu Jitsu is taught them as a matter of self-defense, and they are also taught to shin up the side of a house to aid victims of burning buildings. The traffic policeman must be keenly alert, and, in order to prevent congestion of traffic when he takes his place on the busy city streets, he is given a course of instruction. The most interesting of all is that part of the picture pertaining to the mounted police, who are required to do the most daring feats of horsemanship. The picture is a very interesting one and will be enjoyed.

"Science and the Stock Farm" (Paramount-Bray).

In the 78th release of the Pictograph are a number of interesting and instructive views photographed on the farm maintained by the Purdue University in Indiana. In the film we learn of the scientific methods employed by the modern farmer in raising the best class of stock. Cross-breeding, for instance, has evolved species that are superior in every way to their progenitors. Cattle that gave but a meagre amount of milk have, by proper breeding, been made to yield many times more and of better quality. Other types have been developed for beef, and all have been made hardier and less inclined to become affected by disease which formerly killed a large percentage of cattle raised. In addition to the general knowledge on stock breeding contained in this picture, some fine specimens of live stock of different kinds are shown.

"Incandescent Mantles" (Mutual-Gaumont).

In "Reel Life" No. 64 we learn how the incandescent mantles which have been found so necessary to the successful use of lighting gas are made. The picture tells us that they are made from the fibre of the ramie plant, and that after being knitted by machinery they are stretched and cut the proper size. The heads are then impregnated with a hardening liquid, strengthened with asbestos cords, fastened to magnesia rings and then tested with compressed air. Before packing for shipment they are dipped in a liquid which hardens and serves as a protection to the delicate fibre.

"The Cocoanut" (Mutual-Gaumont).

An interesting study of the cocoanut palm and its product will be found in "Reel Life" No. 64. Here we are first shown a closeup of the tree and of the blossom which looks perfectly innocent of its final development into a large cocoanut. The cocoanut at various stages of its growth is also shown, up to that period when the outer covering has turned a dark brown and it is ready to be taken from the tree. The picture includes various other points of interest, such as the sprouting of the cocoanut palm.

"Only Tea Farm in the United States" (Universal).

In "Screen Magazine" No. 29 will be found some well illustrated matter on the only tea farm in the United States. This farm is located near Charleston, South Carolina, and has shown marked progress. The picture shows a garden, laborers weeding a full-grown patch, and the pruning of the plants. The old method of picking the tea leaves is compared with the more modern method; the growing of tea under shelter is shown. Weighing the pickings, culling the dried leaves, and packing the tea for shipment are the final items of the picture.

Educational Films at Rialto

Educational Subjects Receive Unusual Settings in Exhibition at Rialto Theater.

THE Educational Films Corporation of America is responsible for a couple of beautiful scenics recently exhibited in the regular Rialto program. These were "Jamaica, the Land of Springs" and "A Trip Around the Bay of Monterey."

In his usual artistic fashion, R. L. Rothapfel preluded, interspersed and affixed these educationals with music and lighting effects of unusual attraction. The last-mentioned, being still fresh in our minds, we will dwell briefly on it in an attempt to describe the clever fashion in which it was presented. "A Trip Around the Bay of Monterey" introduced beautiful surf scenes and a profusion of lone rocks and traditionary places referred to in the early history of Spanish California. Delightful views of the seventeen-mile drive along the cypress-fringed shores of that part of the bay were included in the picture, with glimpses of white-capped waves beating on the rocks below. In the closing scenes of the picture the camera glided along the shore, glimpsing the town of Monterey in the distance, while a subtitle suggestive of its legendry and ancient romance gave the cue for the entry of a haze of violet light in which a twilight scene on the bay faded out.

The picture was closely followed by a pleasing rendition of the old bass song, "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep," by Basso Willard Andelin, the violet light still playing over all and resolving into deep storm purple with lightning flashes with the suggestion of the song. What could be more artistic in treatment? Hats off to the genius of picture exhibition!

E. I. S. Film at Strand

The Manufacture of Print Paper, as Photographed by the E. I. S. Motion Pictures Corporation, Exhibited at Strand.

The manufacture of print paper, as illustrated by the E. I. S. Motion Pictures Corporation in a picture recently exhibited in the Strand theater program, is an interesting subject, indeed. The illustrator has commenced with the felling of trees in the white spruce forests, showing every detail down to the floating of the logs to the mills, where they are cut into short lengths, shorn of their bark and ground into pulp from which the paper is made. The conversion of the pulp into sheets of paper and the conveying of it in rolls to the newspaper offices, where they soon become printed news sheets, is all interesting matter which is presented in the most attractive way. We would presume that the picture covers in the neighborhood of two reels of film.

Hubbell Returns from Three-Year Trip

Hearst-Pathe Staff Photographer Carries Camera Into Many Strange Places.

C. J. HUBBELL, staff photographer of the Hearst-Pathe News, has arrived in New York after a three years' trip which took him from Alaska to Mexico on the Pacific Coast, to Hawaii and the interior of the Phillipines, Korea, Japan and China. During the trip he secured remarkable motion pictures, which are now shown in the Pathe's Indispensable Reel. Mr. Hubbell visited many points never before invaded by a white man and almost all of his photographed subjects faced the camera for the first time.

Before leaving the United States, Mr. Hubbell was the official photographer with Mary Roberts Rinehart, on her trip through the Northwest and the Glacier National Park. Later he visited the home of the prehistoric cliff dwellers in Arizona with Charles L. VanLoan, where he spent many months photographing these remarkable ancient scenes.

Early last year Mr. Hubbell sailed from San Francisco, stopping at Honolulu, from which point he proceeded to the Philippines. He journeyed far into the interior of the islands, joining a roving band of Igorrotes.

From Manila, Hubbell went to Hong Kong, where he photographed the East Indian soldiers preparing to go to the front. His trip took him from Hong Kong to Canton, thence to Shanghai, where the Chinese navy was photographed in action; up the Yangtze to Hankow by boat and on to Pekin, which he reached the day before last New Year's.

Through the aid of the American Legation, he was permitted to photograph the president, Li Yuan Hung, and to photograph the interior of the Forbidden City of China, including the throne rooms of the late Emperor, and he also made pictures of the rooms of the Dowager Empress.

From Pekin Hubbell went to Nanking, where he photographed the Vice-president of the Chinese Republic, reviewing ten thousand Chinese troops. These are among the most remarkable of Hubbell's pictures, as they show the Chinese recruits doing the peculiar goosestep, taught them by the German officers, who gave the reorganized Chinese Army its first instruction. From Nanking Mr. Hubbell went to the Great Wall of China and into Korea, which is now under Japanese control. Photographing all of the interesting subjects in Korea, he proceeded to Japan, where he filmed many of the Japanese shipbuilding plants, the army and navy in action and the most beautiful of the picturesque scenery of that country.

After visiting Tokio and other important Japanese cities, Hubbell sailed for home, stopping again at the Philippines and Hawaii on the return trip.

"The motion picture craze has swept Japan and China as it has the Occident," says Mr. Hubbell. "Although the Japanese have their own motion picture companies and their own actors, they also use vast quantities of American film and prefer them to the native product. The prices of admission to the theaters are extremely low and the Japanese spend all of their leisure time looking at pictures.

"Many odd customs prevail. Incidental to the showing of a picture in a Japanese theater, a lecturer appears at the side of the screen and depicts the emotions of the actors. He weeps audibly with the heroine and roars with laughter at the antics of the comedian."

Billy Libman

NO, HE is not a moving picture star, nor is he a film director, or manager of a theater; he is just plain little Billy Libman, called for short, "Shorty." Mr. Libman, who is a member of the well known firm of Menger & Ring, Inc., and who started on his southern tour recently, will visit all the prominent theaters in Virginia, Alabama, Memphis, Tenn.; Louisville, Ky., and Texas. He is an expert in lobby displays. Designed all frames for Strand, New York; Strand, New Orleans; all Fox's theaters, Stanley's theaters, B. S. Moss' theaters—in fact, most of the leading theaters in the United States. The value of his trip to the managers of theaters is big, as he can give suggestions, draw sketches right on the ground without any obligations on the part of the theater owners. He came to the conclusion that selling lobby displays from a catalogue is just like selling a cat in a bag. He therefore decided to make miniature samples of cases and frames, also portraits, and carry them with him to show the actual stuff he is selling. The owners and managers of theaters should take advantage of this rare opportunity.

Billy Libman.

Managers of theaters find the Menger & Ring lobby displays a most important part of their equipment and a great many theater owners are now placing their orders. A telegram has just been received from the Saenger Amusement Co., Inc., New Orleans, La., requesting that Mr. Libman call upon them at once to make immediate arrangements for the full equipment of their entire chain of thirty theaters Another large owner of theaters in the South has also placed his order for the equipment of his chain of theaters with the latest Menger & Ring Lobby displays.

To overcome the trouble in fitting pictures 8x10, 11x14, and 22x28 to lobby frames, Menger & Ring have a new patented interchangeable mat and slide which they are putting on their frames.

This is only one of the many new ideas in the advancement of lobby displays that is being introduced by Menger & Ring.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

WRITING from the Middle West an exhibitor asks for some good premium schemes. "I draw largely from the rural population," he explains, "and want some scheme to draw them in during the summer. I thought you might be able to suggest some little novelties that would pull."

Evidently the correspondent has in mind a series of premiums that will run through the summer, but we think that this would be too long a run unless he is willing to carry his premiumizing through the winter, as well. Premiums are habit-forming and, unless they are something intimately connected with the business, they require to be too elaborate. In general practise it is the rule not to offer as premiums goods in which the house deals, but there is no reason why a coffee house should not offer a coffee pot as a cumulative or bulk premium, and a better reason why it should offer a coffee pot than a list of articles ranging from pins to photographs. For motion picture theaters we prefer "souvenirs" to "premiums." Both are something given free with a purchase, but a souvenir suggests a gift rather than an article given as the due of the purchaser. Moreover, a souvenir may be more nearly related to the house.

The best souvenirs are those dealing with photoplayers and photoplays. In this class postcards of the players are, perhaps, the best known. The Kraus Manufacturing Co., the Cahill-Igoe Co., the Water Color Co. and others, issue very attractive postcards in varying finishes ranging from $3 per thousand up. At the smaller price the individual postcard costs less than the third of a cent. Even the five-cent theater can afford such a premium. The better finished cards have almost the value of photographs and, as a matter of fact, we use Kraus postcards in response to requests for our own picture for reproduction. The rotogravure effects are also good; better, indeed, than a poor photograph. To some extent the willingness of the players to send their pictures in response to requests has hurt the postcard, but now most players require money to be sent with an application, and this helps.

Postcards may be given out indiscriminately, but they work best when handled methodically. The best scheme is to give out only one player a night or week, or during the run of a certain program where there are two or three changes a week. To gain a complete set the patron must attend each change of bill. The pictures to be given out may be announced in advance or information withheld, as seems best to the management.

For more pretentious distributions there are larger cards than the regulation postcard. Some of these are too costly to be given out daily and should be given for coupons: so many coupons for each card. Here the coupons may be varied. A card may be given for a set of coupons in regular order. In this case, number the coupons with a series number. Those given out the first night, or period, are numbered one, the next two and so on. If five coupons are required for a card, then coupons from one to five or three to seven are required. Breaking the chain breaks the order and necessitates a fresh start. This scheme is good only when it is reasonably possible for the majority of the patrons to be regular in their attendance and when such regularity is the chief aim of the premium scheme. It is better to accept any coupon for the gift and even to give a premium as promised if all of the coupons bear the same series number. But there is one drawback to this scheme. Enthusiastic collectors are apt to bother other patrons with requests for their coupons. A slightly different coupon scheme is that used by Mr. Weber, of West Virginia. His house was the Star and he had his strip tickets printed with letter coupons spelling the name of the house. These were sold indiscriminately and any four coupons spelling the name were good for one free admission. In this instance they could be made good for the card.

Going higher in the scheme we come to premiums far more desirable, but too costly to be given indiscriminately. The Kraus paintings come within this class. They are sold at prices far below their apparent value, yet even the cheapest must bring in considerable revenue if the cost of the premium is to represent only three to five per cent. of the ticket values. Here the coupon scheme is used, but coupons running into three figures must be required. Patrons should be permitted to make a choice of the player they are to receive.

Free admissions are best given in the form of coupon books, to be used within a certain time or good until used, as the case may be. If the period of their validity is limited, the bargain should be more liberal than on the unlimited tickets. The general rate is $1.10 to $1.20 for the unlimited tickets. If you have reason to believe that you can pull them in with a limited ticket it is possible to make a real bargain; perhaps even $1.50 for a dollar if used within a four or six week period. Better see a lawyer about the wording of the contract to conform to state and city laws, but in general use, it is sufficient to state that "In consideration of the reduced price at which this ticket is sold it is expressly stipulated and agreed that it shall be good for admission only if presented within four weeks from the date of issue," or within any other period decided upon by the management.

This constitutes the range of souvenir and premium schemes that keep the present to the house. Once this is left behind, the range is limitless. Any sort of merchandise may then be offered at varying terms. It is the general rule that premiums should be of sufficient value to appear desirable. If the cost of the article is so small that less than one cent may be spent on the premium, it is better to couponise, and if the number of coupons obtainable is also small, the part-payment plan is used. This is perhaps the simplest scheme. You obtain your goods from some regular premium company. The cost may be fifty per cent. of the apparent or advertised value. You announce that a certain number of coupons and a certain sum in cash will bring a certain premium. Drug and grocery stores use much silver plated ware in this manner, but there is only a limited appeal to silver. It is better to extend the line, but not to make the offering too varied, since the cost is largely governed by the quantity purchased. This virtually gives you premiums for no more than the cost of handling, but the trouble in handling is appreciable in a picture theatre, and the part payment plan is seldom found to work to advantage. It is better to offer the articles for a greater number of coupons and without the cash feature. It is well, too, to have it understood that the premiums will be given out in the non-rush hours only, but if the rural trade is the object of the offer, it is apparent that the premiums must be available when the patron comes to town and not in some remote morning hour.

The chief organ of the premium handlers is the Novelty News, of Chicago, but the News does not want the occasional shopper as a subscriber. There are also novelty houses, such as N. Shure & Co., also of Chicago, handling novelties and mail order stuff. Use your letter heads in applying for catalogues, as the prices are so much lower than the sale prices that care is taken to prevent these catalogues from falling into the hands of the merely curious.

But Why Premiums?

This answers the correspondent's inquiry, but why premiums? Why not establish a healthy patronage? Put the premium money into advertising. If you want to reach the farmers, then go after the farmers. Their trade is worth while in these days of inter-urban trolleys and cheap automobiles. From the Secretary of State you can obtain the names of all who hold auto licenses. It may be necessary to send someone to the Capitol to copy off the names, but the lists are public records and should be available. You can circularize the auto owners in your territory with a form letter. Arrange for free parking space if your street is too narrow to permit autos to be parked in front. If you do not want to give something for nothing, arrange to give parking check with tickets and charge others a dime or a quarter. If you can park in front of the house, have a responsible person to watch the cars, and make capital of that fact. But the car owners are only a small percentage of the possible patrons. The trolleys can be made to feed your house. Get after the people along the lines of the trolley. Send out small boys with handbills or form letters. Let them reach all the houses either side of the trolley. Arrange for a bill board in or near the postoffices. It is against the law to post in postoffices maintained by the Government, but there is no law against a bill board close to, and many of these trolley town postoffices are general stores or even residences. There is a postoffice a couple of stations below us that is kept in the living room of a farm house. Put up a bill as close to the postoffice as you can. Perhaps you can coax the rural carrier to cheat a little and distribute your bills, but it is not a good practise, and a boy on a bicycle can cover the route as well and without putting you in danger of prosecution. In a town arrange with the telephone company to use the lines. Just calling up one party line is sometimes an all day job, but by arrangement with the manager of the service you can be hooked up with the lines that are open at the moment and keep on until you have covered your list.

This sort of work will give you a permanent patronage. Your premium chasers are liable to quit when you drop the premiums. It is better to use the premium as a souvenir, being fairly liberal in your distribution, but offering them as an appreciation and not as an inducement. Do not say: "I'll give you a post card for coming." Say rather: "I'm glad you came. Would you like a post card?" The gift will be better appreciated and have more effect.

Plain Slush.

The New York Tribune makes us just plain tired. When the muckraking game played out Samuel Hopkinson Adams has to do something with his trusty typewriter, and so Sam got a job with the New York Tribune on a scheme for exposing fake advertisements. For a time all went well, but the copy seems to be petering out, but the thing must go on, and so in a recent issue the man who runs the Ad-Visor is guilty of this atrocity:

> The Elmira Gazette knows how to "cop the day," as our fellow colyumist says. On May 19th it ran this advertisement:

> REV. BILLY SUNDAY
>
> Creates a sensation wherever he goes. Everything is overshadowed by his wonderful messages. During the early days of Sunday's Buffalo campaign the coming of one of the world's greatest motion pictures was heralded at one of the theaters—it created the greatest surprise Buffalo ever had, and we are pleased to announce that the self-same production is
>
> COMING TO ELMIRA
>
> direct from the Maxine Elliott theater, New York City, where it has been playing at an admission of from 50c. to $1.00, but to give everybody in Elmira an opportunity to witness this most wonderful eight-part photoplay we will present "Idle Wives" for the first time at popular prices
>
> AT THE MOZART.
>
> Only the closest scanning reveals the fact that it is the photoplay "Idle Wives" which was being featured, and not Billy Sunday. People have been fined in court under the food law for labeling canned peas with the word "soaked" in tiny letters and a picture of a large, fresh, green peapod. Some day, faking the public in moving picture advertisements will be as illegal as it is disreputable.

We have always had some respect for the Tribune, but if this is the best it can do nowadays, we are through. There is a world of difference between misbranded food and catchline advertising, and we'll bet any reasonable sum that no one paid an admission to the Mozart in anticipation of hearing Billy Sunday, and very considerably less than the "closest scanning," will show it is a theater advertisement about a film play. If you read beyond the second catchline you cannot possibly be in the slightest error, and any school boy should be able to see from the top bank that it is a film advertisement. Mr. Ad-Visor either has softening of the brain or he is terribly hard up for material. If the latter is the case and he is sincerely desirous of cleaning up, he might start off with the Tribune itself. Lately we commented on the use of a certain snide advertisement on ready print programs. The advertisement was dropped and the publisher told us that he thought it must be all right as it ran in the Tribune each Sunday. If the Ad-Visor wants to investigate a good fraud let him look up the last Sunday edition of the paper he works for. In the "Help wanted—female" he will probably find an advertisement that runs to the effect that girls are wanted for moving pictures, and no experience necessary. If he will send someone to the address given he will discover that the advertisement is a flat and deliberately wilful lie. Girls are not wanted for the motion pictures. They are wanted to pay footage rates for a "test film" that will damn them every time they offer it for viewing in a studio because a test film is a direct admission of ignorance and inexperience. After the Ad-Visor has picked the mote from his own eye, he might talk to some experienced copy reader and discover that the catchline style is widely used all over the country, with no intent to deceive but merely to attract attention to the advertising. The Tribune is quite welcome to our goat.

F. S. Workman, of the Best, Brainerd, Minn., sends in a strip folder and wants to know how to better it, while maintining the same style. The folder is a single strip, 12½ by 2⅛ inches, the narrow measure being the width. It is folded once to give a folder 6¼ inches by the original width. The front carries the heading and two of the days, and the inside eight other announcements, covering eleven days in all. The days are dated in full face and are spaced instead of ruled off. At the end of the first week there is a ruled paragraph to break to the next week. It runs: "Don't be afraid to enjoy a good laugh. It's better than any prescription ever taken to a druggist." To get this in, the day before and the two days after have to come close to the rule, and it breaks the display. The general make up shows from the clipping reproduced. Mr. Workman knows that the typography is not up to the standard. Very probably he cannot get eight or ten point display faces for his titles. Perhaps he can get ten point italics. In this case he can set his titles in italic and underline with not larger than one point brass rule. This will throw the titles into prominence and yet not overload the narrow width. The display face is to be preferred, but probably he cannot get these unless he is willing to invest ten or fifteen dollars in his own fonts, and this would scarcely pay. If the titles are not underlined, it would make a good break between the days to pull the full face dates over to the left hand margin and underline these with two point. This will more sharply divide the days. Another scheme would be to leave the dates as they are and use the eight point caps, but underline above and below with one point rule, set two points away from the type. Still another scheme would be to narrow the measure and use heavier marginal dates at the left in three lines. The scheme of starting the program on the front page is not wholly good. But two days run here and these are apt to be lost. It would be better to use the lower half of the front for eight point house talk with a twelve point display head in the form of a catchline, run the program on the inside pages and over to the back, if necessary, with a carry line. Where a subject is run two or more days, the title should get a heavier face than the other titles, to suggest a greater distinction. On the back page he should retain and feature the brief sketch of the coming attractions. We quote the one sent in:

> July is just brimming over with good things at this theater. Just look! Two big Bill Hart stories, Helen Ware in "The Garden of Allah"; another Brennen picture, "The Lone Wolf," Lillian Walker starring; Bryant Washburn in two Skinner stories; Dorothy Gish, Viola Dana in "Rosie O'Grady"; Louis Glaum, and we expect Theda Bara and also "The Barrier," the greatest photoplay yet. Now aren't you glad you live in Brainerd?

This paragraph is probably the best business-getter on the program. It is brief, informative and properly enthusiastic. It gives a savor to the entire program; just the proper touch, like a pinch of salt to a flat dish. We hope Mr. Workman will place us on the mailing list.

Using Coupons.

Charles Decker, of the Majestic, Grand Junction, Colorado, is using coupon books, selling eight fifteen-cent tickets for a dollar; a bonus of twenty cents. Some managers argue that ticket books represent a loss, but we think that it means a distinct gain unless the house is so well patronized that it sells every seat every night and has a demand for more. In the first place, it takes the line from the box office and expedites getting the house in. To a large extent it saves a lot of change making. Then there is the appeal of the bargain to the purchaser; and men fall for this argument as strongly as do the women. It encourages the habit of regularity, and also encourages more liberal attendance. The holder of a ticket book makes an extra trip to the house because he has one free admission. Then he makes another extra trip. He may use three extra tickets because he has saved the cost of one. Another thing is the having the tickets. It is not like spending money. The purchaser buys the book when he has money; possibly on salary night. He does not then feel the dollar or two as acutely as many may feel the ten or fifteen cents a day or so before salary day. The ticket book is a capitalization of psychology. The Rowland and Clark theaters in Pittsburgh give a really handsome ticket book holder for eight book covers, but it would be better to offer a cover with five dollars' worth of tickets sold at once, or use these to premiumize the dull nights or in other premium schemes. A ticket cover makes a good premium in that it does not set a precedent that must be followed up by the adoption of other gift schemes. You give out the covers and that is all. The ticket scheme works so well that for a selected list it might be a good scheme to get a lot of book covers, have the names of your regular patrons printed on these covers and send them by mail with a card announcing the inauguration of the scheme. In even the small towns you can almost always find some small boy with a toy press who will do the typesetting and printing on the covers in return for some tickets for himself, and almost any toy press will be large enough to do the work. White size can be used on dark covers, but if possible it would be better to get covers in tan or buff buckram and print in blue or black. Just get these covers and enclose them to patrons with a card to the effect that books to fit the covers can be had at the box office for a stated price. Where the admission price is variable use five-cent coupons and call for a varying number of the coupons. In that case it is well to have a sign above the entrance reading "Admission tonight (space) coupons." Then have numerals to set in to indicate the proper number. And do as Mr. Decker does and have the books "just fit the vest pocket" and small enough to fit the average feminine purse. And next time Mr. Decker sees the printer he might ask him to be careful of his decimal points. "$120 for $1.00" does not look very convincing.

Both Neat.

Tarleton Winchester, of the Pathe Exchange, sends in two pieces from the Temple, Hartsville, S. C. One is a small program with a paneless front which we think we have already mentioned. The other is a striking card for Robert Edeson in The Light That Failed. We regret that the colored stock and blue ink will not reproduce, for it is a really harmonious example of type selection and composition If the house will send this or a similar card on white stock with black ink, we shall be obligated. The selection of sizes and faces is so well done that the first glimpse conveys the suggestion that here must be something worth while, since it looks so well. It is this reason which causes us to lay such emphasis upon typography. It is not merely a matter of personal taste, but the public, not knowing type, does sense a good display or the reverse and judges the house accordingly.

Hooking Up.

We clip from Paramount Progress this reproduction from the advertising of the Grand theater, Durham, N. C. This is something new to us, and the Paramount editor also comments upon it. Notice how the reading notice, headed by the same cut as that in the advertisement, and placed alongside the advertisement hooks the two into what is practically a single advertisement, while dispensing with the forbidding mass of type in the advertisement proper. A trade mark cut will not have the same effect. It must be a portrait and not even a scene cut, since the latter will not possess the same individuality.

New in Baltimore.

J. M. Shellman sends in an opening program he wrote for the McHenry, Baltimore, Md. The house is named after the fort over which flew the Star Spangled Banner of which Francis Scott Key wrote. The first issue is eight pages with the house front and specially drawn title for the first page and the inside four of type. Page three is a greeting and six the time table, prices and general information. They have a "Market Matinee" every Thursday, Friday and Saturday. This starts at half-past ten in the morning. This is probably in conformity with the Southern custom of going to market on set days and shopping with a basket. It also explains the line to the effect that baskets and parcels may be checked with the doorman. The program proper is nicely laid with the cuts properly made up and the titles well displayed. The house is off to a good start.

The Victoria.

The Victoria, Buffalo, ran a Liberty Bond appeal in place of the regular front page headline for its program the last week of the sale and then did the same thing for the Red Cross the week following. For the Liberty Bond appeal it used a line by Lincoln and immediately below announced The Crisis, with a picture of Drane as Lincoln. This was particularly appropriate. The same issue carries on the inside page:

PERHAPS YOU DON'T GIVE A RIP WHO I AM.

(Portrait cut).

Folks, I blush!

I want to get acquainted with every VICTORIA patron, and that is the reason for this picture.

My name is Edward L. Hyman, and Mr. Mitchell H. Mark has bestowed upon me the important trust of entertaining you with photoplays worth-while and music that is right.

The very fact that I have nerve enough to print this picture of myself should be proof that I am not trying to dodge responsibility for anything I present for your pleasure at the VICTORIA.

We are all one great family over in this splendid residential section.

There are many folks, I know, who come to the VICTORIA consistently, who like the shows, but yet would make suggestions if they knew the manager.

Therefore, I introduce myself with this picture.

Now that you know me let's have your brick-bats and your bouquets. EDWARD L. HYMAN, Manager.

That's a good introduction, and evidently the Victoria program is going to be the same breezy sort of organ it has always been. The house announcements are invariably snappy, not fulsome praise, but brisk and breezy. We quote a few from recent programs to give an idea of the general style. They are worth studying.

"THE HIGHWAY OF HOPE."

If you have a skittish heart, we wouldn't advise you to watch this mass formation of mile-a-minute, pepperine-packed-on-the-level excitement. It sweeps you along like a Lake Erie gale. It has enough snap for eight average motion-romances. It has to do with a dern smart woman who got rich quick. Kathlyn Williams doesn't need any boosting, nor does House Peters. You like them both, you'll like the play. We'll guarantee that dad won't snooze while this feature is on, nor will you figure out how you're going to trim that new summer sport suit.

"CLOVER'S REBELLION."

When you are weary of mind and you just shut your eyes and forget everything, isn't that a delicious languor? Anita Stewart has the same effect upon you, only you get plenty of action along with it. She rests you while she campers you into fields where you have always been a stranger. In this play she will prove to you that love will find a way in spite of dukes and riches and ambitions of scheming relatives.

This is jus the entertainment you need after a hard day. It will leave you refreshed and you'll go home with your mind stilled. It is better than a dose of tonic.

"THE CAPTAIN OF THE GRAY HORSE TROOP."

This is a peppery story of the west with an Indian and army atmosphere. It is taken from Hamlin Garland's thrill-jammed novel of the very same name. It has to do with the man who rose up as the champion of poor Lo, the fast disappearing red-skin. It will grip you fast with its sheer boldness, its snappy portrayal of the uncurbed passions of the frontier and the fight for life.

ROSCOE (FATTY) ARBUCKLE
A Mountain of Fun
in
"A RECKLESS ROMEO."
All Cluttered Up With Chuckles.

Fatty, himself, believes that he has kept many a family squabble out of the divorce courts by making both sides laugh so hard that they forgot their grievances. If you are a tired business man and your wife gave you a badly cooked dinner, come on over and see Fatty. You'll forgive her, then. Or if you are a wife with a "kick," you see Fatty, too. The kids love him. We don't have to urge them to come. You might as well promise the youngsters now, or they'll make life miserable for you. Their laughter will help lift your own sorrows.

It is not possible to give the oddities of make up without cuts, and lemon paper and blue ink will not reproduce well. The program keeps to the same general layout week after week, but there is almost always some new line followed either in treatment of text or type.

Try It Out.

When you buy something, sit down and try to figure out why you bought this brand of shoes insead of some other, or one kind of suspenders instead of another kind. The same appeal that moves your suspender buying will influence the amusement purchases of others.

The Test.

Don't plan your advertising to please the exchange managers. Make your appeal to the people who are going to pay you money if you can interest them. They are the ones who count.

Make Them Tell.

One ten point line that reaches home is worth a whole page of stuff that isn't read. Make every line drive home.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing adressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses by critized, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Magazine Rights.

EVIDENTLY there is a cycle of fiction rights inquiries pending, and to head off as many of these questions as possible, let's go into the matter again.

To begin with, an idea is a property capable of varied treatments. The same idea may possibly be used in several forms. It is even possible to offer for sale first serial rights, then the book rights, the photoplay rights, the dramatic rights, second publication rights, and even then you might work it onto a song. But to do all this—to split it into components—you must first possess such a reputation as a writer, with the public, as will justify you in offering your work in its many forms to as many different purchasers. Until you have that reputation, it is best to be devoutly thankful if you can sell the idea in a single form.

It is entirely possible to offer a photoplay and reserve the story rights, or to offer a fiction story and reserve the dramatic and picture rights. It is possible to offer with this restriction, but it is almost impossible to sell with such a string tied to it. It is better to sell all rights to a magazine or photoplay company, than to fall between two stools and sell to neither, trying to land both.

Suppose that you offer a photoplay for sale, reserving the fiction and dramatic rights. The company may care nothing for the stage rights, but the story right is another matter. There are half a dozen magazines now largely devoted to stories of the films in fiction form. This is regarded by the manufacturer as good advertising. He not only supplies the company with a synopsis from which the story may be written, but gives free the still pictures for the illustrations. In any event he expects to issue the story in the form of a more or less ample synopsis, and such a publication might traverse the author's rights or be regarded by him as traversing such rights. In such a case it would be absurd to purchase that story and "buy a lawsuit." The story will be passed over in favor of one to which the author offers all rights and will sign a release slip to that effect.

Suppose, on the other hand, that your first form is a short story, which you offer, reserving the photoplaywright and dramatic rights. Here another objection offers. Most important magazines now have a working agreement with some photoplay company by which the company is permitted to make any published story into a film play. In this event, the reservation of a particularly good story would be regarded by the film company as evidence of bad faith if not as a downright breach of contract. Here again there is a possible lawsuit purchased with the idea.

If you seek to sell as a stage play, reserving the film and fiction rights, you hit another angle. It may be a year or more before the play producer is ready to stage your work. If, in the meantime, you have cheapened the idea through presentation in print or picture, the freshness of the theme is lost. It may even be that uncautiously you have permitted the production without copyright and all rights have been lost. Again a possible lawsuit.

In each instance there exists the dual creation; the story and the play. It may seem unfair to you that you are not permitted to reap the benefits. It is unfair. It is distinctly unfair that in selling the golden egg you must also sell the goose that laid it, and in time it is very possible that the condition will right itself, but we are speaking now of the present and not the future, and the answer is plain. You must either conform to custom, wait until custom pleases you or gain such renown that you are in a position to dictate to the purchaser the terms of sale. Your choice is a matter of personal preference, but if you want to sell and are not yet so well known as to be in demand, you must abide by the terms of the buyer. You do not have to sell. You cannot be forced to sell, but if you desire to sell, you must offer a bargain pleasing to the purchaser.

In the case of serial features it is almost a condition that the publication rights must go with the film, since the most valuable advertising rises from the serial publication in newspapers in towns using the serial. Here the publisher does not profit from the sale of the rights. He gives these rights away and sometimes even goes to considerable expense to have the matter boiler-plated for the greater convenience of country publishers. The serial price covers, or is supposed to cover, the story rights as well. The serial is useless without the publication rights.

In a nutshell, then, the condition is this: You may reserve to your own profit all rights but the one offered for sale, but you stand practically no chance of selling any right unless you offer all for a single price which may seem to you to be woefully inadequate. But through this sacrifice for the sake of publication, you may, in time, through the excellence of this published work, gain a position with the public which will enable you to make your own terms.

And since there are many who ask advice only to disregard it, here is the other side: You are more apt to sell the rights to a story to a film concern than to sell the story rights to a produced film. In other words, it is better to offer the story first and the photoplay afterward. Film men are willing to profit by the advertising a published story gets. Magazine editors—apart from those few using film plays for story bases, do not care to follow film publications. The editors of the photoplay magazines do not pay for stories. They do pay for the writing of these stories, but this work is given to staff men in preference to the outside writer. You might offer to write your story yourself if you know to what magazine it has been given, but even here your chance is slight.

To protect your rights you must observe these points:

The story or film play must clearly state that the fiction or photoplay rights are reserved.

The release you sign must specify that all save the rights purchased lie with you.

The story must either be copyrighted in your name, or be copyrighted by the maker or publisher and all reserved rights immediately assigned to you.

This assignment of rights must be recorded in the copyright office within 90 days of such transfer.

This last is most important, for the law presumes that the holder of a right will protect such rights.

False Gods.

Only a few weeks ago an actor spoke to us of his hope of landing the rights to a certain series of stories running in a popular magazine. He felt that with these plays he could make a name for himself that would place him on a higher level and that would relieve him of the necessity for loafing in his work lest his stronger personality and greater knowledge of acting "fade" the star in whose support he appeared. Then he reported that the author had sold the rights to another company, and he named a price that would be absurd were not the precedent so dangerous. Because these stories had appeared in a widely-read publication and had become favorably known, the company acquiring the rights had paid a sum vastly in excess of the general valuations, and really more than the stories, plus the advertising they had received, were worth, but bidding had been spirited, and the company had paid an extravagant sum to boost its general product, most of which is the output of a staff of hack writers. And yet, only a couple of months before, the same company refused to consider at any price the first of a series of original stories, written especially for the camera, done into continuity by one of the best and most competent writers in the business from the script of the author; one of the forefost dramatists of today; one who used to be known as a "Charles Frohman writer." The story was untried. The story could not be considered unless it was in the film. In other words the head of a company capitalized for several million dollars did not know enough about stories to judge values. He could jump at something others had shown him to be good, but he could not judge the merits of original and more fitting work, and yet he thinks he is a great manager. Could anything be more absurd than this worshiping of the false gods of popularity? Don't buy favorites. Create them and take the full profit.

Saving.

When postage goes to three cents you'll be more careful what you send out. You'll be a darned sight more careful of those extra pennies than you now are of your professional reputation. Why? The man who sends out stuff before he is ready to compete with the really skilled workers is doing himself infinitely more financial harm than the man who wastes three cent stamps where hitherto he has wasted only twos. The increase in postage may mean as much as $25 to some writers in the course of a year. The sending out of improper material, matter written before the author is able to write the proper grade, may mean a loss of opportunity represented by four and five figure sums. Be at least as careful of your reputation as you are of your pennies.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

An Old Timer.

B. E. Dawson, Waseca, Minnesota, who very evidently is an old timer in the game, kicks in with the following:

> Although I have been a constant reader of the World for many years, it has been a long, long time since I have written you in the interest of better production. In the past I have never been satisfied to let well enough alone, but have, instead, tried to improve conditions, and have in several ways been quite successful in my endeavor. I still have the very first adjustment made by myself, for advancing or retreating one carbon at a time in order to control the angle of the crater with relation of the condensing lens. I have a home-made shutter which reduces flicker on the simplex by at least thirty per cent. (I can imagine Frank Cannock grinding his molars as he reads this statement; also General Manager Porter of the Precision Company making remarks tending to cast doubt upon the veracity of Friend Dawson. Also I myself question the correctness of his statement. It is quite possible he has reduced flicker, but in all human probability he has accomplished this by means of a shutter which more nearly fits the local condition than did the shutter sent by the Simplex Company, which same might have applied equally to any other make of projection machine.—Ed.) and other little devices which save labor to the operator, as well as delivering a better result on the screen. And lastly, but by no means least, I have worked out the idea which has bothered the heads of many operators, and am now able to operate two projection arcs on one motor generator set without at any time overloading it, warming up on A. C., and switching over to D. C. without any appreciable evidence of the act upon the screen. When the machine starts up for the next reel, the operator simply pulls a trip line, which cuts off the light on the reel he is finishing, automatically transferring it to the other lamp and cutting out the alternating current with which that lamp has been warming up. Unless you are able, by close watching, to catch the double exposure which occurs for about one second, you would never know when one reel is finished and the next begun. This equipment may be installed for any make of machine, and for any style of motor generator, at a cost of about $25, but before going to the expense of a patent I would like to ask if you are aware of anything of the kind being on the market. In closing let me exclaim: Long live the World and its staff, and long live Richardson, who has done so much to better conditions on the screens of this and other countries!

Well, Brother Dawson, it seems to me you have grabbed the wrong pig by the ear. The thing for you to do is have a competent patent attorney search the records and see whether any patent has been granted upon a device similar to yours. Patents are numbered by the millions, and it would be utterly impossible for any man to answer your question intelligently, without having first searched the records. Personally I believe something of this kind has been used, but I could not say positively, particularly in view of the fact that I don't know how you are pulling off your particular stunt. It is altogether possible you have something of real value. I could not speak intelligently with regard to that, however, until I had first examined and tested out the working of your apparatus. Many thanks for your kind wishes to the Moving Picture World, my colleagues and myself.

The Real Goods.

Mrs. O. C. Hunt.

In Colorado Springs I found a real shirtwaist, skirt and high-heeled long-haired crank-twister (it's really run by a motor, but I couldn't make it sound the way I wanted to that way). As will be observed by what lies between the waist and millinery that brother O. C. Hunt, whose squaw she is, is some considerable picker himself. Mrs. Hunt operates the relief trick at the Odeon theater, where Hunt is chief operator.

It is said that recently Mrs. Hunt was running a [illegible] in which a woman was posing as master mechanic and chief architect in the making of a pie. Suddenly the machine stopped, and friend audience heard a punitive voice proclaim, from the general direction of the operating room: "Excuse the delay, please. I'm cutting that out, the cook didn't put enough peroxide in her pie crust."

'Twas only a rumor, however. Mayhap it was untrue. Anyhow Colorado Springs swears a mighty swear that Mrs. Hunt is some operator.

Address Wanted.

Joe Welch, Bicknell, Indiana, says:

> Note on page 207, Third Edition of the Hand-book, you endorse and recommend the Ideal film cleaner. Where can this device be obtained and what is the price? In June 30th issue I notice that Harold Amlie is having trouble with a grind and a ghost. I had the same difficulty on a 6-A and no adjustment of the toggle gear would remedy it. However, I eliminated the difficulty by having a local machinist make a new bushing for the cam shaft on the fly wheel side. The old bushing was worn so that the toggle gear and fly wheel pinion did not mesh properly. Since installing the new bushing Mr. Grind has been conspicuous by its absence.
>
> I am a small town operator, therefore not a union man. This does not, however, imply that I am antagonistic toward organization. As a matter of fact I am not. I am a possessor of the third edition of the Hand-book, also Hawkins Electrical Guide, and I mean to have Hallberg's book as soon as I can corral enough of the long green to make the buy. I am also a constant reader of our projection department. Notwithstanding all this, however, I must admit there is still a lot that I need to know. In closing I wish to our department that success which is its just due.

I am dictating this reply away out in Chicago, to that rara avis, a Hotel Stenographer whose brains are not made of putty. However, even under this favorable circumstance I cannot look across 1,000 miles of space, through the sides of a wooden packing box, located in a basement, and secure for you the desired address. If the device in question is still being made, I would suggest to its manufacturer that he advertise that fact; also that he communicate his address to Joe Welch, Colonial theater, Bicknell, Indiana. As to your advice concerning the powers grind, why, in the name of Brother Amlie, I thank you, and pass the information along for the benefit not only of Amlie, but other operators who may be experiencing the same trouble due to the same cause. I must, however, caution operators with regard to having projection machine repairs made by local machinists. You may win out on that sometimes, but it is rather risky. Better have the repairs made by the machine manufacturer and thus avoid the risk of serious injury to your projector. The companies will, I believe, loan you a projection mechanism to use during the time your machine is undergoing repairs. As to not being a union operator, why you are within the jurisdiction of the union to which you are closest in actual distance.

From Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania.

Frederick J. Alles (I don't guarantee the spelling of the name), Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, sends in the following:

> At last I have dug into my tool bag, found my jimmy and busted into the Projection Department. Wilkes-Barre is a comparatively small city, and I thought it would possibly be of interest to you to know how things are progressing among the mountains of Pennsylvania. As for myself and my partner, Harry Richards, we are in charge of projection at the Orpheum theater, running two Power's 6-A, motor-driven machines, taking current through a Wagner Rotary Converter. I am, however, one of those chaps who is never satisfied with the present results, but constantly try to get a better one on the screen, in which endeavor I am aided by the Handbook and the good old Moving Picture World Projection Department. If it was not for yourself and our department I think a lot of us fellows would be up a rather tall stump, as there is no other source of reliable information on the technical end of projection, or even on the practical end.
>
> My operating room is 10x14 feet in size, with a rewinder and generator room 10x10, the latter containing work-bench and tool-rack. Sorry I have no photograph of it as yet, but will have one soon. Operating room ventilation consists of a 14-inch blower (ceiling is 14 feet high) creating forced draft. We run from 11:30 a. m. to 11 p. m., and the shows are all run on schedule time, doing away with all the fast running, which same operates to kill the screen result. I work six and one-quarter hours per day, while Mr. Richards, my relief, works five hours. My shift is from 11 until 1, and from 6 until 11. Local Union 325 I. A. T. S. E., Wilkes-Barre, is pretty well organized. I hope this finds space in the next issue of the World, and close with three cheers for the Star Spangled Banner, yourself and the World.
>
> Oh, yes, by the way, I nearly forgot to say, with regard to H. B. Edgecomb's article in a recent issue, regarding damp carbon, I tried two damp carbons, with literally rotten results. I then tried two which I had dried thoroughly by laying on top of the lamphouse, and secured what I may call a perfect light, all of which substantiates Brother Edgecomb's argument.

With regard to Wilkes-Barre, Friend Alles, I wrote the Local three times last summer, at the time I was making the Pennsylvania trip, offering to come back by way of Wilkes-Barre and address them on practical projection, but was not accorded even the courtesy of a reply. I mention this because it is within the range of possibility that the letters never reached the Local. If the Local wishes it and the Scranton Local also cares to arrange for an address in that city I would be glad to ride down on Nancy Hanks and Go-Devil and visit you some time next fall. With regard to your operating room, its dimensions sound good. Presumably the ventilation fan pumps the air up through a vent flue, though you did not say so. In order to secure healthful conditions, however, as well as proper conditions with regard to fire hazard, it is necessary that the ports be covered with glass, and that there be a fresh air intake, at or near the floor line, bringing in air from outside the building. You say you run on schedule time. Well now, brother, exactly what does that mean? If you mean that friend manager gives you a certain set number of minutes to run your show in each day, without variation, why most emphatically you must "drag" some days, and speed on others, because you are not going to have the same footage of film every day; also it is very seldom two programmes will require the same amount of time for projection, even though they be of equal footage. If, on the other hand, you mean that you run the new show as it ought to be run, the first time, and make that time the schedule for that show, why you are doing exactly what you ought to, and the only thing you can do and get really high-class, artistic projection.

As to getting this into the next issue of the Moving Picture World, why, old man, your letter, which was written June 28th, did not reach me until July 8th. You know I have been away on the road for four and one-half months. I am dictating its reply in Chicago, July 17th, and it, of course, will not get into the department for at least two, and probably three, weeks. Even if I were in New York it would be utterly impossible to get a letter into the "next issue."

One-Man Local.

In one city visited on my recent journey the arrangements were not all they should have been, and the live wires in the local (there were only three of them) excused this by saying that the affairs of the organization were controlled by one or two members, and that these men were non-progressive. One man in particular, it was complained, "ran things to suit himself." "He," said the good brothers, "is a good operator—about the best we have—and whatever he says goes. The rest just do as he says."

In this particular instance, after satisfying myself that the brothers set forth the actual conditions, just about as they were, I visited this self-constituted leader's theater, and after watching a very mediocre screen result for some moments (shadows at the bottom of the screen in less than five minutes, and projection just fair in other respects), climbed into his operating room, in which I found absolutely no evidence of anything more than very ordinary ability.

But this was not what I started out to say. If the members of a local let one or two men run the affairs of the union, why that most decidedly is up to them. If one or two men possess the necessary energy to do the work which other members will not do, and if they are steering the local in the right direction, why there is little or no complaint can be justly made. But if these active leaders steer the local in the wrong direction, and cause it to commit serious and irreparable errors, why the local has no one to blame but itself. These men could not lead without the consent of those who are being led. If I let a man lead me around by the nose, and cause me to commit blunders, I am not going to squawk about it. The unfortunate part is, however, that in a condition of this kind it often happens that there are two or three progressive men who would lead the local in the right direction, but who are held down and literally chained by the fact that a non-progressive membership is being led, or rather misled, by one or two non-progressive men. If it were myself, however, I would undertake to make things reasonably interesting for both the misleaders and their supporters. They would either wake up and change their ways, or I would take the contract of making life miserable for them until they did.

Adds His Mite.

H. E. Boatright, Tabor, Iowa, who was present when I addressed the Omaha, Nebraska, men, writes as follows:

> I want to add my mite in recognition of your masterly heart-to-heart talk at the Rome Hotel, Omaha, June 17th. Like yourself, I am an ex-railroad man, from the operating department of the Rock Island in Iowa. I have been in the show business for about a year and a half, and trust you will allow me to remark that it is some business to run a picture show in a college town, and get the right kind of pictures—those which will appeal to the better class of people. Tabor is a town of twelve hundred. My house seats two hundred, and is of the store-room type. It has changed hands ever so often, the change occurring every time the unwashed owner found that it was a hard game to go against, unless you knew the road, or at least tried hard to find the right one. We, Mrs. B. and myself (and she is not the "silent" partner in the business by any manner of means), read everything in the Moving Picture World as soon as we get it. We started right in with one motto nailed to the mast with railroad spikes, namely, "Only the Best," and we have stood by that motto, kept our screen absolutely clean, and given a show to which mothers are not afraid to send their children, either accompanied or unaccompanied. And let me tell you, Friend Richardson, that means a whole lot to any exhibitor. Provide a place which is safe and desirable for the kiddies, and the old ones will quickly drop in line.
>
> I think I get a fairly good projection, with an 11-foot picture at fifty-five feet. We run Bluebirds Monday, children's program Thursday, and regular service the rest of the week. Morally we have one of the cleanest towns in the country. We have never yet found a spot of tobacco expectoration on the floor, or a cigar or cigarette stub. Last Saturday night and matinee (letter written June 25th, Ed.) we ran "Civilization," and made good on it. No vampire, sex lure, or other suggestive pictures can get a place on our screen. Mrs. B. would not stand for it even if I would (yes, and if you both would, a goodly section of your audience wouldn't, therefore you are wise in your generation, Ed.). Your gospel of perfect projection is what is needed in the photo play game; also it is needed badly. My own individual present requirement is a speed control, my machine is belted direct from motor to fly wheel, and I would like very much to get a human touch into the picture, which I cannot unless I get a new machine. One thing, however, is flat, namely, I do not and will not speed the picture. I dislike very much to play any special feature without music, and try to have some of the very best, with very little rag-time, every Monday night. I am only sorry that I cannot have a music score for each picture, but then we are in a small town and must do with small town stuff, though it is often unsatisfactory. In closing, for I feel I have talked enough, I want to say amen to your entire address at the Rome. It was scholarly, came from a man who knew what he was talking about, was right to the point, and was put in language so plain that anyone could understand. You called a spade a spade in good, plain terms, and could give all kinds of reasons for doing it. The war conditions are not affecting us, and the future of pictures looks good to me. I feel that they are getting better all the time, and my idea is that the small town man, at least, who wants to stay in the game during the next five years, had better appeal to the best element in the community. There are plenty of good pictures in the market to enable him to do this.

With regard to your past remark, Brother Boatright, you are, in my judgment, absolutely correct. There are plenty of clean, splendid pictures on the market, and the exhibitor who caters to depravity by showing depravity, no matter what the excuse may be, or who shows nakedness under the thin guise of that much abused term "art," is simply grabbing a few dollars of quick money at the expense of ultimate heavy loss. I, myself, have been a moving picture machine operator and exchange manager and an exhibitor, though this is not generally known. I believe I know the moving picture game at least as well as the average man, and I most emphatically don't believe there is anything to be gained, either in the small or large town, through catering to the evil passions of men and women, which is precisely what the average "uplift" (alleged) photoplay, or the average photoplay showing nakedness does.

I am very glad, indeed, to know that you appreciated and approved of my humble efforts. I only wish I could deliver my message to every exhibitor and operator in the country under as favorable conditions as those under which it was delivered in Omaha, Nebraska. You are wrong in assuming that you will be obliged to purchase a new machine in order to get speed control. In the Handbook, page 279, you will find directions for building a fairly satisfactory speed control, but you can get the real article, either from Walter G. Preddy, or from Elbert & Hugel, both of San Francisco, California. These machines are illustrated on pages 275 and 276 of the Handbook, and they both operate on the same general principles as those of the Nicholas Power control. They may be attached to any machine. I shall be glad to hear from you at any time Friend Boatright, and gladly place at your disposal the projection department, which yourself and fellow exhibitors must feel at liberty to consult whenever you stand in need of help on any problem relating to projection.

What Do You Think About It?

A. D. Hotaling, DeLand, Florida, voices a complaint which will be enthusiastically endorsed by quite some considerable few operators, and does it in the following language:

> Just a few lines to explain the predicament I am in. Received two Vitagraph pictures, viz.: "The Light at Dusk" and "Dollars and the Woman" in a literally rotten physical condition. The latter was received direct from the exchange. After several hours of labor I succeeded in putting them in very good condition. Perhaps I was in error, but I sent in a bill to the Atlanta office of the Greater Vitagraph for $5 for making the repairs, charging $3 for one and $2 for the other. The exchange replied, with regard to the first one, "The Light at Dusk," that they wanted a little further information, and said that they could "get a lot of film inspected for $3." On June 22, I used "Dollars and the Woman" and sent a bill for $2, making a total of $5, which sum I asked them to kindly remit. On June 25 I received the following communication signed by the manager of Atlanta office of the Greater Vitagraph: "Dear Sir: In reply to yours of the 22d would say that we are not enclosing remittance, as per your request, as we cannot reconcile ourselves to your ideas."
>
> I pointed out to them that it was not the operator's duty to inspect films, and that the managers pay rental on the presumption that they will receive films in condition to run; also that by sending out stuff in this disgraceful condition they not only injured their own reputation, but ours as well. It was through me that my employers booked Vitagraph pictures, and now, after inspecting all their pictures for several weeks, at the rate of two a week, this is the thanks I get. I am inclosing both their letters. Now, Brother Richardson, what is a fellow going to do? Run this junk, which is supposed to be in first-class physical condition, through the projectors and have half a hundred breakdowns, or inspect and repair their films gratis? I have always done inspection free, but when it comes to putting such miserable stuff into a condition to run I am going to balk. It isn't up to me.

Right you are. The exchange has no more moral right to force an operator to do their inspecting and repairing than they have to knock him down with a piece of lead pipe and steal his pocket-book. It is quite true that the exchange could possibly get considerable film inspected for $3. We grant that freely, but Mr. Greater Vitagraph, Atlanta, exchange manager, THERE WAS NO ONE PREVENTING YOU FROM DOING IT, WAS THERE? I know of no law which stopped you from getting all the inspection and repair you wanted at that rate. The question is, "WHY THE DEVIL DIDN'T YOU GET IT?" The evidence is that, instead of getting this cheap repairs you are talking about, YOU TRIED TO FORCE THE OPERATOR TO DO IT FOR NOTHING. If the operator was compelled to put your films into condition to run after receiving them directly from your exchange it strikes me he had a perfect right to charge any sum he might see fit to charge, provided it be at all within the range of reason, AND IT WAS UP TO YOU TO PAY THE BILL WITHOUT ANY KICKING. If you didn't want to pay the operator's price for inspection and repairs, you didn't have to, did you? You could have had them (the repairs) made before they (the films) went to the theater, couldn't you? This thing of forcing operators to do something they are not paid to do is wrong from any and every point of view. It is a thing which deserves the attention of theater managers. THE BROTHER IS PERFECTLY CORRECT WHEN HE SAYS THAT THE THEATER MANAGER PAYS FOR FILM IN GOOD PHYSICAL CONDITION. Most emphatically he does not pay for junk which cannot be run through a machine with safety. Let's hear the views of some of you operators on this proposition, but confine yourself to orderly language and set forth ARGUMENT, not abuse.

Condenser Combinations.

S. B. Leland, Montpelier, Vermont, makes the following request:

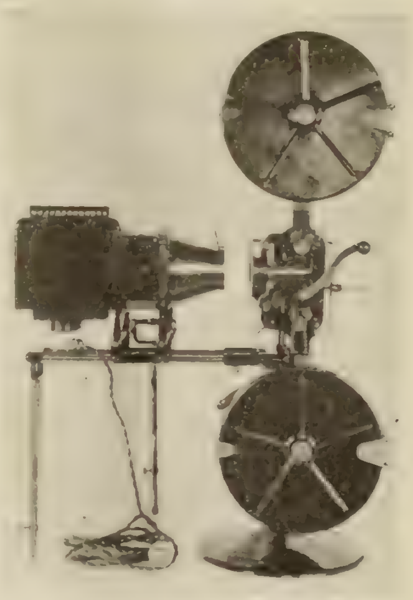
> Can you give us information as to proper combinations of Meniscus, Bi-convex and Plano convex condensers for different throws? One of our customers, whose distance of projection is about one hundred and twenty feet, and whose picture is about nineteen feet wide, thinks he should use a Meniscus eight and one-half inch next the lamp, and a Bi-convex seven and one-half inch in front. Do you consider this correct? If you do not, what would you recommend? Any information you can supply as to the proper combination to be used under different circumstances will be highly appreciated.

I would respectfully refer you, Brother Leland, to the chart published in March 17 issue, page 1768, of the Projection Department, with the notation that I do not believe this chart properly covers the situation where the amperage is low—say below 30. The trouble with the long focal length condensers, such, for instance, as a 8½, 7½ combination, is that by their use you automatically place your arc a long distance from the condenser and thus bring into operation the law of inverse ratios, which reads: "Light intensity decreases inversely with the square of the distance from the source," the source, of course, being an open one. This law does not apply after the light has reached a lens, which re-directs the rays. Use the chart I have named, or the table on page 141 of the Handbook.

A Portable Projector.

The Ford Optical Company, Denver, is marketing a projector designed for home use, manufacturers' display room and traveling salesmen use, which is not only compact, strong and serviceable, but also contains some rather unique features. The intermittent movement is of the standard star and cam type. The shutter is a two-winger, cutting at a guess, about 35 per cent. of the light. The upper magazine is immediately above and the lower magazine is immediately below the mechanism.

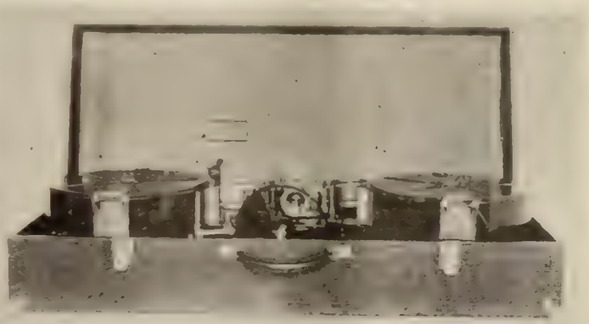
In framing, the entire mechanism and two magazines raise and lower vertically, while the aperture and reels remain stationary, being rigidly attached to the upright [illegible] frame. The magazines accommodate ten-inch reels, are made of pressed material, and contain the usual standard fire traps. The upper and lower sprockets have two idlers. The machine accommodates standard film. The lower reel is driven by a chain, and has a friction take up, which can be regulated at the will of the operator.



The condenser is standard, and the equipment may be fitted with either incandescent or arc light.

The machine is designed for use as a home projector by traveling salesmen and in manufacturers' display rooms. When used by traveling salesmen the whole machine, lamp house and all, is packed in a suit case [illegible]x12 inches, as shown in the illustration.

The machine is substantially built, rigid in construction, and, inasmuch as it is every way standard, I see no reason why it should not be a first-class outfit for the purposes for which it is designed. It is equipped with an efficient fire shutter, which automatically cuts off light when the speed drops too low, or the machine is stopped.



This machine has been used for the past three years by some of the largest manufacturers and schools in the West, and has given satisfactory results.

THAT the amount of indistinctness permissible on the picture is susceptible of numerical expression is easily seen from the following: If an object at a given distance is in sharp focus, the light issuing from a point of that object is converged to a point on the plate. Light issuing from a point in the original object will also be converged to a point, but not on the plate, the cone of light showing in either case a circular patch of light on the plate. This circle of light is known as the "circle of confusion." Its diameter can be used to express the amount of indistinctness existing in a picture. If the circle of confusion is not greater than 1/10 mm. or 1/250 inch, it would appear as a point to an eye 10 inches away, hence, an object no point of which is imaged by a circle larger than 1/10 mm. would appear sharp.

No matter what their type of construction may be, all lenses of the same equivalent focus and the same relative aperture require the same exposure—that is, have the same speed, other conditions being equal. They will also have the same depth. The depth of focus decreases:

1. With increase of focal length. 2. With increase of relative aperture (speed). 3. With increasing nearness of object.

Of the two lenses of the same equivalent focus, the one with the lower relative aperture (speed) has the greater depth of field. On the other hand: if the focal length of the lens is very short, a speed as high as F:4.5 will allow bringing every object from 10 feet to infinity to a sharp focus, while a studio lens of long focus and the same speed may not even image an object of the depth of a head sharply within the range of the length of a studio. Speed, great focal length and depth of focus cannot be combined in the same lens. This is an unalterable law of optics. If speed be the most desirable quality, depth of focus must be sacrificed; if depth of focus, speed. This does not detract from the value of fast lenses, because with a given lens the depth of focus can be increased by diaphragming down the lens which means reduction of speed. If a short exposure demands the use of the lens wide open, one must not expect great depth of focus. Under ordinary conditions of light and distance, with fair judgment, and with lenses not too long in focus, these opposing qualities may be happily combined, so that lack of depth is hardly perceptible.

Some apparent exceptions may be stated, for instance, a lens which produces images of general "softness," i. e., a lens in which the aberrations are not corrected to the utmost perfection. Such lenses, which lack snap and brilliancy, may show greater depth of focus than a first-class lens. There is less difference between the "sharpest" focus and the image of objects forward and back of it, simply because the "sharpest" focus itself is not really sharp. Thus the statement that one lens has a greater depth of focus than others of the same aperture and focus, must be regarded as a rather doubtful compliment to the lens, for as stated above, depth of focus cannot be made subject to special correction.

Another case may be mentioned in which one lens may really have an advantage over another one, in regard to depth of focus. In some constructions correction of astigmatism is obtained at a great sacrifice of simplicity by employing an unusual number of lenses separated by air spaces. There is a certain loss of light by reflection on a lens surface and it is easily intelligible that the fewer reflecting surface in a lens, the smaller the loss of light. In some constructions the number of the lens surfaces runs up as high as ten, while the Tessar contains only six. The consequence is that the lens with the greater number of reflecting surfaces requires a longer exposure than a lens of simple construction, although both may have the same relative aperture. Or to express it differently: the lens with the greater number of reflections requires an aperture of F:6.3 with a certain time of exposure, while the other lens will give a negative of equal density with its aperture stopped down to F:7.2 or F:7.5, which means a gain in depth of focus for the lens with the smaller number of reflecting surfaces.

Cinematograph lenses are usually made with the smallest number of reflecting surfaces consistent with the requisite correction. They are also slightly faster than larger lenses of equal aperture because their small size makes the glass to be traversed by the light much thinner.

Spherical Aberration. Owing to the fact that lenses are made with spherical curves, all single collective lenses have the defect of imaging an object through their marginal zone at a shorter focus than through their central zone. Such a lens may give a sharp image with a small central diaphragm, and a sharp image as well if the center is covered with a round opaque stop so that only an annular zone around the margin comes into action. But both images will not lie in the same plane, nor will they be of the same size. Even if a lens is spherically corrected, so that the parallel rays penetrating the lens near the optical axis and those going through the lens near the margin come to exactly the same focus, there may be a slight remnant of spherical aberration in the zone between center and margin. Small remnants of this kind (so-called Zonal Errors) are found in almost all photographic lenses, especially of the cemented symmetrical type. The unsymmetrical combination upon which the Tessar construction is based, allows a better correction of the zonal errors than any other known construction. The greater the relative aperture (speed of the lens), the greater the task to correct the spherical aberration for all zones of the lens.

Unsatisfactory spherical correction is indicated either by a general indistinctness of the image or by a fairly sharp image, which is entirely covered by halo (fog). Stopping down the aperture may improve the performance of a badly corrected objective.

Coma. The spherical aberration of pencils of light going through the object in oblique direction is called coma. This manifests itself in the fact that although objects in the center of the field appear perfectly defined, objects outside the center show a one-sided indistinctness which increases towards the margin of the field, and in the image of a point-shaped object assumes the form of a tail like a comet, wherefrom this aberration takes its name. Stopping down reduces the amount of coma.

Astigmatism. Astigmatism is that aberration which withstood longest the efforts of the opticians. A lens which is not corrected for astigmatism will not image sharply horizontal and vertical lines at the same time near the margin of the plate, although the center of the image may be perfect. This aberration is inherent in narrow pencils of light, so that stopping down the lens will not decrease the amount of antigmatism to the same degree that it decreases other uncorrected aberrations.

In the absence of a test chart a very simple test for astigmatism may be made by focusing on the joints of a brick wall. No matter how much the lens may be racked in or out, both horizontal and vertical lines will never be sharply defined at the same time near the margin of the plate.

Curvature of field. The ordinary lens images a flat object, not in a plane, but in a spheroidal surface, so that when the center of the image is focused sharp, the ground glass has to be brought nearer to the lens to obtain a sharp image of an object point near the margin of the plate.

It is only in recent years that it is possible to correct astigmatism, together with the curvature of field in lenses of high speed. Lenses which are free from spherical aberration for a large aperture and produce a flat image free from astigmatism, are called "Anastigmats," the prefix "an" meaning without, hence, without astigmatism.

Distortion is that fault of a lens which prevents the rendering of straight lines as such. The straight lines are reproduced as curves. All single lenses used with a diaphragm in front (landscape lenses) are subject to this defect in some degree. The distortion is called cushion shaped, when the curves are concave, and barrel shaped, when the curves are convex toward the margin of the plate.

Lenses which are free from distortion are called rectilinear.

The performance of a lens which distorts cannot be improved by using smaller stops.

Distortion has nothing to do with curvature of field. The image can be properly flat and the definition perfect, and yet straight lines may be distorted into curves.

Chromatic aberration is due to the fact that in a lens, unless corrected from chromatic aberration, the visual rays which form the image seen on the ground glass do not form the images at the same position as the actinic or chemical rays, which affect the sensitive plate. Since the image is focused with rays for which the eye is most sensitive, the image formed by the rays for which the plate is most sensitive will fall outside of the visual focus (focal point), and therefore must be blurred on the plate. Of course all photographic lenses which claim to be of any value at all must, first of all, be corrected for chromatic aberration. An objective which has chromatic aberration is sometimes said to have chemical focus.

What Has the Industry Gained by the Late Convention?

CONSIDERED largely, the ultimate object of all worthy human effort is progress, and that implies the improvement of conditions which affect the welfare of mankind. Narrowing the viewpoint, the proposition is true in the case of the young, giant industry which has been created by the birth of the moving picture.

The seventh national convention of this industry, which ranks fifth among the industries of the United States, is now a matter of history. It was not a convention of the entire industry, as it should have been, for only one of the three departments—the exhibiting, was represented in the deliberating body.

The eyes of all the exhibitors in the United States, in Canada, and the world over were directed on Chicago during that convention. Greater interest than ever before was centered on the work of the convention. Big things were eagerly expected and hoped for, as the organization of exhibitors was stronger in numbers than it had ever been.

What a chance there was here for united effort in the interest of the moving picture and the industry at large! What an opportunity for placing the industry on a more secure basis!

What was accomplished at the convention?

One word answers the question—DISRUPTION.

Politics and self-seeking and disregard for the future were rampant. Unworthy effort ruled the deliberations of the convention and, as the result, a backward step instead of one forward was taken, and a golden opportunity was lost forever.

How much bigger would Lee Ochs appear today if he had ignored self and withdrawn his name! And how much bigger would the seceders have become had they loved the organization better than the desire to get even, and remained within it, and set to work valiantly for its thorough purging.

Unity means strength; disruption weakness.

Exposition week in Chicago did not only enthuse the fans; it rallied many writers on the big dailies to the cause of the moving picture, and even stirred the editorial mind to the point of fervency on its behalf. Under the head, "Here's to the Movies!" a staid Tribune editor patted the visiting stars and their profession as follows, not overlooking to hand the "average producer" a stiff body blow at the close:

> According to its passionate press agent, the movie exposition is replete with "dimpled darlings," and all gay blades should attend. So be it! A gay blade once loaded up with pink roses (among other things) and stood in front of a theater four hours "waiting for Mary Pickford to come out."
>
> Nevertheless, there is a lot more in movies than the mere sit-still-my-heart sort of romance. There is the romance of a new and very brilliant art. The stars now visiting Chicago take their profession seriously, and a dignified profession it is. It has not only revived pantomime and given it a pioneer opportunity in America, it has developed pantomime to an artistic precision and delicacy seldom, if ever, attained before. In a word, it has made acting natural. In this it has done what the spoken drama was unable to do, though the history of the spoken drama is a history of progressive efforts toward naturalness.
>
> On the stage the actor must "get it over." Naturalness is insufficient. Only exaggeration will "carry," for the actor is a long way from the spectator. In the olden times, when actors performed by candle light, they were compelled to rant, to go storming about, and even to think out loud. Gas improved matters. Electric light improved them still more. Today the screen, itself luminous and so large that all can see, makes the smallest and most fleeting change of expression comprehensible. Especially is this true of the "close up." A lip quivers almost imperceptibly, a nostril dilates, eyebrows twitch, and 2,000 spectators at once understand.
>
> In the main, movie acting is not realism. It is reality. The strut, the grandiose gesture, the pose, and the artificial claptrap once inseparable from acting have spared the screen. Conventionalities, once they set in are short lived. Stars soon quit "registering sympathy" by putting their hands invariably on the sufferer's shoulder. They will soon break their habit of "registering love" by invariably heaving their chests.
>
> When we growl about movies, and growl we do at times, it is seldom because of the acting. As a rule, it is because of the scenarios. We are a bit charitable even then. Considering the appalling numbers of scenarios demanded and the almost superhuman stupidity of the average producer, we marvel that scenarios are not sillier than they are.

Hamburger Secures First Showing Rights in Chicago to Paramount and Artcraft Pictures.

Alfred Hamburger, after a lively contest last week, secured the rights to the first showing of Paramount and Artcraft pictures in his Chicago theaters. There was spirited bidding by the owners of other large circuits of theaters in the city, but the rights were awarded Mr. Hamburger at the price of $200,000, of which sum $10,000 was placed on deposit.

The Hamburger theaters will, therefore, be in a position to show their patrons first the pictures in which appear Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark, Olga Petrova, Sessue Hayakawa, George Cohan, Elsie Ferguson, D. W. Griffith exclusive productions, Cecil de Mille productions, Geraldine Farrar, Julian Eltinge, Billie Burke, Pauline Frederick, Lina Cavalieri, Ann Pennington, Jack Pickford, Wm. S. Hart, Charles Ray, George Beban, Wallace Reid and Enid Bennett. In addition the new Mack Sennett comedies are included.

The deal was conducted through Messrs. Max Goldstine and Elliott, who acted for the Paramount and Artcraft Corporations.

Mr. Hamburger announces that augmented orchestras with special music have been provided for the presentations of the big programs.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Clara C. Morden a prepossessing Chicago girl still in her teens, was the winner in the News-Essanay moving picture actress contest, which was conducted during Exposition week at the Coliseum. Aspiring candidates crowded the booth of the Chicago Daily News every day of the week, while Bryant Washburn made selections from time to time, all of which were considered before the final choice was made. Miss Morden appears to be a very promising find; but, of course, nothing can be stated definitely about her success until she is put at work before the camera. She will be given a prominent part in a photoplay in which Mr. Washburn will appear in the near future, and the role assigned her will be suited as nearly as possible to her attainments and appearance. Miss Morden is a stenographer on the south side, and has always wished to be a photoplay actress.

Shortly after the Pathe fire in the Consumers building Manager Bunn transferred the shipping and inspection departments to the second floor in the building located at 168-72 West Washington street, the old quarters occupied by the Hopp Film Exchange for years and afterwards by the Laemmle Exchange. Early Thursday morning, Aug. 2, fire broke out in a restaurant in the basement. With great difficulty it was prevented from spreading to the second floor by the firemen. Reports of the fire in the daily papers stated that the firemen found Pathe films lying on the second floor, and that they made superhuman efforts to prevent the films from being reached. This is far from the facts, as all the films were carefully stored in the large vaults, and only empty tins were on the floor. Of this Manager Bunn is certain, as his instructions on this point were absolute. Had they been on the floor, as stated, an explosion would have been unavoidable. Manager Bunn expects that the repairs in the Pathe quarters in the Consumers building will be fully completed on August 9, when the shipping and inspection departments will be transferred to their former location in the Consumers building.

William N. Selig has begun the release of a series of jungle dramas in one and two reels through the General Film service. He believes there is a demand for this type of pictures just now. Bessie Eyton plays the lead in "The Sole Survivor" and "Between Man and Beast," which will be released August 13 and August 20, respectively.

"The Barker," a Selig five-reel feature to be released through K-E-S-E, Monday, August 13, has just been finished at the Chicago studios under the direction of J. A. Richmond. Lew Fields appears in the title role, and supporting him are Amy Dennis, Wm. Fables, James Harris, Pat O'Malley, etc. The circus scenes were made July 30, and an entire circus—"big top" wagons, clowns, aerial performers and all the other requisites—was transferred to the Selig lots for the day. Needless to say a large crowd assembled to take in the big show, many of the sightseers participating in the filmed scenes. "The Barker" is not a comedy, but a pathetic drama of real life, in which Mr. Fields figures prominently.

I find that unintentional injustice was done two energetic members of the Exposition Committee through an oversight which caused the omission of the names of A. C. Krebs and M. S. Johnson in a former article. Mr. Krebs, as secretary of the committee, was untiring in his labors, and it was mainly due to his efforts that the moving picture fans of Chicago were thoroughly advised of the features of the big show by means of slides shown in theaters throughout the city. Mr. Johnson rendered good service as space solicitor and as floor manager of the moving picture theater in the Annex, while the expositon lasted. The other members of the committee were Ludwig Schindler, manager; F. W. Hartman, assistant manager, and Geo. M. Laing, manager of publicity.

Bluebird Photoplays Gives War Luncheon

Army Officers and Film and Trade Press Men Attended Celebration in Honor of Completion of Message of Cheer to Pershing.

UNDER the auspices of Bluebird Photoplays a "war" luncheon was held at the Astor on Thursday, August 2, to celebrate the completion of the message of cheer to General Pershing and his men compiled by the company. Signed to the message are the names of Speaker Clark, former President Taft, a majority of the members of the House of Representatives, of the Senate and of the Governors of the states and fifty mayors of large cities, as well as many prominent citizens. Also there were names of thousands of plain citizens, secured through the co-operation of the exhibitors of the country.

Tiffany prepared the album. The workmanship and design is of exceptional richness. Gold is used throughout in the mountings, inscription plates and monograms. The pages containing the signatures are of vellum, while the deckel-edged text is illumined in delicate pastels. The pages are bound in soft Morocco leather. The album rests on a bed of gray moire tufted velvet inside of a case of fine grained holly wood of the Louis Quatorze period. It is a work of art worthy of the preservation of this document. Joseph Brandt, who originated the idea of the album, planned the luncheon. Arthur Leslie was toastmaster.

Present representing General Bell, commanding the Department of the East, were his chief of staff, Major E. E. Booth, and the latter's assistant, Captain Creswell Garlington. Both of these officers are members of the general staff of the United States Army. There were film men there, too, as well as many representatives of the trade and daily press.

Major Booth was the principal speaker. The major, whose uniform bore the colors of four campaigns, spoke most interestingly of the personality of General Pershing, with whom in the Philippines in other years he had been associated. He said the commander of the troops in France was a man of great physical strength, a hard and tireless worker, of positive character, and one who dispatched business rapidly and accurately. He said further the general was a most pleasant man with whom to meet and converse, and a charming companion. And then the major added a "but." He suggested to his hearers, should it be the privilege of any present later to serve under the general, that he was a man who knew what he wanted and who expected obedience. "It is the consensus of the army," concluded the major, "that the President could not have selected a better man to command our soldiers in France."

Ziegfeld Starts for El Paso

Head of the New Cinema Corporation Announces Doris Darst as Leading Woman in First Picture.

W. K. ZIEGFELD, founder and president of the new Ziegfeld Cinema Corporation, which recently secured a charter under the laws of Delaware, left last week for El Paso, Texas, after having made several important arrangements in furtherance of his project to erect a "film city" in El Paso, Texas.

"I will divulge the facts concerning the character of my first photoplay and the personnel now being engaged on my arrival at El Paso," declared Mr. Ziegfeld, starting for Chicago, where the mid-western offices of the company are situated. "I have been particularly fortunate in securing adept directors and a technical staff. Miss Doris Darst will be the leading woman for the first picture. She is a discovery of mine, and, although active on the concert stage in London, where she is well known, is a native of Columbus, Ohio."

The Chamber of Commerce of El Paso, it is announced, is giving to Mr. Ziegfeld for studio purposes a tract of land in the foothills region north of the town. Work on the first picture to bear the Ziegfeld imprint is to start almost immediately, buildings, where necessary to house equipment and form weather-proof quarters, to be leased for use until the permanent structures are ready. The architectural scheme is to be Spanish Renaissance.

The picture will probably be taken to New York for final distribution, notwithstanding the many offers made to Mr. Bradshaw here for its exclusive rights.

During the filming of a scene between Cleopatra (Theda Bara) and Caesar, in the former's boudoir, a gorgeous setting, two live peacocks and a pheasant which were to be used in the scene broke away from their cages and flew into the set just as the camera was grinding. One of the stage hands who tried to halt the bird in its flight, stepped on the peacock's magnificent tail and found the entire tail under his foot. The bird was useless for any further work. One of the Roman scenes was taken in the sunken gardens of the magnificent home of former Governor Hazzard, in Los Angeles. In return for the courtesy in allowing Director J. Triangle Denied Preliminary Injunction

Judge Manton Suggests That if Hart Can't Be Held for Contract Breaking Neither Can Artcraft Be Held for Employing Him.

IN the suit of the Triangle Film Corporation against Artcraft Picture Corporation to compel William S. Hart to carry out a contract to appear in the productions of the former concern and to enjoin him from playing with Artcraft, the plaintiff corporation received a setback in the United States District Court when Judge Manton denied on August 1 an application for a preliminary injunction to restrain the defendant corporation from releasing feature plays starring Hart pending the determination of the issues raised in the suit.

Neither Thomas H. Ince nor Hart were named as codefendants in the suit and Judge Manton concluded that if Hart cannot be held liable for alleged breach of his contract the film company which now employs him can hardly be legally held responsible for inducing the film star to break his contractual obligations.

"If Hart could not be held for breach of contract, how can this defendant be held for inducing Hart to break his contract?" concluded Judge Manton in denying the application for a preliminary injunction which does not finally dispose of the suit, but enables Hart to continue to appear in the productions of the defendant corporation unless the action is ultimately decided in favor of the plaintiff.

The plaintiff company alleges that Ince and Hart conspired to defraud the company in causing a clause to be inserted in Hart's contract with the company which provided that he was to appear in its productions under the supervision of Ince. When the latter severed his connection with the Triangle Film Corporation Hart claimed he was relieved of his obligations to carry out the contract and signed up with the Artcraft company.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of Aug. 6 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses—"Down to Earth" at The Rialto.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS featured at the Rialto the week of Aug. 6, appearing in an extravagant comedy which he wrote himself and calls "Down to Earth." The plot of the piece romps gaily from the Alps to the Congo, back to a Western ranch, down to Palm Beach, off to a desert island, and winds up at Catalina, with stops en route at New York and in a sanitarium full of queer patients. The heroine is played by Eileen Percy, who was first seen on the screen in "Wild and Woolly." Anita Loos fixed up the scenario and titles for "Down to Earth" and John Emerson did the directing.

"The Sunken Gardens of Florida," a series of beautiful scenes photographed on the ocean bed, was a special attraction on the program. Impressive glimpses of battleships in the U. S. Navy firing broadsides were seen in the Animated Magazine.

Helena Marsh and M. Hersere La Salle were the soloists.

"The Slacker" at The Strand.

"The Slacker," a patriotic photo-drama, was presented at the Strand Theater. Emily Stevens is the star of this feature. "The Slacker" has a story of special appeal to Americans at this time. American patriots are pictured in the most vital moments of their career. All the allied nations engaged in the present conflict are also represented in patriotic array. Walter Miller as "the slacker," Leo Delaney as the friend, Eugene Borden as the sailor lad, and Millicent Fisher as a society girl working for the Red Cross, are among those supporting Miss Stevens. Another interesting picture to be shown was a zoological study entitled "The Life of a Moth," another chapter of Raymond L. Ditmar's Living Book of Nature. "She Needed a Doctor," a Mack Sennett-Keystone comedy, and The Topical Review were also on the program.

Rose Lind, Mery Zentay, Arthur Depew and Ralph H. Brigham were the soloists.

"The Lone Wolf" at the Broadway.

The engagement of the Louis Joseph Vance photoplay, "The Lone Wolf," still continues at the Broadway Theater.

Eighty-first Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first Street Theater on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Wilfred Lucas and Elda Millar in "The Food Gamblers," and Harry McCoy in a Triangle Komedy, "His Cool Nerve," made up the picture program.

On Thursday, Friday, Saturday, Sunday, Olive Thomas in "An Even Break," and Ben Turpin, in "A Clever Dummy," were the picture attractions.

Harry Weber

HARRY WEBER, under whose management Eva Tanguay is making her debut in pictures, is a veteran showman, although one of the youngest men to earn that title. Miss Tanguay's first appearance on the screen will be in a Selznick-Picture production, "The Wild Girl," which is now nearly half finished. This title has finally been adopted in place of the former "working title," "Firefly."

Harry Weber.

Like Miss Tanguay, Harry Weber is making his first venture in pictures with this production, but as success has become a habit with him, there is every reason to expect that he will maintain his unbroken record. After an early experience in the circus business, Mr. Weber went to Chicago to produce acts for vaudeville. He discovered Frank Tinney, in a minstrel show, and brought him out as a star. He found Bernard Granville in a "rep" show and starred him.

Finding the Chicago field too small, Mr. Weber came to New York seven years ago, and now has the biggest vaudeville agency in the world. Among other stars, besides Miss Tanguay, who have appeared in vaudeville under his management, are Calve, Nance O'Neill, Fay Templeton, Irene Franklin, Stella Mayhew, Frank Keenan, Dolly Sisters, James J. Corbett, Blanche Bates, Chip and Marble, Emily Stevens, Frances Starr, Patricia Collinge, Ed. Wynn, Marjorie Rambeau, Maude Fulton, Kitty Gordon, May Irwin, Joseph Santley, Florence Reed and John Philip Sousa.

Miss Tanguay's first picture, "The Wild Girl," promises to be a sensation as to popularity. Already, before it is nearly ready to be shown, a mass of inquiries as to approximate release date, is flooding the booking department of the Selznick Enterprises, since Miss Tanguay's popularity and the fact that this is her film debut, make this production of special interest to the exhibitor.

MRS. CASTLE AND COMPANY AT SARANAC LAKE.

Mrs. Vernon Castle, the Pathe star, and a company of seventeen players, together with director Frank H. Crane of the Astra, have arrived at Saranac Lake, N. Y., in the Adirondacks, where several weeks will be spent in taking scenes for Mrs. Castle's next feature. Mrs. Castle, who was accompanied by her sister, is making her headquarters at the Saranac Inn.

Many scenes have already been taken at the Buckley Camp and other scenically lovely spots on Lower Saranac Lake.

Among the players taken by Mr. Crane are Elliott Dexter, Mr. and Mrs. M. N. Litson, R. Langdon and A. E. Miller. The opportunities for locations of unusual beauty are so many at the place where the company is stopping that it is believed the finished picture will do more than justice to the scenario which is described as being one of the best that has been submitted to the Astra company in some time.

PATHE SALESMAN IN WRECK.

In the recent wreck of the Interurban car near Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, Stanley Spoehr, salesman at Pathe's Milwaukee office, was injured. Manager Aschmann advises that the first thing he thought of when he came to was some feature contracts which he had in his pocket. Apparently he got away without any broken bones, but is badly bruised. The car, going at the rate of fifty miles an hour, shot off the track at a curve and slid and rolled about a hundred and fifty feet. One passenger was killed and others very badly cut up.

"Wife Number Two"

Story in American Backgrounds That Might Have Been Named "Madame Bovary," So Closely Does It Fit the French Masterpiece.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

NEVER have I seen Valeska Suratt in a role that she fits so well as the titular part in "Wife Number Two," a Fox picture, released July 29. The picture is noteworthy. It runs remarkably close to Flaubert's truthful "Madame Bovary," a story of human failure so relentless that the effect on the reader is tremendous. The picture is not so truthful nor so relentless as the novel, nor are the characters wholly convincing at all times. But the story is almost actor-proof, and it certainly gets over in the hands of these players. William Nigh, who adapted and staged it, should, I think, have more credit than anyone who had a hand in the production.

Scene from "Wife Number Two" (Fox).

"Madame Bovary" is a French life story. The author had to stand trial when the book first came out, while the French Government took testimony as to whether the book or humanity ought to be condemned. The author was acquitted. The novel was proved wholesome and the picture, "Wife Number Two," has much of the same quality. In its American backgrounds its incidents are not very convincing, and it will make, on this account, a lighter impression on the uninstructed than on those who have read the novel or who can see humanity through social conventions that do not belong with these recognized streets and houses. Emma is Valeska Suratt at her best. Her parents are excellently played characters. Eric Mayne plays Dr. Bovary acceptably. And we must not forget Dan Sullivan in a side-light role that is most effectively played. The other players do well enough. Taking it as it stands, it makes an offering above the usual and out of the ordinary. It's a strong picture.

"The Second Mrs. Tanqueray"

Five-Part Screen Version of Sir Arthur Pinero's Celebrated Stage Success Made in London With English Cast Lacks Much of the Force of the Original—Released by Vitagraph-V-L-S-E.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

AMONG the first of the sex or problem plays, "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray" marked a new phase of the art of Sir Arthur Pinero, and revealed certain conditions in the social life of England that were supposed to be ignored by the better element. A lady who has accepted the protection of several gentleman and who finally finds herself the wife of a man of assured position is bound to get herself talked about and to offer excellent material for a skilled dramatist. Paula Tanqueray is such a woman. She truly loves her husband, and dares to hope that love and peace are to be hers in return, but her sin finds her out. Tanqueray has a daughter by his first wife who falls in love with one of her step-mother's old protectors. When Paula discovers this, she takes her own life.

The story doesn't sound very nice in the telling, but with the incisive Pinero dialogue of the spoken play it became a fascinating study of a woman's soul—a woman who had sinned and then dared to hope for happiness without first expiating her sins. The screen version is but a faint reflection of the spoken drama, a skeleton of the play that Mrs. Patrick Campbell acted in with so much power and skill. Following the example of so many screen versions of well known plays, it goes back and relates the early history of its leading characters in detail, a method that is not always fraught with good results. Certain traits of character are in this way frequently revealed that weaken the story by repetition. When you see Paula pack up and walk out of one gentleman's apartment the action loses force when she threatens to repeat the business after she is married to Tanqueray.

The English production is well mounted and acted. Sir George Alexander as Aubrey Tanqueray and Hilda Moore as Paula head the cast. Miss Moore is not a particularly graceful woman, and this fact is distinctly recorded on the screen.

"The Streets of Illusion"

Five-Reel Gold Rooster Feature Tells Entertaining Little Character Story of Washington Square.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS feature number, produced by Astra Film Corporation and directed by William Parke, makes pleasing entertainment. There is no very pronounced plot running through this, but many of the characters possess traits that give them great appeal. There are also occasional humorous and pathetic touches.

Gladys Hulette plays the leading role, appearing as a girl named Beam. She lives with her blind father in Washington Square, and when her brother enlists and goes to serve on the Mexican border the girl opens up a boarding house. This gives opportunity to introduce a large number of characters, most of whom carry out the real and fancied traditions of the picturesque neighborhood. One of these is a petty thief, another a miser, and then a woman and her small son come and play important parts in the story.

Beam makes an attractive character, and is well portrayed by Miss Hulette, who gives brightness and animation to the role. William Parke, Jr., is also pleasing as the brother, who deserts the army, but afterward makes good.

Scene from "The Streets of Illusion" (Pathe).

The story interest centers principally about the efforts of the girl to keep her boarders happy, and she succeeds very well in this. The number is brought to a pleasing close by some Christmas festivities for the child, to which all contribute a proper share.

Others in the cast are J. H. Gilmour, Richard Barthelmess, William P. Burt, Katherine Adams and Gerald Badgley.

"The Crystal Gazer"

Lasky-Paramount Fanny Ward Picture—Interesting Melodrama Without Marked Distinction of Story or Acting.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THERE is in the latest Paramount five-reel picture, "The Crystal Gazer," no real chance for Fanny Ward to show her ability in the not very broad field of human emotion where she is undeniably brilliant. Her playing of the dual role of two sisters born in the dregs of society and separated in infancy is commendable and entertaining, but lacks the convincing fire of life. We are kept interested in the outcome of the plot, which is certainly in the picture's favor, but our emotions are not deeply quickened. It is set and costumed and photographed well as was to be expected in a Famous Players film, and many of the characters are ably represented. Its greatest lack is convincing significance and tone.

Scene from "The Crystal Gazer" (Paramount).

It opens with one of the most sordid of modern scenes. In a tenement room a woman is discovered dead and the two children near her are the offsprings of a condemned murderer. The gas is turned on and the children are with difficulty revived. One is adopted by the wife of the judge who passed sentence on the father—one wonders why this judge's wife was chosen—the other, by a disreputable woman of the slums. The girls grow up to look exactly alike and both are played by Fanny Ward. The poor girl is employed by a crystal gazing charlatan, and the rich girl becomes engaged to a very desirable society "catch." The resemblance leads the charlatan to suspect that they are sisters, and he discovers their mean origin. He tries to levy blackmail and succeeds in separating the lovers—but the girl won't tell why she runs away. The other sister now is brought in contact with the young man and he proposes to her because she looks like the first girl, and he pities her. The charlatan dies. This frees the first girl and she comes back. The young man now has the girl he is engaged to and the girl he really loves in front of him. The second girl dies saving the first from a burning room, and this gives a death-bed scene which some may really think is heroic.

"Souls Adrift"

Ethel Clayton and Milton Sills in Five-Part Peerless Photoplay of Adventure Laid Among Romantic Surroundings—Released by World Film Corporation.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

LIFE on a desert island with the woman one loves has its attractive side, according to "Souls Adrift," the five-part Peerless photoplay written by Andrew Soutar, with Ethel Clayton and Milton Sills as the interested parties. Elma Raybourne, the daughter of a wealthy shipbuilder, is loved by a young engineer named Micah Steele. The elder Raybourne, having robbed Steele of a valuable invention, the young man is determind to be revenged. To that end he ships as an assistant engineer on Raybourne's yacht. During a trip from Honolulu to San Francisco the boat is wrecked, but Micah manages, by great effort, to save Elma from the sinking yacht and get her into a small boat. They land on a desert island in the Pacific, and during their adventures the girl learns to know the worth of her rescuer.

The story is almost a two-part one, but the pair are always interesting, and are finely played by Ethel Clayton and Milton Sills. There are many picturesque scenes and several beautiful views of the ocean. There is also several views of Miss Clayton in the garb of Eve. What more natural than being on an uninhabited island she should take a dip in the sea? The episode is adroitly managed, the shades of nightfall affording the lady a sufficient mantle for the occasion. John Davidson, Frank de Vernon and Walter James are the leading members of the support.

"When Sorrow Weeps"

Little Mary McAlister in an Episode of Essanay's "Do Children Count?" Series.

Reviewed by Arthur W. Courtney.

A PICTURE in which a suicide is presented as clearly as the rules allow is hardly a good picture for children to see. In "When Sorrow Weeps," a two-part episode of the "Do Children Count?" series, Little Mary McAlister is a ragged child whose drunken father dies leaving her alone in the world.

She is taken in by Caroline Busby, the wife of a crook who is just finishing a prison term. The influence of the pure little child inspires Caroline to turn over a new leaf. The husband, fresh from a new crime, takes refuge in the house. His wife gives him up to the police, but he accuses her of complicity. The child goes with her to court, and there is taken away from her by members of a society who think the woman's past life makes her home unfit for the rearing of the child. The woman commits suicide, and the child is taken to an asylum. This picture ends as almost propaganda. The acting of Little Mary is, as usual, excellent. So also is the acting of John Cossar as the crook, and Mabel Bardine as his wife. This picture was released July 18.

"Skinner's Baby"

The Advent of a Young Stranger in the Skinner Household Creates Delightful Interest—Bryant Washburn, Hazel Daly and Other Old Favorites in the Cast.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

HARRY BEAUMONT, who wrote and directed "Skinner's Baby," being indebted of course to the story by Henry Irving Dodge, is to be commended at the very outset for the fine humor and heart interest which it holds for the spectator. He has touched the story very happily, here and there, with flecks of humor that makes one chuckle inwardly, as if fearing that louder manifestations of our pleasure might mar our own and our neighbor's enjoyment. At other times the humor is so broad and universally catching that nothing but a peal of laughter will serve the occasion.

An instance of the latter is furnished by Skinner when he gives a holiday to the entire office force of McLaughlin, Perkins & Skinner in honor of his son, although that cherub has not yet been born and that he is taking chances on the sex of the young stranger. When the senior partner of the firm gently expostulates with Skinner on the untimeliness of the holiday and the uncertainty of the sex of his firstborn, Skinner replies: "No, he hasn't arrived, but he will." And when the little stranger did arrive, so impressed were Skinner's partners by his repeated assurances that one of them purchased a wooden horse and the other a toy rifle for the occasion.

When Honey whispers to her doting husband, after the partners have left, "He isn't a boy, dearie; she's a girl," he hides his disappointment in a flash, and in his great love answers: "She's more wonderful than a boy, Sweetheart, and we'll name her Honey Skinner. If she can't be a president, she can be a president's wife."

Bryant Washburn's Skinner is altogether human, in the third Skinner story. There is not a moment when he fails to live the part. His tenderness towards and his anxiety for Honey, in the first great crisis of their married life, never create in the mind of the spectator the impression of simulation. And Hazel Daly's Honey is just adorable as a wife. She sheds a radiance in the Skinner home that will make itself felt among the hundreds of thousands that will view the picture.

Scene from "Skinner's Baby" (Essanay).

The old favorites, McLaughlin and Perkins, are just as happily sustained by James Carroll and W. K. Houpt as on former occasions, and the members of the office staff are just as ably represented.

The release was made through K-E-S-E, Inc., Monday, August 6.

"The Spy"

Dustin Farnum, Supported by Winifred Kingston, Does Remarkable Work in Thrilling Fox Story of German Secret Service.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

WILLIAM FOX will release on August 19 as a special box office attraction "The Spy," a thrilling six-part story of the German secret service. Dustin Farnum is the leading player. In the role of Mark Quaintance, an American of means, who goes to Berlin to learn if possible the identity of the German spies in the United States, he does some of his best picture work. In fact, the only complaint is that where it is strongest there is too much of it. This particular part is where Quaintance, having entered the home of the chief of the German secret service and stolen the book containing the names for which he was seeking, is suspended by the thumbs in an effort to compel him to reveal the hiding place of the book. As a piece of acting it is all remarkable in its realism. Likewise it is over-gruesome in its horror. In the rough copy shown to the press on July 31 the inquisition scenes were so prolonged that it is to be feared if repeated in a theater in the United States the reputation of the subject in the particular locality would be seriously hurt. We learn since this was written that the picture is to be shortened 400 feet and that much of the elimination will be in this incident.

The story is from the pen of George Bronson Howard. Barring a few instances of dramatic license—such, for instance, as we are coming to associate with the stage and to reprobate on the screen—the plot runs true to form. One of the exceptions the writer would take is in the American spy sailing for Europe under his own name and with the knowledge of his departure in the possession of many of his friends. But this is immaterial. The big fact is that with an outside official temperature of 98 degrees we forgot in a small projection room all things associated with the weather.

Richard Stanton directed the subject, and into its making he put much time and money. In the casting, too, excellent judgment has been displayed. Who could better look the chief of the German secret service, as implacable as Javert, the director of a machine that recognizes nothing but the will of its stern master, than William Burress? Or Charles Clary than the American ambassador? Howard Gaye is the Baron von Bergen, the aid of the secret service chief, and William E. Lowry, the shadow.

The picture interests from the beginning. This is due not only to the patriotic angle, the volunteering of Quaintance, a clubman, to do whatever his country may require, but the love theme following upon the accidental bringing together of the American spy and Greta Glaum, the accomplice of the Germans, who has been set to watch the doings of Quaintance. In the latter role Winifred Kingston shines. She displays marked intelligence and rare charm. That she should repudiate her harsh masters for the sake of the young American is entirely logical —even to going the limit, that of sharing death with him at the end.

"The Spy" is a picture of power as well as of timeliness. It probably won't please Mr. Funkhouser, which statement by many will be interpreted to mean that probably it will much please the average American who is not overconcerned as to the feelings of those who are Germans first and nothing else afterward. The author and the director are to be congratulated on having the courage to give the ending that is the logical one—the shooting of the spy and his aid. For such is life—and war. Of big scenes there are many, scenes that thrill; and of tender scenes there are many, too, scenes that move.

"Aladdin's Other Lamp"

Viola Dana in Five-Part Metro Photoplay by Willard Mack Is Given Many Excellent Opportunities—Produced by B. F. Rolfe.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

GOOD, wholesome entertainment will be found in "Aladdin's Other Lamp," a five-part photoplay, written by Willard Mack and based on a story of his called "The Dream Girl." Produced by B. F. Rolfe, with Viola Dana in the role of a little slavey who finds a magic lamp and comes into love and fortune quite in the proper manner for all well-regulated heroines, the picture may be safely recommended to all admirers of the Metro star. The screen version was made by June Mathis. An old lamp that belonged to the little slavey's dead father caused her to dream a wonderful dream in which she goes to a ball in a gorgeous gown and discovers her sweetheart, the grocery clerk, is really a prince and is making love to her rival, the richest girl in town. She awakens to find herself still a drudge and Harry a grocery clerk, but the lamp contains a letter from her father that straightens out all her difficulties.

The scenes are laid on the New England coast, and are either quaint or picturesue. John H. Collins, the director, has attended to all the details of the production in a thorough-going manner, and Viola Dana evidently enjoyed playing the part of Patricia Smith, the slavey. She makes the girl lovable and of a sunny nature in spite of her hard life and acts with her accustomed spontaneity. Henry Hallem as Captain Barney and Robert Walker as Harry Hardy carry the weight of the support with ease and to good effect.

To complicate matters, the father of the agent's sweetheart and the richest man in town is at the head of the movement. All the above is told pleasantly enough, and will serve to entertain many worthy followers of the screen. Franklyn Farnum makes Stuart Adams, the advance agent, a likable chap, and is assisted in his best scenes by Brownie Vernon as Hazel Richards. Miss Vernon is young, good to look at, and knows how to act. Claire McDowell plays an adventuress who turns out to be a detective with the ability to be expected from her. William Human, Mark Fenton and Mary Talbot contribute acceptable character studies.

"Jack and the Beanstalk"

Ten-Part Screen Version of the Juvenile Classic Produced by William Fox an Elaborate and Amusing Spectacle.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IN PREPARING "Jack and the Beanstalk," the ten-part Fox film de luxe of the juvenile classic, for screen representation the producers have evidently gone to a great deal of expense. More than this, the money has been spent intelligently, and most of the picture displays excellent taste. Reduced to eight reels by judicious cutting it would form an entertainment that would prove equally pleasing to the youngsters and the grownups.

The story opens with a party of children listening to a nursemaid reading the familiar old fairy story. Two children of the group, Francis and Virginia, determine to look for the forest where the beanstalk is to be found. While searching for it they are overtaken by nightfall. Francis falls asleep and dreams that he is the real Jack of the story, and that Virginia becomes the Princess Regina whom he rescues from the giant Blunderbore. The adventures of the greatest hero in juvenile fiction are carried out in a wonderfully impressive manner, not the least effective feature being the acting of the little stars, Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin, and the other members of the youthful cast.

The special sets used in "Jack and the Beanstalk" reflect faithfully the time and the local environment. The village where Jack lives, the city of Cornwall, ruled over by the father of the beautiful Regina, and the imposing castle of the giant perched on the side of a steep mountain are admirably planned, and all the details of the production are in keeping with the spirit of the tale.

Young Master Carpenter, in the title role, measures up to his work amazingly. He has the force, stride, personality and method of a well-seasoned actor, and makes all his points with the ease of a veteran. He is also absolutely without pose.

Virginia Lee Corbin is quite as precocious, with a dainty grace and a belief in the realty of what she is doing that is irresistible. Violet Radcliffe as Rudolpho, Carmen Fay DeRue as the king, J. G. Tarver as Blunderbore, Vera Lewis as the giant's wife, and Eleanor Washington as Jack's mother are important members of the excellent cast.

There is one jarring note in the picture: The scene where the giant prepares to cut off the head of the little princess before having her cooked for his breakfast is made altogether too realistic, and will offend grown people and frighten the little ones. Heroic cutting will save the day, and the good work of the producers, C. M. and S. A. Franklin, will receive its full value.

Two Triangle Releases

"The Food Gamblers," Five-Part Picture of Timely Topic Featuring Wilfred Lucas and Elda Millar, and "An Even Break," Five-Part Photoplay Starring Olive Thomas.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"The Food Gamblers."

THE title "The Food Gamblers" has the merit of requiring but litle explanation. This five-part Triangle photoplay, written by Robert Shirley, manages to present considerable forceful propaganda on a subject that is of interest to all and to unfold a dramatic story that contains most of the elements of a well made bit of melodrama. Some persons prefer their drama without any attachments in the way of political or social reform, but even they will be forced to admit that the author has "gilded the pill" skillfully and that "The Food Gamblers" contains a large proportion of excellent entertainment. The opening is rather commonplace, with the hero obtaining his introduction to the heroine through turning up at the right moment and knocking down a brutal farmer, whose abuse of his over-worked horse gives the young man an opportunity to interfere in the girl's behalf, after she has rebuked the tiller of the soil and been roughly handled for her pains.

Scene from "The Food Gamblers" (Triangle).

Both of these characters have interesting personalities. The hero's name is Henry Havens and he is at the head of the food trust. June Justice, the heroine, is a reporter for the New York Globe, and is assigned to help expose the workings of the organization. From then on matters grow interesting, and the effects of the system on the poor and helpless is shown in all its pitiable consequences. The sufferings that he inflicts are brought home to the food trust magnate in a practical manner. He is locked in one of his own storerooms for four days without food. After his release a great light dawns upon him and he goes before the legislature and helps to defeat the food ring. The love story is also kept well to the fore, and there is a promise of wedding bells and orange blossoms as the last incident fades out.

The acting of Wilfred Lucas and Elda Millar in the two leading roles, and of Mac Barnes, Russell Simpson, Jack Snyder and Eduard Ciannelli as their principal support, was on a level of gratifying excellence, and Director Albert Parker kept the general production up to the same mark.

"An Even Break."

In all sincerity "An Even Break" may well be called "The Apotheosis of the Cafe Star." This five-part Triangle feature, of which Lambert Hillyer is the author and director, tells a story of the life led by one Broadway show girl which, if popular report is to be believed, is not at all the existence of the rest of the sisterhood. In place of the midnight suppers with wealthy and lavish admirers and the other delights of high class Bohemia, Claire Curtis, the heroine of "An Even Break" and the leading dancer at Minot's Cafe, is a model of self-sacrifice, decorum and grit. She is willing to give up the man she loves to another in order to secure his happiness, and risks life and limb in his service and helps him defeat his enemies. She is properly rewarded for her fidelity, of course, after a wild race in her auto which she drives herself with the skill of a professional racer. Jimmie Strang and she grew up together in the same small town and drifted to the Street of Many Lights in search of fame and fortune. An industrial struggle furnishes the dramatic motive of the story, the Broadway life being merely incidental. It is given sufficient prominence, however, and the heroine's conduct is bound to please all right-minded persons. Most of us have grown a trifle weary of the insistence with which we are assured that Father Knickerbocker's chorus ladies are so fascinatingly naughty.

Olive Thomas, who is a recognized beauty of the show world and a pleasing dancer as well, is the Claire Curtis of the picture. Her perfection of form and face count large in her present success, but she evidently has the right mental equipment for the acting end of her new work, and experience will soon enable her to make two blades of artistic grass to grow where now she makes but one. Charles Gun as Jimmie Strang, Margaret Thompson as Mary, Darrel Foss as Ralph Harding, Charles K. French as David Harding, Frank Burke as Luther Collins and Louis Durham as Canning completed a cast that is all to the good.

"Follow the Girl"

Five-Reel Universal Production Features Ruth Stonehouse in Story of Swedish Immigrants in America.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS is a simple story of a Swedish orphan girl, who comes to this country in company with a young Swede named Olaf. While traveling with other immigrants on a big steamer they are observed by a woman spy named Donna. The latter goes to Hilda's berth in the steerage and while the girl is sleeping, sews a secret message into the hem of her skirt.

Hilda is then shadowed by a spy in this country, who makes a vain effort to recover the message. Hilda and her companion leave the train in the Western ranch country and it proceeds without them, while the girl is endeavoring in an amusing way to recapture her pet rabbit. As the story proceeds, Martinez and other spies seek out the girl, who has been befriended by the ranch owner. The latter eventually falls in love with her.

Scene from "Follow the Girl" (Butterfly).

The story is developed in a quiet way, without any attempt at thrills until the closing reel. There is, however, a wealth of good photography, and a continuous succession of pleasing outdoor scenes. Conspicuous among the latter are the views of the great herds of cattle "grazing upon a thousand hills."

The humor is pertinent to ranch life and centers largely about the open-mouthed Olaf, who is put through the familiar task of "holding the bag" while the ranch employes pretend to drive some game into it. This proves quite successful for comedy of this brand, though it is not extremely laughable. The strong points of the production are found in its rather human story and picturesque scenic features.

Ruth Stonehouse and Jack Dill do pleasing work as Hilda and Olaf; Roy Stewart appears as Larry, the ranch owner, and Claire Du Brey as Donna. Others in the cast are Alfred Allen, Mrs. Witting and Harry Dunkinson. This was written by Fred Myton and produced by L. W. Chaudet.

To Lake George for "The Hungry Heart."

Pauline Frederick, her director, Robert Vignola, and his staff, and Miss Frederick's supporting cast, left last week for Lake George, where work will begin at once on the picturization of David Graham Phillips' novel, "The Hungry Heart," recently purchased by Paramount as a starring vehicle for Miss Frederick. Much of the action of "The Hungry Heart" is out of doors, and some particularly fine exteriors in the Lake George neighborhood will be bottled up by Director Vignola for the benefit of the lovers of Phillips' best novel.

"A Wife on Trial"

Five-Reel Butterfly Offering Features Mignon Anderson and Leo Pierson in Pleasant Little Love Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel number, adapted by Leo Pierson from a story by Margaret Widdemer, and produced by Ruth Ann Baldwin, is one of the cheerful, Pollyanna type of offerings. It is alive with sentiment of an appealing sort and has a touch of what the sarcastic dramatic critics call "sugary sweetness." But it gets over extremely well and will please the average audience immensely.

Scene from "A Wife on Trial" (Butterfly).

There is a strong feminine touch visible all through this feature. The plot itself has a strong romantic flavor. It tells of a hard-working girl librarian whose life dream has been to possess a rose garden. Nothing happens to justify her dreams in this regard until one day two of her elderly friends suggest that she marry a young man who has been paralyzed in an automobile accident. The young man has plenty of money and owns a rose garden. The girl thinks matters over and finally decides to marry him.

From this point the story moves on to a quite obvious, but nevertheless, happy ending. The girl takes her injured husband to the country, where he learns to use his hands. Then along comes a burglar, who attacks the wife and shocks the husband into action again. He finds use of his limbs and saves his wife.

Mignon Anderson is very charming as Phyllis, and Leo Pierson fulfills all the requirements demanded of the hero in this type of story. Ruth Ann Baldwin is to be greatly congratulated upon the artistic presentation of this story, as the settings have much to do with the general appeal. The photography is also good.

Others in the cast are L. M. Wells, Julia Jackson, Marie van Tassel and George Pearce.

"The Amazons"

Marguerite Clark Featured in Morosco's Five-Part Screen Version of Pinero's Romantic Farce.

Reviewed by Arthur W. Courtney.

MARGUERITE CLARK'S acting saves the five-part Morosco screen version of Pinero's "The Amazons" from being rather a dull story when it is seen and not heard. The amazons are the three daughters of Lady Castlejordan, who raises her girls as boys. Marguerite Clark plays the part of Lord Tommy, one of the girls. Dressed as a boy, she attends the liveliest music hall in town. She gets in a row with a tough and knocks him over the box rail. Then she runs out into the street into the taxi of Lord Kitterly, her cousin. They do not know each other. They have never met before. He takes her to his rooms. When she revives and finds where she is, she jumps out of the window and runs home. Later he snatches her from the back of a runaway horse.

The opening scene is in the girls' gymnasium with Marguerite Clark exercising on a trapeze. She has a boxing match with one of her sisters. Her travesty on the puffing and blowing of a prizefighter between rounds is one of the best bits of pantomime in the play. Another funny scene is where the three girls are dressing for dinner. The most feminine of the three, who is always late and in need of help, comes in partly dressed in camisole and evening trousers. In the Vipont home Miss Clark, who could not be vulgar, sits dressed as a girl with her legs crossed and exposed to the knee. Entirely too much footage is given to the ogling by old Mr. Vipont. The flirtation of the girl usher with Miss Clark dressed as a boy is a trifle low. It is not up to the Pinero scene which it represents.

Lord Tweenways is the best acted part. It is the leading part in the play, but not on the screen. His "Don't do that," as a subtitle every time the Count de Grival kisses him, becomes tiresome. This is an unsuccessful attempt to use a verbal character tag on the screen.

The end is much too long drawn out. The acting of the Lord Kitterly who plays opposite Marguerite Clark is poor. He is athletic, but not a heroic figure. The picture would be much more satisfying if it ended with Lady Castlejordan's recognition of her sons and daughters

This picture will interest those who know nothing of the play, and Miss Clark's part in the picture will entertain everyone. The release date is August 5.

Five Christie Comedies

Betty Cumpson, Margaret Gibson, Ethel Lynne and Harry Ham Leading Actors in New One-Reelers.

THE title of the latest Christie one-reel releases suggest that the fun in them will be along the lines of previous comedies of the same brand. "He Fell on the Beach," "The 14th Man," "Skirts," "Almost a Scandal" and "Down by the Sea" are the name given them, and Betty Cumpson, Margaret Gibson, Ethel Lynne and a number of other pretty girls are members of the different casts. Harry Ham is the principal male actor in several of the one-reelers, and all the pictures are played with spirit. "Almost a Scandal" is probably the most original in plot and was written by Epes W. Sargent, a pair of striped trousers being an important feature in the complications. "He Fell on the Beach" and "Down by the Sea" permit the use of a number of women's bathing suits, Pacific coast models, and "The 14th Man" contains a neat comedy motive. Taking them collectively, they are of almost even merit and are well photographed and entirely free of objectionable features.

"Eye of Envy"

Crane Wilbur, Featured in Five-Part Horsley Production for Art Dramas, Plays Role in Allegorical Drama.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IN PRESENTING an allegorical drama to the public the producer is confronted with a difficult problem. In the first place, the play must be made interesting from a dramatic viewpoint, and in the second place, it must interpret faithfully that which it sets out to portray. In "Eye of Envy" the first-named requisite is not lacking, but the question as to the sincerity of the second is laid open.

The story has to do with two male characters impersonating Ambition and Avarice, and one female character impersonating Innocence. Innocence, an unhappy young woman, now the wife of Avarice, in the course of the story tells Ambition, with whom she has fallen in love, of how when her father, a steward in the house of Avarice, took ill, in order to save his life she consented to marry his repulsive employer. In the beautiful home she has lived since her marriage a wife in name only. Ambition, on learning the story of Innocence, is consumed with the desire to possess not only the beautiful maiden, but the riches of Avarice also. He therefore calls on the spirit of the forest on the estate of Avarice to make his wish come true. At the same time Avarice has learned that his young wife loves Ambition, and also appeals to the spirit to put the youthful soul of Ambition into his body, so that his wife's affections may turn from the stranger to him. The exchange made, Avarice then employs Ambition as his secretary, wins the love of his wife and opens a conflict between himself and Ambition.

Scene from "Eye of Envy" (Art Dramas).

Ambition, in striving to kidnap Innocence, is discovered, is set adrift in an electric storm and is killed by lightning. At the same moment, according to a stipulation made by the Spirit at the exchange of souls, Avarice, about to take his wife in his arms, falls dead.

"Souls in Pawn"

Five-part Mutual Production of Merit Features Gail Kane in a Story by Julius Grinnell Furthmann.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

A PLOT of peculiar complications marks the five-part Mutual production, "Souls in Pawn," from the story by Julius Grinnell Furthmann, in which Gail Kane plays the leading feminine role in an attractive and convincing manner. Opposite her in the role of a foreign nobleman and spy is Douglas MacLean, also doing his bit well. And next in importance in the cast is a little girl of four or five summers, who is unusually charming and natural as the daughter of Sebastian and Liane Dore.

As the story runs Sebastian Dore is shot at the door of his home by a German, von Kondemarck. The matter is hushed up by influence brought to bear on the authorities and the devoted wife of Sebastian Dore is forced to abandon the search on the ground that no clue to the murderer is in evidence. Von Kondemarck, for reasons not clear in the picture, tempts Liane to become a spy on behalf of his country, promising as a reward to reveal to her, after a stipulated time, the name of her husband's murderer. As the story progresses it gains in thrilling action, and a romance between the pair develops, bringing as a climax the revelation of the identity of von Kondemarck as the man her vengeance has been seeking out, after she herself has been arrested as a spy and is about to be put to death. A reversal of the situation occurs when she is used as a means of trapping von Kondemarck. The discovery by Liane that her husband has not only been false to her, but has deceived and tampered with the affections of von Kondemarck's sister, thereby meriting in a sense the visiting of punishment brought upon him by von Kondemarck, not with intent to kill, causes her to forgive him. A successful escape of the prisoners is effected and the story closes with the principals far away from the hand of justice and happy in each other's love.

The production is well made and more than ordinarily interesting.

"Two Kentucky Boys"

Two-Part Conquest Subject Is a Simple but Really Moving Civil War Story of Two Boys and a Girl.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

IN "Two Kentucky Boys," a two-part subject on Conquest Program No. 3, we have a picture worthy of any program or to be exhibited in any theater. It is a simple story, one which has been told many times—and will be told many times more, we may hope. It is an ideal story for showing to young folks, but the chances are it will not move the youngsters as deeply as it will their elders. It is full of the spirit of youth, the appeal of youth, which in its influence knows no age limit.

Albert Macklin is the youngster who plays "Gum" Jenkins son of a Kentucky father who favors the North. It is like father like son. Gum's decision to join the Northern forces is not a hasty one. His chum and the girl with whom they both are in love have chosen the South. James Turbell is "Skinny" Brown and Peggy Adams is Susie Witherell. It is a trio worth while. Their work is such that no discount is necessary to account for their youth—it will par with that of older persons.

"Two Kentucky Boys" will be popular in any house, North or South. The story is so conceived that the honors are even between the two sections. Each thinks none the less of the other for following the course outlined by his convictions, and neither will permit friendship to swerve him from the strict path of duty to his colors. It is a wholesome picture and filled with drama.

"The Uneven Road"

Little Mary McAlister as an Inquisitive Child in an Episode of Essanay's "Do Children Count?" Series.

Reviewed by Arthur W. Courtney.

LITTLE Mary McAlister is always the life of the picture in which she appears. In "The Uneven Road," a two-part episode in Essanay's "Do Children Count?" series, she appears as an inquisitive child who sets fire to a dish of gunpowder in the parlor and so accidentally blinds herself. Through the greater part of the picture she is blind, and a pathetic figure. She does not have much opportunity to act because she is in bed with her eyes bandaged most of the time. An operation restores her sight.

The story of the picture is not without blemish. It is concerned mainly with the effect of Little Mary's affliction on her parents. The father is addicted to gambling in stocks. His employer warns him that he will be discharged if he errs again. The father, to cover a ten point margin, forges his wife's name to a check. When the wife goes to the bank to get the money for the operation she finds it gone. She goes to her husband's office and finds him discharged. She appeals to his employer. Then comes the principal blot. The employer places his hand over hers and tells her she can have the money and whatever else she needs upon a condition that may be imagined. This is not well prepared for, and it comes as an unpleasant surprise. In this picture Little Mary has a different mother, Jane Thomas, who gives a satisfactory portrayal of integrity. This picture was released July 25.

Three Artcrafts for September

They Will Feature Mary Pickford, Elsie Ferguson and Douglas Fairbanks.

THE month of September will be marked by three Artcraft releases, the stars of which will be Mary Pickford, Elsie Ferguson and Douglas Fairbanks, in the order named.

"Our first release in September," says President Greene, "will be Mary Pickford in 'Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm,' completion of which has just been announced by our West coast studios. The next Artcraft picture to be completed will be the Elsie Ferguson production, 'Barbary Sheep,' now well under way at Fort Lee. Douglas Fairbanks will begin work within a very few days on his fourth Artcraft release, which will be finished in time for release in September."

"'Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm,' directed by Marshall Neilan, is the sixth picture released by Artcraft in which Mary Pickford has been the star. It would be difficult for me to overstate the enthusiasm with which exhibitors have written us concerning the results that have attended the exhibition of these productions.

"'Barbary Sheep' is going to be a revelation in many ways. Director Maurice Tourneur has reproduced Algeria itself for the background of the Robert Hichens story, and the first appearance of Elsie Ferguson on the screen is going to prove that her beauty loses none of its radiance through reproduction by the camera

"Of the Fairbanks picture nothing need be said save it is another Fairbanks picture. 'In Again—Out Again' and 'Wild and Woolly' proved to exhibitors that Mr. Fairbanks was offering to them through Artcraft the greatest work he has ever done. 'Down to Earth,' our August Fairbanks release, is bound to be another big hit, and from what we know of the September production it will give the star greater opportunities than he has ever had before.

"We expect to be able to announce shortly the approximate time of release of the Geraldine Farrar picture, 'The Woman God Forgot,' the first William S. Hart feature, and the first of the special Cecil B. De Mille productions, 'The Devil Stone.'"

Gaumont for Week of August 20.

The great success of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly is attested by the orders for additional prints placed by Mutual branch managers. This news reel is highly patriotic in character and has been complimented for the part it is playing in awakening the country to the duties and demands of war. Every exhibitor who uses it will have a reel that will interest his patrons for its entire length. The release for August 22 is Mutual Weekly No. 138. As it is not made up until the date of issue, it is impossible to state in advance what its contents will be.

Another Gaumont single-reel of the week is "Reel Life" No. 69, released through Mutual August 23. "Hunting Alligators for Their Skins" is an entertaining section of this reel. It shows the methods pursued in Florida and North Carolina, and also hints at the possibilities of using the flesh for food, something already esteemed by the negroes of the South. A second section is also connected with the high cost of living. It reveals the methods pursued in "Harvesting Potatoes on the Eastern Coast." These aristocrats of the vegetable kingdom are shown in captivity near Norfolk, Va. "Coney Island Thrills" are enjoyed by the spectators of this reel without being jerked, shoved, pushed and mauled as are the people shown in the pictures as they shoot the chutes, ride the witching waves, snap the whip and do other joy-provoking stunts. "Oil From Japan" acquaints one with the fact that America is importing large quantities of soy bean oil. The reel concludes with a humorous animated drawing based on a picture in "Life."

Eltinge Masquerades as Female Thief.

Julian Eltinge's first picture for Paramount, to be released in September, provides unusually ample opportunity for Mr. Eltinge to show his ability as a straight leading man and as the world's most famous impersonator of female roles, in the latter character as a countess who steals money and jewels for the Red Cross.

The picture has been adapted by Gardner Hunting from a story written especially for Mr. Eltinge by Gelett Burgess and Carolyn Wells. The production is being directed by Donald Crisp.

Mr. Eltinge has never acted before the camera before, but his work is said to be of true star calibre. His impersonation of the countess is so deceptive that the costume change from male to female part has to be made practically before the audience's eyes to prevent the possibility of a belief in trick photography.

Comments on the Films

EXCLUSIVELY BY OUR OWN STAFF

General Film Company.

PETE'S PANTS (Black Cat), July 28.—A 27-minute picture that looks several years old. The oldtimers, Victor Potel, Ben Turpin, and Margaret Joslin are in the cast. The second part of the picture is "Snakeville's Debutantes." This is a poor picture. Much footage is given to the kicking and pitchforking of a man while his head is held fast.

Art Dramas, Inc.

EYE OF ENVY (Horsley-Art Dramas).—This five-part production, featuring Crane Wilbur, is an allegorical drama of moderate interest. The chief characters are Ambition, Avarice, and Innocence, with the conflict of the story taking place between Ambition and Avarice. A full review of the production will be found elsewhere. The cast consists, in addition to Crane Wilbur, of F. A. Thompson, Julia Jackson, Lillian Webster, Jode Mullally, Gene Crosby, and Edgar Sherrod.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

THE CLEAN-UP, Aug. 6.—Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon are the stars of this five-part story. The picture is entertaining. It is given a larger review on another page of this issue.

Butterfly Pictures.

A WIFE ON TRIAL, July 30.—A five-reel number, based on a story by Margaret Widdemer, featuring Mignon Anderson and Leo Pierson. This is a love story of the sentimental, charming sort. It tells of a poor girl librarian who marries a young man who has been paralyzed in an automobile accident. She marries him because he is rich and she can then have a rose garden. Of course he recovers, and they find themselves really in love. This is artistically produced, and makes a strong appeal. Reviewed elsewhere at length.

FOLLOW THE GIRL, August 6.—A five-reel number, written by Fred Myton and produced by L. W. Chaudet. Ruth Stonehouse is featured as a Swedish girl who comes to America, and while enroute is made the victim of a plot of foreign spies. Clear, attractive photography and picturesque ranch scenes are the strong features of this. The story is one of simple, human interest. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Fox Film Corporation.

WIFE NUMBER TWO, July 29.—Dramatic picture, with a good measure of distinction and power. Valeska Suratt has a role in which she does her best work. For a longer review see elsewhere in this issue.

JACK AND THE BEANSTALK (Special Release).—A ten-part spectacle, with a wonderful child cast and an elaborate production. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Greater Vitagraph.

THE SECOND MRS. TANQUERAY (Vitagraph), August 6.—An English made version of the celebrated play of the same name. Sir George Alexander and Hilda Moore play the leading roles. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

BOBBY, PHILANTHROPIST (Vitagraph).—In this reel Bobby rescues poor little Aida Horton from a street fight, takes her home, gives her a bath, dresses her in a velvet suit of his, and invites her to a meal of cream cake. He has previously rescued her kitten from imminent peril of death. All the actors are excellent including the kitten.

BOASTS AND BOLDNESS (Vitagraph).—There is a snap and a dash about the business of this one-part athletic farce that makes it very laughable. It is well produced and acted.

Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay

SKINNER'S BABY (Essanay), August 6.—The coming of the first-born of the Skinner family is attended with delightful humor and enjoyment. Bryant Washburn and Hazel Daly are more entertaining than ever. Harry Beaumont has adapted and directed the story with fine intelligence and effect.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

THE HIDDEN SPRING, July 16.—An interesting western mining picture in five reels, featuring Harold Lockwood, and dealing with his successful fight as a young lawyer against the unscrupulous mine owner, who is the absolute boss of the community. Reviewed in last week's issue.

MR. PARKER, HERO, July 23.—This is a Drew comedy. Mrs. Drew calls her husband home from a vacation to discharge the cook. His diplomatic way of covering his cowardice, and his efforts to make his wife think that he has really played the hero in the kitchen make a very funny picture. The end is good. Mr. Drew opens the morning paper and remarks: "It looks like war with Germany."

ALADDIN'S OTHER LAMP (Rolfe), June 25.—A pleasing five-part picture, with Viola Dana as a little slavey who comes into a fortune. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Mutual Film Corporation.

TOURS AROUND THE WORLD NO. 39 (Gaumont), July 31.—The interesting and well illustrated subjects contained in this number are: "Marken, Holland"; "La Grande Chartreuse, France"; and "A Trip to Majorca."

REEL LIFE NO. 66 (Gaumont), August 2.—The subjects contained in this number of "Reel Life" are: "Making Machine Guns"; "Beads of Rose Petals"; "Saving a Wrecked Steamship"; "Keeping the Boys Home," a short bit of comedy containing a hint for parents; and some leaves from "Life," which were not as clever as usual.

SOULS IN PAWN (American), August 6.—A five-part production of good quality, featuring Gail Kane. The story by J. G. Furthmann has a complicated but well-constructed plot in which a woman without knowing it becomes the sweetheart of her husband's murderer, afterward discovering that her husband had been false to her and had given his murderer just cause for resentment by tampering with the affections of his sister. A full review will be found elsewhere.

THE WIDOW'S MIGHT (LaSalle), August 14.—A farce comedy in which a man who vows to marry a certain widow finds out that she is not as sweet as he had hoped she might be. To bring about a condition through which he can get some of her money he plays sick, and the doctor states that unless he gets everything he asks for he will die. The tables turn, however, before the close of the picture, and he loses what he gained.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

THE SQUAW MAN'S SON (Lasky), July 26.—A sequel to "The Squaw Man," featuring Wallace Reid, supported by Anita King, Dorothy Davenport, Frank Lanning, Raymond Hatton, Mabel Van Buren, C. H Geldert and a good cast. The story contains tense situations and some stirring "scraps." It was reviewed in last week's issue.

THE CRYSTAL GAZER (Lasky), July 30.—A five-reel picture, with Fanny Ward in a role that gives her no great chance to do her most effective acting. It should get favor enough from the public; but it won't do anything astonishing. For a longer notice see elsewhere in this issue.

THE AMAZONS (Morosco), August 5.—A five-part screen version of Pinero's play, with Marguerite Clark as star. The acting of Miss Clark is superb, and makes this a most entertaining picture. A review is printed in this issue.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

A SACRIFICE SUPREME (Pathe), August 19.—This instalment concludes "The Neglected Wife," and brings about a return of happiness to Kennedy and his wife. There are a number of interesting scenes, and various features of importance are cleared up. One of these is the identity of the veiled woman. The story closes with Kennedy making efforts to regain his own self-respect and his wife's love.

THE STREETS OF ILLUSION (Pathe-Gold Rooster), August 19.—A five-reel story of Washington Square, featuring Gladys Hulette and a well balanced cast. The story is light, but entertaining, most of the scenes taking place in a boarding house. Numerous appealing characters are introduced. Reviewed elsewhere in this number.

THE SIGNAL LANTERN (Pathe), August 19.—Instalment No. 7 of "The Fatal Ring." This episode contains a number of spirited moments, though no big stunt is staged. Pearl succeeds, after the expenditure of time and money, in procuring Carslake's release He rewards her by turning over the diamond, but no sooner has she taken it than she is once more pursued. The number closes with Pearl in search of the dark lady.

LONESOME LUKE, MECHANIC (Pathe), August 19.—A knockabout comedy number, featuring Harold Lloyd as a mechanic in a garage. All sorts of fun is had with automobiles, and there are several moments that bring laughter. Not much of a plot, but plenty of action and small business.

Triangle Film Corporation.

IN SLUMBERLAND (July 29).—This five-reel fairy picture has already been mentioned in this paper. More recently we have seen it in the Eighty-First Street theater, New York, where it had its first run, and find that it is taking strongly with both the younger patrons and their parents. It is full of bits that plainly are getting over to the delight of the spectator. The picture tells a dream story rather than a flat fairy tale, and makes us really believe in youth, its beliefs, its dreams, and its fairies, since it is Irish youth that is here delightfully pictured. In this time of war's worries it is just the picture to book and count on; for it is making a hit, especially with the youthful part of the audience. What is more, it can be booked and shown to any audience, as it has an appeal to the grownups as well.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

BOMBS AND BANDITS (L-Ko), Week of July 2.—A two-reel comic which deals with the love affairs of a city mayor and chief of police, each in love with the same girl. Sammy, the office boy, also loves her, and much of the early part of the offering pictures his various antics. The number has an exceptional whirlwind finish, in which a runaway engine, pursued by a handcar, crashes into freight cars, buildings and other things. The movable floor makes a good humorous feature. This runs ahead of the average for this type of production in several respects.

ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 82 (Universal), August 1.—A diversified and entertaining number, including many scenes connected with the world war, harness races, golf contests and other features

UNIVERSAL CURRENT EVENTS NO. 12, August 4.—Contains many interesting pictorial subjects, including hot weather scenes in New York City, Friars' outing on Long Island, and many war sidelights

CHEYENNE'S PAL (Star Featurette), Week of August 4.—A two-reel subject, written by Jack Ford, featuring Harry Carey, Gertrude Astor and others. This is an interesting episode in the life of Cheyenne Harry, in which he sells his favorite horse to a British army officer and then takes it back again under exciting circumstances. The sentiment is pleasing, and the number will take rightful place among the entertaining picture stories of animals.

THE BRASS GIRL (Victor), Week of August 13.—A clever two-reel comedy number, featuring Matt Moore and Jane Gail. The young musical composer rooms just above a girl who is learning to pound brass. Their professions seriously conflict, and stormy scenes occur. Then a burglar comes along, and the hero and the girl capture him together, which places them in a compromising position, so they decide to wed. The comedy situations are good, and the settings attractive. This makes a desirable light subject.

THE RUSHIN DANCERS (Nestor), Week of August 13.—A comedy by C. G. Briden, featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and others. After the women of Cactus Flat begin taking lessons from a man teacher their husbands pretend to engage a lady instructer. This brings on an amusing clash, and an averted lynching. This is rather original in plot, and proves entertaining.

A WIFE'S SUSPICION (Gold Seal), Week of August 13.—A three-reel detective story, with a surprise ending, written by Willard Mack. Clyde Benson, Edward Clark, Lee Hill, Hazel Page, Betty Schade and Val Paul appear. This is not particularly intense in plot, but holds the interest without cessation and works up gradually to a very neat finish. The cast is a good one, and the story well above the average of its type.

ROUGH STUFF (L-Ko), Week of August 13.—A knockabout number, as the title aptly suggests, featuring Dan Russell, Walter Stephens and Gladys Varden. The former plays a flirtatious hotel proprietor, with a justly suspicious wife. There is some slight vulgarity in this, but nothing really offensive. It has some very funny moments of the rough house order.

World Pictures.

SOULS ADRIFT (Peerless), August 13.—Ethel Clayton and Milton Sills are the stars of this five-part photoplay, which shows attractive scenes on a desert island, and has a dramatic story. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Miscellaneous.

A KITCHEN ROMANCE (Peter Pan).—Another of the Mo-toy comedies. Skilful and clever direction is shown in the handling of these doll actors. The story deals with the efforts of a new cook, Lena, to obtain a "man," after several failures she finally lands a sailor, and the butler hangs out a sign "another cook wanted."

BUNKED AND PAID FOR (Filmcraft Corporation).—Walt Mason "rhyme reel," in which the well-known bard pokes a little fun at people who follow food hints in the papers. The story concerns a young married couple who try to live on thirty cents a day. They then meet the author of the food hints, a portly gentleman who dines on porterhouse steak. The idea in this is humorous, and the presentation satisfactory. Animated drawings are used in certain scenes.

THE DIPPER (Filmcraft Corporation).—A one-reel Walt Mason comedy telling a simple, human story of two lovers who carve their initials on the old dipper at the well. Some good satirical touches are given where the board of health conducts a search for microbes, animated drawings being used with good effect here. The number is different from the ordinary comedy, and includes occasional stanzas written by Mr. Mason. This will please the average audience.

TRUE LOVE AND FAKE MONEY (Filmcraft Corporation).—A "rhyme reel" illustrating one of Walt Mason's story-poems. In this a youth meets a girl, and the love affair is interfered with by a village gossip. He gives her a twenty-dollar bill, which turns out to be counterfeit. He and the girl then round up the counterfeiting gang together. The plot is rather thin, but the philosophical poetry helps out the interest considerably. It makes on the whole quite a pleasing number.

HASH (Filmcraft Corporation).—A Walt Mason "rhyme reel," with the usual story-poem. This concerns a youth who is thrown out of a boarding house for complaining of the food. He creates a false alarm of fire in order to rescue his sweetheart, but rescues the landlady by mistake. The girl then appears and insists upon marrying him in order to obtain her fortune. A pleasing light subject, the thin plot being helped out by the familiar Walt Mason verse

HAYAKAWA AN IDEAL HASHIMURA TOGO.

Seventeen years ago there was a cub reporter in San Francisco who every once in a while would get an assignment that had to do with Japs. He got to know the Japanese mind very well, and he got to know Jap-American dialect even better When he became a free-lance writer the cub reporter began to recount some of his ideas about the Jap and his American ways, and it was thus that Hashimura Togo was born a figure destined to spread the fame of Wallace Irwin broadcast.

Scene from "Hashimura Togo" (Paramount).

Last year Wallace Irwin went to a picture show in which a young Jap named Hayakawa appeared in the leading part. To Irwin it was Togo come to life. As a matter of fact, Sessue Hayakawa is a real Hashimura Togo. He was a dutiful and studious Jap boy in the flowery kingdom, but when it came time for him to train as a naval lieutenant he decided he would rather act instead. So he came to America. Togo did the same thing (in the mind of Wallace Irwin). Togo's American experiences were remarkably like Hayakawa's, and when Irwin began to put his Jap hero into film he combined the lives of the two, the real man and the fiction man. The result will be the debut of Togo on the screen.

"Hashimura Togo" adapted for the screen makes an ideal vehicle for Hayakawa. The early part of Togo's life will be screened and into the story of his humorous experiences as a servant in an American household has been woven a romance that will provide a lot of thrilling situations and genuine love interest. The picture will be released by Paramount August 19.

SENNETT NAMES HIS FIRST THREE PARAMOUNTS.

Mack Sennett announced from Edendale, Cal., this week the titles and casts of his first three pictures to be released by Paramount Pictures Corporation, in accordance with the new Paramount-Sennett affiliation. The first release will be September 15, and others will follow every two weeks.

"Roping Her Romeo" is the first Paramount-Sennett. It features Polly Moran, long famous as a vivacious and pretty Sennett comedienne, and Ben Turpin and Slim Summerville.

"A Bedroom Blunder" features Charles Murray, Mary Thurman and Wayland Trask. Murray is famous as one of the best burlesquers ever graduated from the stage to the screen.

"The Pullman Bride" features Gloria Swanson. The men are Chester Conklin and Mack Swain, neither of whom needs introduction.

"Lust of the Ages" Completed

Ogden Pictures Corporation Completes Massive Production With Lillian Walker as the Leading Player.

WITHOUT the usual advance notices that have characterized the releasing of extraordinary attractions by film producing concerns, the Ogden Pictures Corporation, after continuously working for a period of seven months, have completed what promises to be the greatest film spectacle produced since "The Clansman" was filmed.

The Ogden Pictures Corporation was formed to produce a series of extraordinary attractions starring Miss Lillian Walker, popularly known as "Dimples," and whose enviable work for the years that she was with the Vitagraph Company has placed her in the ranks of the very few female stars with whom the film fans of the world are captivated.

Scene from "The Lust of the Ages" (Ogden).

Under the direction of Harry J. Revier, one of the advance guard of directors of massive productions, the initial attraction was produced at the studios of the Ogden Pictures Corporation at Ogden, Utah.

This initial production is entitled "The Lust of the Ages" and deals with a subject that is at present engaging the attention of the entire world apart from the present world war. No inkling of the character of the story has been forthcoming excepting the bare information that it is not a sex play nor a war subject.

In order to set the highest standard possible by which the public and the trade might judge the future activities of the Ogden Pictures Corporation, Albert Scowcroft, the president, and Lester Park, the general manager, determined to spare neither time nor expense in the staging of the production, and gave Mr. Revier carte blanche, with the result that $100,000 is below the actual cost, "but," Mr. Scowcroft stated, "every dollar of it shows its value in the picture."

The exploitation and sale of "The Lust of the Ages" is under the managership of Jesse J. Goldburg, who lately returned from a tour of the country selling the state rights market, and offices of the company have been temporarily opened at 729 Seventh avenue, Suite 1202, New York.

Extensive plans are being made for a scheme of advertising and publicity and along lines and on a scale never heretofore attempted in connection with any other motion picture attraction. The A. M. Sweyd Co., advertising specialists, have been employed to assist Mr. Goldburg in the exploitation of the production and it has been stated that $9,500 has been set aside for trade paper advertising alone, the major portion of which is to be expended for the benefit of the buyers of the production, and which advertisements are to be directed largely to the exhibitors throughout the United States. The pictures will be released on the state rights basis.

SHOWINGS OF ITALIAN WAR FILMS.

The first official Italian war films to reach the United States, known as "The Italian Battlefront," will be exhibited in New York on Wednesday night, August 8. They were taken by the cinematographic division of the Italian army, under the supervision of the Italian Supreme Command, and are said to be the most wonderful war pictures that have reached America thus far.

The Italian Government, through its American representatives, has placed the exploitation of its first official war pictures in the hands of the Fort Pitt Theater Corporation of Pittsburgh, of which William Moore Patch is president and managing director. Mr. Patch was selected for this purpose by reason of an interesting series of events which have just come to light.

The pictures were produced in Buffalo at the Teck theater on Saturday night, August 4, Mr. Patch leaving Buffalo Saturday midnight in time to reach New York for the opening. Boston has been chosen as the next city on the map. The pictures will open for an indefinite engagement in the Tremont theater there on August 13. Chicago has been set for August 20 in the immense Auditorium, which holds four thousand people. Other productions will follow in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit, St. Louis, Kansas City, Milwaukee, Minneapolis.

BACKER GETS IVAN PRODUCTIONS.

A deal just consummated by Franklyn E. Backer, president of the Mammoth Film Corporation, gives this booming state rights concern an attractive addition to their already impressive list of popular box office winners. Mr. Backer has secured control of the entire output of the Ivan Film Productions, Inc., for Northern New Jersey.

The first release will occur on September 1st, being the seven-reel super-feature "Babbling Tongues," with James Morrison and Grace Valentine. Further offerings will occur in approximately monthly periods, the titles and stars of which will be announced as occasion requires. Some exceptional scenarios and popular stars have already been arranged for.

SHORT SUBJECTS IN DEMAND.

The Lea Bel Company, of 64 West Randolph street, Chicago, Ill., which has charge of the distribution of the Motoy Comedies in Illinois, Indiana and Southern Wisconsin, report an annual demand for short subjects by the exhibitors, and announce extraordinary bookings throughout their entire territory. They say that Motoy Comedies are the most popular short subjects they have ever handled.

CORONA TO PRODUCE BIG OUTDOOR STORY.

A thrilling story of the great outdoors, being a picturization of one of the most popular novels of the day, with an all-star cast, will be the next production of The Corona Cinema Company, producers of "The Curse of Eve," it is announced. It is understod that this company has quietly secured the exclusive right to screen all of the works of one of America's foremost authors, who will also be actively connected in the production of his work. Direction will be in the hands of a successful producer of feature pictures in the East, who will sign a two years' contract with the Corona people.

"The Curse of Eve" will shortly be released in New York, if its producers accept very flattering offers made for the world rights for the film.

BLYSTONE CREATES ANOTHER CENTURY COMEDY SUBJECT.

With three features ready for distribution and a fourth subject just about ready to quit the factory, Century Comedies, in which Alice Howell is the star, are soon to be augmented by another J. G. Blystone production. The Century series of bounce and bump laughmakers are now controlled, as to selling rights, by the Longacre Distributing Company, and by the first of September complete arrangements for marketing Century's from various distributing points will be completed.

"Alice of the Sawdust" will be ready within a fortnight to show to State right operators, and Miss Howell's circus stunts are asserted to be "the limit." General Director Blystone is now putting the clever comedienne through her paces in a two-reeler that shows Miss Howell forever in the clutches of an amorous blacksmith. There is a thrill promised in this new one that will far surpass anything Mr. Blystone has yet accomplished.

A. Kay Distributes Lion Comedies

Master Motion Picture Company Has Arranged for a Weekly Release of Its Product.

FOLLOWING close on the heels of the announcement from the Master Motion Picture Company that the "Make 'Em Roar" phrase represented a new brand of comedies that were being made by Masterpictures of Houston, Texas, and that were to be released through the independent market, comes another important announcement with regard to these comedies. The announcement is from the executive offices of the A. Kay Company, and says that an arrangement has been entered into and agreed upon between the A. Kay Company and Harold J. Binney, president and director general of Masterpictures for the world-wide distribution of the latter's product.

The A. Kay Company has been negotiating for the output of Masterpictures for the past few months, and now that arrangements have been completed whereby the A. Kay Company become the sole distributors of these comedies, plans are already under way for the marketing of these comedies.

Scene from "Nathan Busts Into the Movies" (Masterpictures).

Masterpictures has decided to call the pictures Lion Comedies. The name has been accepted by the A. Kay Company, and in the future, in advertising and exploitation, the brand of Lion Comedies will be used.

Masterpictures has arranged with the A. Kay Company for a weekly release of these comedies, the first to be released on or about the middle of August. At present an extensive campaign is being mapped out for Masterpictures. The A. Kay Company also informs us that the distributors in this country will be exchanges of an established reputation.

The first of the Lion Comedies is called "Nathan Busts Into the Movies," and will certainly "Make 'Em Roar,'" according to the announcement. Further reports about this comedy indicate that it is a comedy of a slapstick nature. The second picture is entitled, "A Village Villain," and is heralded as a sure box-office winner.

TOBIAS TO REPRESENT FOURSQUARE IN CONNECTICUT.

Arrangements have been made whereby L. S. Tobias, former branch manager for Mutual in New Haven, Conn., will act in the capacity of Supervisor of Sales in Connecticut for M. H. Hoffman-Foursquare Pictures. Mr. Tobias leaves for Connecticut this week, where he will arrange for special showings and first runs for the first releases of the Foursquare, namely, "The Sin Woman," "Trip Through China," "Her Fighting Chance," "Should She Obey?" and "The Silent Witness."

These features will be handled direct from the New York exchange, thereby affording the exhibitor correct shipping and co-operating facilities.

UNIQUE HOUSE ORGAN FOR FOREIGN BUYERS.

J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., 729 Seventh avenue, New York, are issuing a bulletin for circulation among buyers of motion picture films in all countries outside the United States. The bulletin takes the form of an illustrated catalogue fully descriptive of a large list of films released on the open market. The nature of the bulletin will at once be realized when it is stated that Brockliss handles the world's rights of such recent notable successes as "The Deemster," "The Barrier," the Billy West Comedies, "The Land of the Rising Sun," the U. S. Navy, "The Canadian Army," the A. Kay Productions, Motoy Comedies and many others.

OLDKNOW TAKES MUTT AND JEFF.

Colonel William Oldknow, the general manager of the Consolidated Film Supply Co., of Atlanta, Ga., has very recently acquired the rights to many of the worth-while short subjects released in the state rights field. Chief among these are the Mutt and Jeff Comedies, for which he has acquired the rights to the entire South.

NEXT EDGAR LEWIS PICTURE PROMISES SURPRISES.

In spite of the secrecy surrounding the next special Edgar Lewis picture, which is now being completed at Ticonderoga, New York, enough news has reached Broadway to cause considerable speculation in film circles as to the nature of the well known director's new contribution to the screen. Although Mr. Lewis has been working on his new production for two months, and has had his large company assembled at Ticonderoga for more than six weeks, the only definite news received has related to the fact that Mitchell Lewis, Hedda Nova, Victor Sutherland, William A. Williams, Ray Chamberlain, members of "The Bar Sinister" cast, and Mabel Scott and Edward Rossman, who played prominent parts in "The Barrier," including Joseph Heron, Philip Sanford, William Cavanaugh and Juanita and Alberta Meizner, will also be seen in the coming drama. The nature of the story and its title have never been mentioned, and are still jealously guarded, but Charles Feature Adams, who visited the Edgar Lewis company recently, managed to get some news past the Lewis censor, which gives a hint of the importance of the production.

The amount of construction work done by Edgar Lewis can be judged by the fact that one building is over sixty feet long, its interior being used by the director to stage large ensemble scenes, while its exterior is necessary to the photographing of important action in the main street of the town.

The photoplay is under the personal supervision of Edward Earl, who has selected the Craftsman Film Laboratories to do the printing and developing under the personal supervision of Charles Herliman.

LIBERTY HAS MUTT AND JEFF COMEDIES.

Mayer Silverman, president of the Liberty Film Renting Co., which has its offices at 938 Penn avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., has taken over the franchise for Mutt and Jeff Comedies for Pennsylvania and West Virginia. This move on his part speaks well for the selling qualities of Bud Fisher's new releases, as Mr. Silverman is reckoned one of the most careful and conservative exchange men in the business.

CHRISTIE ON BUSINESS TRIP.

Charles H. Christie, business manager of the Christie Film Company, has just left Los Angeles for a trip which will cover the greater part of the United States and will include visits to practically all the open-market exchanges handling Christie Comedies throughout the country. Mr. Christie expects to arrive in New York during the first week in August to conclude negotiations for the Christie rights in a number of foreign countries, notably those of South America.

"Within a few weeks," said Mr. Christie before his departure, "we will complete our first year of production for the open market, having begun our state rights distribution on September 18 of last year. As we have subjects completed up to the end of September, 1917, it may be said that we have reached our first birthday, and our success within this period has been very gratifying to us. We have delayed the disposal of some of the foreign rights until we had established our product on a firm and proven basis, but with our recent sale of the Japanese and Scandinavian rights we feel that we are ready for an invasion of the markets of the world.

SUMMER ACTIVITIES OF KING BEE.

Probably no company engaged in the production of motion pictures has been more active during this summer than the King Bee Films Corporation, whose studios at Bayonne, N. J., have seldom been idle even during the most trying heat. Under the direction of Louis Burstein, President and General Manager of the company, work has gone incessantly night and day as the demand for the comedies with Billy West as the star is overwhelmingly great. The ninth two-reel King Bee is in hand and promises to be no less humorous than its predecessor

NOTHING FOR THE GOATS.

Comedy situations happen on and off the screen many times during the day in a film distributing office.. Henry J. Brock, president of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, 220 West 42d street, New York City, relates one of these which transpired some weeks ago in his office. The Inter-Ocean Film Corporation pursue an export business exclusively for motion picture films and there are times when representatives of many foreign countries, talking in their native tongue, are doing business for the country they represent. Among these foreign buyers was a gentleman from one of the Latin American countries who had just purchased several subjects for his territory. The entire deal was practically consummated, all but the order for advertising matter, which usualy consists of pictorial paper, heralds, slides, photographs, etc.

The customer in question ordered a full line of everything, but omitted the pictorial paper, much to the astonishment of the salesman, who immediately told him he had overlooked the most important part of the publicity matter. His reply was: "We can't post any paper in our country, for goats are very common and walk the streets as freely as dogs do here, and the goats usually have a feast when paper is posted. They love the paste and naturally the paste is all licked off and the paper is used for desert."

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

Daly Plays "Man Without a Country"

Frohman Amusement Corporation Announces Patriotic Production Directed by Jack Noble.

THE announcement comes from the offices of President William L. Sherrill of the Frohman Amusement Corporation that his corporation has completed the taking of the final scenes of Edward Everett Hale's "A Man Without a Country," and that this next big Frohman production will be ready for its first public showing, beginning an indefinite run at a prominent Broadway theater, about August 10.

For the past two months John W. Noble, the new Frohman director, has been laboring with armies of people, building entire villages, fighting replica battles of the Revolutionary, Civil and Spanish-American wars and staging the wonderful reproduction of Admiral Decatur's naval battle with the Tripoli pirates.

Anthony P. Kelly, the adaptor of the greater part of the former Frohman successes, has again contributed the scenario of this latest play. Suggested by the book, the scenario is the result of many months of historical research by the scenario author and the finished product which he himself terms "the best work of my life."

Enacting the role of Philip Nolan, the rash army captain who, in a moment of extreme anger, cried: "Damn the United States! I wish I may never hear of the United States again," is Arnold Daly. In support of Mr. Daly there is the usual Frohman cast. John W. Noble has, during the seven years he has been directing motion pictures, acquitted himself with distinction.

"I feel that at least our corporation has succeeded in producing a picture that sets a standard," said President Sherrill. "We have chosen a subject which carries psychological appeal —a smashing, up-to-the-minute, timely production which will do much to stimulate the interest so much needed at this moment. We have certainly been accorded most unusual cooperation and credentials from every source, enabling us to make our production absolutely authentic and historically correct."

KATHLYN WILLIAMS IN SELIG TWO-REELER.

"A Man, A Girl and A Lion" is the title of the Selig feature production in two reels released August 6 in the General Film service. The drama introduces Kathlyn Williams once more in a jungle picture. She is seen in thrilling adventures afloat and ashore and playing with a ferocious African lion. The story is from the pen of James Oliver Curwood, the famous writer, and the all-star cast that carries out the story includes other than Kathlyn Williams such artists as Thomas Santschi, Lafayette McKee and Charles Clary.

In brief, the drama has to do with a girl of the jungle who listening to the wonderous tales of the circus man there on a trapping expedition, runs away to another land and joins a circus. How she experiences a rude awakening and is avenged by a captive lion are but incidents in a Selig jungle drama said to possess strength of story, good acting, and excellent wild animal stuff.

ESSANAY SHOWS TWO FEATURES TO TRADE.

Trade showings of "Open Places" and "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," two Essanay feature productions, are now being offered at branch offices of K-E-S-E. "Open Places" is the third of the Essanay Western series in which Jack Gardner, the former musical comedy star, is being featured. This photodrama, which has been built to meet the general public demand for red-blooded action on the screen, will be released August 20. Taylor Holmes, the stage comedian, is to make his screen debut in the comedy-drama entitled "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," which will be released September 3.

Scene from "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship" (Essanay).

"Open Places" presents the adventures of a little New England schoolmarm who attempts to teach the "wild and woolly" West its A B C's. In a little pioneer town of Montana, on the Canadian boundary, she meets a typical bad man and, impressed by his picturesque appearance, weds him. Their honeymoon is cut short by a deadly duel in which her husband kills another man and is forced to flee across the boundary to escape justice. A year passes in which the little teacher gradually grows interested in Constable Calhoun of the Canadian Mounted Police. The dramatic climax comes when, as their acquaintance has ripened into mutual love, the bad man turns up again to claim his wife. The picture has a screen time, approximately, of sixty-five minutes. Ruth King and Carl Stockdale head the supporting company.

Taylor Holmes has been given a type of subtle comedy characterization in his first picture. The story presents the actor in the role of an "efficiency bug" who seeks to win the love of a girl by the application of modern business methods. More successfully to compete with his chief rival, who plays a guitar, he purchases a saxaphone. In the long run efficiency wins out for him. Virginia Valli takes the leading feminine role. "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship" has a screen time of sixty-eight minutes.

FORD STAGING TIMELY DRAMA.

Director Francis Ford, who recently completed the production of the Universal special eight-reel feature, "John Ermine of the Yellowstone," in which he himself played the title role, has commenced work upon a dramatic story of international intrigue entitled "The Greater Sacrifice," which will probably be released in three reels.

The story, written by Jessie Love and arranged for the screen by William Parker, tells of a young officer of the American diplomatic service who is entrusted with an important secret mission, and of a young woman, the servant of a foreign power, who is sent out to betray him. She very nearly succeeds, but falls in love with him, and ends her life rather than bring ruin and disgrace upon him.

Duke Worne, whose work as the "heavy" in "John Ermine of the Yellowstone" is said to be of real power, is cast for leading role in the present story, and Ford will play the villain's part. Mae Gaston, Beatrice Van and William T. Horne will appear in the supporting cast.

"Polly of the Circus" Is Finished

That Is, All but the Selection of Six to Eight Thousand Feet from the Eighty Thousand Now Contained in Goldwyn Spectacle.

SAVE for the quaint Everett Shinn village that stood baking in the sun, the externals of Margaret Mayo's famous drama "Polly of the Circus," starring Mae Marsh, have been wiped from the face of the earth, but inside the Goldwyn Studios at Fort Lee there are 80,000 feet of film that are to be cut, assembled and released on September 9. With "Polly of the Circus," by Margaret Mayo, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation makes its formal bow to the world of cinema art.

The high-water mark in elaborate and spectacular production within the metropolitan district has been reached in the staging of "Polly of the Circus." It took ten weeks of photography, by day and night, in addition to months of preparatory effort to complete this production. In it are nine separate photo-spectacle scenes which will make this classic of the big tops stand out among its contemporary field for magnitude alone. There were, in total, 1,164 scenes made, with an average of five takes to each scene. From the 89,000 feet of film that have been sent to the laboratories from six to eight thousand feet finally will be selected.

Charles Thomas Horan and his corps of assistants who directed "Polly" lived in the Goldwyn studios during the last five weeks of its production. They slept and ate there and often worked until daybreak on the circus scenes made under the "big tops," many of which were photographed at night. Herbert Messmore and staff that supervised the art direction of the picture were at Horan's side during this long grind.

Four small New Jersey cities figured in the play. At Hohokus a race track was chartered and with a grandstand filled with "extras" a horse race with a field of seven thoroughbreds was run. In Englewood the circus parade was held, and it took the greater part of two days for this circus pageant to be photographed. In Kirksville scenes were made showing the early morning arrival of a circus in a small city, as well as the departure at night. On the lot in Fort Lee the immense canvas was spread and the circus performance proper photographed. Here also was built the village that Everett Shinn designed and which in point of size actually occupied more than two square city blocks.

In the arrangement of lighting and artistic embellishment George W. Hill, head cameraman, and his staff have turned out new effects, prominent among which is an episode in the story that is told entirely in photographic-silhouette. Part of the plot action was devised by Miss Mayo herself calls for a fire in which the circus is burned, and to accomplish the desired effect a section of the "big top" was in reality fired and the ensuing stampede of animals and spectators photographed. In this scene entire sections of occupied bleacher seats are seen to fall.

Mae Marsh, the heroine of "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance," and now linked with Goldwyn Pictures by a long-time contract, accomplished prodigies of work during the filming of "Polly." For days at a stretch she worked fourteen and fifteen hours a day, and to the amazement of her directors she stood the strain better than they.

The selection of "Polly of the Circus" as the inaugural Goldwyn production is particularly felicitious. It is the work of Miss Margaret Mayo, a member of Goldwyn's advisory board. It again brings before the public wistful little Mae Marsh. It is a story internationally known on the dramatic stage, and the scenic settings in it lend themselves admirably to the technical and artistic facilities that have been developed by Goldwyn. Edgar Selwyn also has been one of the closest followers of this drama during the period of its production.

HEARST-PATHE NEWS NO. 62 AN EXCEPTIONAL NUMBER.

"A great number" is the way the Pathe film committee expressed it after seeting the Hearst-Pathe News No. 62, released August 1. In this number are scenes from San Francisco, Leon Springs, Texas, Toronto, Chicago, the battle front in France, Greece, Los Angeles, New York City, etc., and all of them interesting.

Naturally war subjects predominate. Of extraordinary interest are views of Capt. Guynemer, the French aviator extraordinary, who has brought down 45 German aeroplanes. Capt. Guynemer is shown receiving the "Legion of Honor" rosette while thousands of war-worn troops parade in his honor.

In view of the recent discussion as to whether the Allied troops will remain in Greece the scenes showing the landing of thousands of French and English soldiers at the Piraeus, Athens, are of timely interest.

Thousands of newly enlisted American soldiers are pictured at a baseball game between two of their own teams. Uncle Sam's officers do not believe in all work and no play for their charges. Other scenes show the harvesting of California's $2,000,000 apricot crop, swimming races in Chicago, the destruction wrought by the Germans in the occupied territory in France, the launching of four submarine defiers at once in Toronto, Canada, etc.

"The Mainspring" First Falcon Feature

Thrill Story by Louis Joseph Vance, with Henry King Featured, Begins New General Film Releases.

AS THE first considerable addition to its product, General Film begins releasing the Falcon Features, four-reel dramas, on August 17. The Falcon Features are being presented with strength of story as the foundation of their merit. However, groups of noted stars will be featured in the various releases. These include Henry King, Ruth Roland, Margaret Landis, Philo McCullough, William Conklin, Vola Vale, Jack Vosburgh, Ethel Ritchie, Kathleen Kirkham, Hell Hardin, R. Henry Grey, Monroe Salisbury and Daniel Gilfether. New releases will be made weekly. Each Falcon Feature will be by a well-known author and will have stood the test of magazine publication before screening. Every Falcon Feature will be an individual production, and each will have different stars. Although all the stories will be dramas, the atmosphere will vary. In some of the stories adventure will be the main theme, in others romance, in others mystery.

Scene from "The Mainspring" (General Film).

Adventure, including a host of thrills, characterizes the first release announced by General Film. It is "The Mainspring," with Henry King as featured lead, that begins the Falcon offerings August 17. This is a picturization of Louis Joseph Vance's virile story, "The Mainspring," which was published in the Popular Magazine.

The narrative of "The Mainspring" grows in interest from the beginning. It relates to the fortunes of Ned Gillett, whose father, a banker, slays himself after speculating with trust funds. This tragedy interrupts the engagement of Ned to Frances Hardor, and he slips away to begin life over again in the West. There the story develops. Tramping about, he is thrown in with a typical old miner, whom he manages to befriend. The first thrill is when Ned whips a western bully with his bare fists. The next thrill comes when the defeated antagonist tries to kill both Ned and the miner by dragging their shack down the mountainside with horse and lariat. Ned, escaping death, goes to Travers City, where the old man had an abandoned shaft, later called "The Mainspring." Ned files upon this in time to secure it before his old enemy can do so. His fiance's brother from the East is enticed into buying it by the sharpers, however, and in a dramatic scene Ned forces restitution of the money. He meets his sweetheart pouting at his abrupt departure from the East, and she will not speak to him. However, the brother is grateful and backs Ned in the operation of the mine, which turns out a success. In a spectacular mine fire Ned saves his former sweetheart and her brother and the latter's fiance, after which follows a pitched battle with striking miners led by the hero's Nemesis, the outcome of which is a final victory in war and love for Ned.

The picture was directed by Henry King and produced under the supervision of H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer. The heroine is played by Ethel Peprell, one of the most appealing of the younger leads. Bert Ensminger is the "heavy" and other members of the cast are Charles Blaisdell, J. Cullen Landis and Arma Jacobsen.

PLANS FOR WEBER PICTURE NOT DECIDED.

An announcement was recently made in the trade press to the effect that Lois Weber would soon begin the film production of Mary Roberts Rinehart's novel, "K," for release under a special arrangement with Universal. Since starting work upon the book, Lois Weber is undecided whether to market "K" as a special state rights feature or as one of the Lois Weber Productions, as originally announced. Previous announcements regarding its distribution were given out somewhat prematurely, and will be subject to such change as Lois Weber may consider most desirable.

Essanay Meeting Editorial Necessities

Striving to Give Exclusive Matter to Trade and Metropolitan Publications.

A STEADY and consistent improvement in the publicity material issued by certain of the leading producers has been apparent for some time. The requirements of newspapers and exhibitors have evidently received more consideration than in the past. Formerly, as one prominent exhibitor recently said, "Too much space has been devoted in the past to the personal and not enough to the business end of this industry."

A concern which has been adhering strictly to the suggestions made by photoplay editors and users of its pictures is the Essanay company. As a result they are daily receiving letters of commendation on the material which they are issuing.

One of the most important steps taken is that of sending out exclusive from time to time to the various trade publications, as well as giving the metropolitan newspapers a pre-release service on all publicity. By allowing only one paper in each town to handle these stories there is no danger of conflicting stories appearing. Many photoplay editors lack the time to rewrite every item used in their columns, and for that reason hesitate about using copy which might appear in precisely the same form in a rival publication.

To assist every exhibitor using Essanay subjects has been another effort which may now be said to have been accomplished. A gradual revision of form has been taking place for several months in the bi-monthly publication, the Essanay News, until now it is a snappy, newsy sheet, sub divided into departments which solve the difficulty of every one who may be interested in the exploitation of Essanay features.

CASTING FOR NEW PARALTA PLAY.

The casting director for Paralta Plays, David M. Hartford, has engaged the principal actors who are to support Bessie Barriscale in her next Paralta production, "Madame Who." Ed. Coxen, who played the strong character of John Cafferty, the derelict, in support of J. Warren Kerrigan in "A Man's Man," is to act the leading man's role, "John Armitage." Howard Hickman will play the heavy part of "Henry Morgan." Mr. Hickman's ability to play a wide range of characters is well known. His last part was "Lafe Grandoken," the old cobbler, in "Rose O'Paradise." Another important engagement for this production is that sterling old star Joseph J. Dowling, who will play "Parson John" Kennedy.

"THE MIDNIGHT MAN" (Butterfly).

Jack Mulhall is the star of "The Midnight Man," the Butterfly picture scheduled for release August 13. Written by Bess Meredyth and Tom Gibson and produced by Elmer Clifton, this feature deals with the adventures that befall the inventive son of a safe manufacturer. Jack Mulhall takes the part of Bob Moore, whose father is desirous of forming a business consolidation with John Hardin, a rival manufacturer of safes, much against the wishes of Bob. The reason for Bob's objection resides in the fact that he had worked day and night to construct a safe that cannot be opened. Although the young man has the utmost contempt for the resisting qualities of the Hardin treasure-chest, he is nevertheless strong for the daughter of the household. Irene Hardin reciprocates Bob's interest much to her father's chagrin. A three-cornered battle of wits ensues, unusual complications arising when Bob befriends a safe-cracker, hoping to learn some professional secrets with which to confound his finacee's obdurate father. The unexpected occurs, however, when the lure of Irene's necklace proves too much for Bob's protege. The novel manner in which things are finally straightened out provides the chief interest in a plot with several turns. Jack Mulhall provides his usual breezy characterization. He is supported by Ann Kroman, Hal Wilson, Wilbur Higby, Al McQuarrie and Uard Lamont.

Scene from "The Midnight Man" (Butterfly).

"IRIS" (Pathe-Gold Rooster).

"Iris," probably the greatest play ever written by the Dean of the English speaking drama, Sir Arthur Wing Pinero, has been produced in films and will be released by Pathe as a five-reel Gold Rooster play on August 26.

The title role is played by Miss Alma Taylor, a beautiful young English star, who in point of popularity corresponds to Mary Pickford. Miss Taylor is the highest salaried English artist. She has appeared in "Little Miss Nobody" and other hits on the stage and she scored a distinct success in the David Copperfield film produced by Hepworth and shown in America.

The part of Maldanado is played by Henry Ainly, without question England's greatest actor today. Mr. Ainly has starred for four years in his own productions at the Hay Market theater. His reputation in England is very similar to that of Leo Deitrichstein in this country. Mr. Ainly was seen here in support of Maude Adams and his biggest London successes were Leo Deitrichstein's "The Great Lover" and "The Great Adventure." In "Iris" his role is that of the Portuguese millionaire who almost brings about the ruin of the beautiful heroine.

The role of the hero is in the capable hands of Mr. Stuart Rome. Mr. Rome is one of the best known of the younger English leading men. It is interesting in this connection to know that he is now at the front.

"THE MANXMAN" AT THE CRITERION.

Final arrangements have just been completed for the showing of George Loane Tucker's photodramatic version of Hall Caine's masterpiece, "The Manxman," at the Criterion theater, beginning August 13.

"The Manxman" was produced on the tiny Island of Man, which lies almost in the center of the Irish Sea, with a good outlook upon Ireland, England and Wales, from the top of its highest mountain, Snaefel, on a clear day. More than a year was spent by Mr. Tucker and his company of players,, camera men, etc., often joined by Hall Caine himself, on the Isle of Man, in the production of "The Manxman." For nearly six months little actual photographing was done, the time being spent in the study of the characteristics, the quaintnesses, and the environmental and the psychological differences of the natives, who are distinctive in a great many ways from the natives either of England, Scotland or Ireland. In addition to the gripping interest of Mr. Caine's story, "The Manxman" stands forth as a work of ethnological worth. The film is hailed as the most stupendous camera creation since "The Birth of a Nation."

In the cast of "The Manxman" are Fred Groves as Pete, Henry Ainley as Philip, and Elizabeth Risdon as Kate, and a score of well-known English actors and actresses in minor roles, as well as 9,000 Manxmen.

83 SETS IN "THE FALL OF THE ROMANOFFS."

In staging "The Fall of the Romanoffs," which is now nearing completion, Herbert Brenon has used mainly interior scenes. All of them have been erected in his studio on Hudson Heights, where dozens of workmen are employed daily preparing one set right after another. Special workmen who are skilled in the making of sets for moving picture work and in the knowledge of things Russian, have been selected.

Eighty-three separate sets have been built, varying from replicas of rooms of state in the Czar's palace to simple little peasant's huts in country districts. Of the former, four cover the entire stage, and are bigger in scope than any Mr. Brenon has had in his former productions.

Besides these Mr. Brenon has had two complete villages reproduced. One typical of many little Russian villages, the other typically Jewish. The little villages are complete in every detail from the humble cottages wherein the peasants dwell to the well from which they draw their supply of water.

A tank that had to be used in one of the scenes has been a source of great joy to Mr. Brenon's staff during the hot weather, for at the end of a day's work they would don their bathing suits and plunge in for a welcome swim!

BOBBY BUMPS' AMUSEMENT PARK.

Little Bobby Bumps is here again. At this time he introduces to us an amusement park which certainly is very unusual. He turns the whole house into this amusement park, and Goldie, the colored cook, is very much upset indeed, especially when she finds her washtub being used as a seashore resort. He teaches the little pup all different kinds of tricks, and they shoot loop-the-loop with Goldie after them. Goldie goes through the most bumpy experiences trying to catch Bobby and his pup, and one feels sorry for her. As usual, she gets even with him, at this time through a very heroic jump lands on them and almost crushes them to death.

Bobby realizing that Goldie has the best of him, asks woefully what she is going to do to him. Goldie just smiles and we leave it for you to find out what she says. This is one of the funniest cartoons ever put out and will appear in the 79th release of Paramount-Bray-Pictographs.

Pathe Program

Four Stars Scheduled for Appearance in Feature Released for Week August 19.

GLADYS HULETTE, Pearl White, Ruth Roland, and "Lonesome Luke" are the four stars announced to appear on Pathe's program for the week of August 19, 1917.

Gladys Hulette is seen, following her recent successes, in "Miss Nobody," a five-reel Gold Rooster play produced by Astra under the direction of William Parke, and written by Howard T. Young. From the standpoint of the popular appeal, "Miss Nobody" is one of the strongest five-reel pictures ever produced. It is the kind of story that will appeal deeply to the public. It has been beautifully produced under the direction of that master-artist, William Parke, and it is a feature for the best house and the best class of audience.

Pearl White appears in the 7th episode of "The Fatal Ring" serial entitled "The Signal Lantern," produced by Astra under the direction of George B. Seitz and written by Fred Jackson and Bertram Millhauser. Another thrilling crisis faces Pearl White in this chapter. She must recover the diamond or Tom Carlton is to be killed. The Spider, a mysterious, crooked little man who rules his henchmen with a rod of iron, comes to her aid. Pearl and the Spider succeed in securing the diamond, but the episode ends when Carslake takes out his watch and gives Pearl five seconds to hand over the diamond. As he covers Pearl with his gun he counts.

Ruth Roland stars in the 15th episode of "The Neglected Wife" serial. The title of this is "The Supreme Sacrifice." It is written by Will M. Ritchey. This is the fifteenth and last episode of the great heart-throb serial which scored such a success. Horace Kennedy learns of the unselfish devotion of his wife, and pleads with her to return to him. She declares that she is going on a long trip alone, and that in the meantime he must prove that he is climbing up the ladder again, and that he really wants her love. When he has given this proof she will return. Norwood and Margaret are married. Mary on her trip longs for Kennedy, while he grimly works to regain his self-respect and his wife.

Lonesome Luke is seen in another two-reel laugh festival entitled "Lonesome Luke—Mechanic," produced by Rolin under the direction of Hal Roach. With only a hammer Luke can soon take the mote out of any motor, and as the handy man around a garage he shows himself to be some fixer, while Snub has to have a lot of tools to do his work too. We have with us also Miss Speedboy, played by Bebe Daniels, and Bud Jamison as the garage owner adds the finishing touch. The climax comes when the garage catches on fire, and Luke puts it out by pouring all over it the gasoline which he sells at $1 a drop. "It is better to fight fire with than water itself," says he.

This is one of the most beautiful scenics ever made, showing wonderful scenes in the vicinity of historic Pike's Peak, Colorado. There are natural parks, canyons and valleys, bridges arching the creek which flows through the verdure clad ravines, and the famous Royal Gorge of the Arkansas River.

An International Cartoon and Scenic split reel release and Hearst Pathe News Nos. 68 and 69 complete an unusually strong program.

BOSTON AND PHILADELPHIA SEE GOLDWYNS.

Simultaneous trade showings were held last week of Goldwyn Pictures in Philadelphia and Boston, and the same scenes of enthusiasm that marked the initial presentation in Chicago was repeated.

Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, and Alfred Weiss, vice-president, were in charge of the Boston showing, which was held in the morning at the Fenway theater, which had been obtained by Harry F. Campbell, manager of Goldwyn's Boston offices. "Baby Mine," Margaret Mayo's splendid farce comedy, was the first picture that won the applause of the Boston audience. In this production Madge Kennedy makes her debut on the screen. After a luncheon the hundreds of exhibitors present from all over New England saw Maxine Elliott in "Fighting Odds," a powerful new play by Roi Cooper Megrue and Irvin S. Cobb.

The Philadelphia showing was held in the Palace theater on Market street on what, at that time, was the hottest night of the year, the picture starting at 11:15 p. m., and holding the audience of exhibitors from the entire Philadelphia district until 1 a. m. The showing was under the auspices of Stanley V. Mastbaum, George T. Ames, manager of Goldwyn's Philadelphia offices, and F. B. Warren, one of the Goldwyn vice-presidents from New York.

Among the important contracts announced by Goldwyn this week is the Boston theater, owned by the Keith interests in Boston. This gives Goldwyn its first run in the Hub on Washington street, in the very heart of the downtown district.

Samuel Baxter's Isis theater, Denver, has signed for the Goldwyn productions, which gives them an advantageous setting in Colorado's chief city.

HAROLD LOCKWOOD IN "UNDER HANDICAP."

Harold Lockwood in "Under Handicap," a western drama picturized from the novel by Jackson Gregory, and filmed in California and Arizona under the direction of F. J. Balshofer, is announced as the next Metro-Yorke release, ready for showing in August. This feature, which is Harold Lockwood's first western photoplay under the Metro banner, furnishes contrast in subject matter to the pictures preceding it, "The Haunted Pajamas" and "The Hidden Spring," and also to "Paradise Garden," the society drama which is now under production.

Scene from "Under Handicap" (Metro).

The pictures is the eleventh of the novel-picturizations produced by Balshofer for Metro release, and the third of those in which Lockwood is the single featured star. Harold Lockwood plays the part of Greek Conniston, the scion of wealth, who, after disinheritance, makes good by putting through a reclamation project in the West. The treatment of the theme by Jackson Gregory, adhered to in the adaptation, is marked by new and thoroughly dramatic developments. Supporting Harold Lockwood are Anna Little, playing the daughter of John Crawford, owner of the Half Moon ranch and promoter of the irrigation enterprise, portrayed by W. H. Bainbridge; Lester Cuneo, as Brayley, the ranch foreman who fights Conniston in the early part of the story and later becomes his friend and ally; William Clifford as Roger Hapgood, companion to Conniston in his idle days and later a contemptible rival, and James Youngdeer, as Lonesome Pete, an interesting cowboy characterization.

One of the strong episodes in the story is the fight between Conniston and Brayley. When Conniston, after being thrown several times, conquers Cyclone, the worst bucking horse of the range, Brayley, who has beaten the young man brutally on his first appearance at the ranch, sneers at Conniston's achievement. Conniston has determined to lick the bullying foreman, and proceeds to do this, alone in the corral with the bucking horse which he has just mastered. This scene, photographed in a ranch corral after Lockwood had ridden a bucking horse brought in from the range where the picture was made, is declared to be the most spirited and realistic fight among those which Lockwood and Cuneo have figured in recent pictures.

MARY McALISTER TO BE SEEN IN "PANTS."

Essanay is filming little Mary McAlister, its child star, in a five-part comedy-drama, the title of which is "Pants." Little Mary went over big at the Chicago convention, never failing to get a good hand from the crowds when she was introduced. She recently was appointed an honorary sergeant in the regular army and attracted much attention also in the Army booth at the Coliseum, where, garbed in her diminutive uniform, she solicited recruits for Uncle Sam's fighting forces.

Although only six years old, she has played important roles in many of Essanay's productions. Among these were Walthall's "Little Shoes," "On Trial," the first subject shown by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, and others. She is now being featured in "Do Children Count?" a series of short pictures presenting the problems growing out of the rearing of children, which is reported to be enjoying a highly satisfactory run.

"Pants" will be the first feature production in which the little actress takes the leading role. However, President Spoor of Essanay believes her past successes have created a demand for her in something bigger, and that her work deserves the better chance.

In the supporting company are John Cossar, Arthur Metcalf, Mary Parkin, Arthur Keoppe, Marion Skinner, as well as numerous children.

The picture will have a screen time, approximately, of sixty-five minutes. K-E-S-E will handle the film, the release date being September 10.

Selig Releases for August 13

Several Excellent Subjects Scheduled for the Week's General Film Program.

FOR the week beginning Monday, August 13, the Selig Company announces some interesting releases. For example, on Monday, August 13, "The Sole Survivor," a two-reel drama of Central American jungles, is released. "The Sole Survivor" was written by James Oliver Curwood and features winsome Bessie Eyton, supported by an all-star cast. "Her Heart's Desire" is the title of the one-reel drama released by Selig in General Film service on Saturday, August 18. Bessie Eyton is again featured in this beautiful production, one of the few one-reel film dramas directed by Colin Campbell.

Scene from "The Sole Survivor" (Selig).

"Between Man and Beast" is the title of the Selig two-reel jungle drama released by Selig in General Film service on Monday, August 20. Again is pretty Bessie Eyton exploited in a drama of thrills. One sensational episode is where a gigantic ape captured and cares of a little child. "Her Salvation" is the title of the Selig one-reel release for Saturday, August 25, in which Bessie Eyton is again starred in a drama having to do with the "submerged tenth."

William N. Selig calls especial attention to the fact that his very best stars, very best writers and very best directors are now contributing to General Film releases. Colin Campbell, responsible for the direction of such great film dramas as "The Garden Of Allah," "The Crisis," etc., directs one or more of the above described film productions. Bessie Eyton of "The Crisis" fame, Eugenie Besserer, Wheeler Oakman, Charles Clary, Thomas Santschi, Kathlyn Williams and other well-known stars appear in General Film service through the medium of Selig pictures. There is also a dearth of jungle dramas, and the Selig Company is endeavoring to supply the prevalent demand for these thrillers.

Brady Makes a "Discovery"

ONE of the undeniable fascinations of the motion picture business," said William A. Brady, director-general of World Pictures, "is the element of surprise which is so frequently in evidence that nobody engaged in this industry need complain of monotony or feel that nothing is necessary but to float with the tide.

"The surprise which attracts the attention of World executives at this particular moment is exceedingly agreeable. Everybody familiar with any branch of theatrical amusements is of course aware that the hot weather months are detrimental—often disastrous. This is but a matter of course, for nobody with any idea of physical comfort could be expected to sit in a hot audience room for any length of time to observe any ordinary attraction.

"This is the annual condition which closes most 'regular' theaters altogether, and makes it hard for the managers of those motion picture houses remaining open to make both ends meet. The manufacturer of photoplays in turn looks for a marked shrinkage in the volume of his business with the approach of the heated term—which is 'natural cards,' as the sporting element would say.

"It may be readily imagined that when we in the World concern found there was no shrinkage at all in our gross output, and an actual gain in some quarters over the best part of the year, we were shaken completely out of any complacency or lassitude that might have been imposed upon us by the thermometer.

"In the New York exchange, for example, the business for the week ending July 14 broke every record of this branch for a period of similar duration, Winter or Summer, from the very beginning of World Film Corporation activities.

"In some of our other exchanges also an unexpected growth was noted, while in none was the looked-for slump recorded.

"Seeking to account for this unforeseen state of affairs—for it is well to analyze every step forward as well as each slip back—we have reached the conclusion that our policy of dependable pictures and loyalty to the program system are the principal things that count.

"These pictures are rendered possible by a studio efficiency which I believe to be unequaled anywhere. We do not hurry in the completion of our productions, but our procedure is systematized to a degree so closely approaching perfection that there is practically no wastage of time, money or energy.

"In our studio it is a very infrequent occurrence that a group of players has to wait for a set, or a set to wait for the players. When one of our stars completes a play, another is usually ready for him or her to plunge into on schedule time. If there is any 'stalling' in the movement of our machinery it is fraught with peril to its promoters. There is no room for cheaters in our scheme of action.

"Similarly, at the business end of World Pictures an efficiency basis has been reached which certainly is not exceeded anywhere else, if indeed it has a single parallel. The World selling force is a body that challenges comparison—and, having the regular pictures at regular intervals, this force has built up a regular clientele of satisfied exhibitors who know what they are going to get, when they will get it, and what their patrons will think of it."

Jackie Saunders Heads Mutual Program

Appears in "Bab the Fixer" for Week of August 13—Other Good Subjects.

JACKIE SAUNDERS in "Bab the Fixer," sixth of her series of star productions for Mutual, tops the Mutual release schedule for the week of August 13. "Bab the Fixer" was produced by E. D. Horkheimer, under the direction of Sherwood MacDonald, from the story by Lee Arthur in which Miss Saunders herself collaborated. The production is a five-reel drama, laid principally on a western ranch, but the first of the first act is laid in Wall Street, and there are a few scenes in a Fifth avenue finishing school. "Bab the Fixer" is the sixth of her series of star productions for Mutual, the others of the list being: "Sunny Jane," "The Wildcat," "The Checkmate," "A Bit of Kindling" and "Betty Be Good." Each one of the series has been a box office success.

The Mutual schedule for the week of August 13 includes two comedies, "The Widow's Might," a one-reel La Salle, and "Beach Nuts," a one-reel Cub starring George Ovey. "The Widow's Might" is based on a conspiracy to acquire the fortune of a stingy old woman, by fair means or foul, marriage being selected as the most effective. George Ovey disports himself amid a bevy of beautiful girls at the seashore in "Beach Nuts," gets into their dressing room, where all varieties of complications ensue, and closes his laugh-making journey by smashing his flivver into a gasoline filling station.

Reel Life No. 68, the weekly screen magazine, which is released August 16, shows the work of the Y. M. C. A. in various sections of the world, pictures the various phases of military training through which army recruits are placed, and contains as the animated drawing from life, "The Absent-Minded Dentist."

Mutual Tours Around the World No. 41, released August 14, takes the audience through southern Corsica, down the Houyoux river in Belgium and thence to picturesque Tripoli.

Mutual Weekly, the one reel of current events, released August 15, carries the latest news of importance up to within a few hours of its release. The Weekly is made up of pictures which in many instances beat the newspaper illustrations of big events.

PATHE GETS FILM PAST BLOCKADE.

Prints of a very remarkable one-reel picture which was produced in France and which successfully ran the submarine blockade have been sent to Pathe Exchange.

The film is entitled "The Latest French Creations," and as an example of the way France still maintains her position in the world of fashion even in the fourth year of the greatest war in history the film is one which the live exhibitor can present in a way that will give him an opportunity to demonstrate his ability as a showman.

The picture shows a collection of very beautiful gowns made by the leading Parisian Modiste and worn by the most beautiful models in France. The names of the makers—names that mean everything worth having to every woman—are in the titles, and this in itself is a feature that assures the picture's pleasing power.

Pathe managers are selecting the best exhibitors in each town to give this picture a presentation that will afford it an opportunity to demonstrate its drawing power. They are now ready to receive applications for bookings.

CONGRATULATIONS FOLLOW NORMAND ENGAGEMENT.

A deluge of congratulatory letters and telegrams has followed the announcement that Mabel Normand will begin production under the direction of Goldwyn Pictures.

In answer to the question as to the kind of literary materials to be furnished for Miss Normand, President Samuel Goldfish said the advisory board has now under consideration a half dozen light comedies by well-known authors that are suited to Miss Normand's faculty for comic and artistic expression.

A General Film Week

JUST what progress has been made by General Film in organizing product for distribution can be gained by a review of current week's releases. It is stated by General Film that only a beginning has been made, and that the next six weeks will see some important announcements of additions to the existing list of regular releases. By the time various plans are complete, it is predicted, exhibitors will be booking more entire shows from General Film product. The purveying of four-reel features meets an insistent demand, and makes it more possible than ever for an exhibitor to do all his shopping under one roof when he goes out after complete bills for his best dates. Here is one week's product appearing concurrently:

"The Mainspring," four-reel Falcon Feature, a dramatic adventure, from the story by Louis Joseph Vance in Popular Magazine, featuring Henry King. This is an adventure story full of thrills, with a strong love motive. It was directed by Mr. King and supervised by H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer.

"Discounters of Money," nineteenth of the two-reel O. Henry Broadway Star Features. It is comedy-drama based entirely upon the idealistic young love that scorns wealth. Carleton King and Nell Spencer are featured.

"Star Dust," one of the third series of Black Cat features from Essanay, featuring Marguerite Clayton. It is a clever comedy-drama, with the human element mixed with the humorous.

"An Order of the Court," a two-reel episode from "The Further Adventures of Stingaree" (Kalem), featuring True Boardman as the antipodean outlaw who succors the distressed

"A Man, a Girl and a Lion," one of the exciting animal pictures from Selig. This two-reel offering features Kathlyn Williams and Thomas Santschi, and a full grown African lion furnishes the thrills.

"Her Perilous Ride," a one-reel Selig offering, brings more thrills, with fighting savages, in another jungle atmosphere Bessie Eyton, who is featured, does an ostrich riding stunt as part of the story.

A Johnny and Emma Ray comedy, one reel, features the little comedian and his majestic spouse in "A Bathtub Marriage," another of their characteristic productions, in this series.

"Those Terrible Telegrams," a Sparkle comedy, one reel; a high-class, humorous offering from the Jaxon Film Corporation, this subject being the third of the second series of six.

"Tough Luck," a Jaxon comedy, the third of a second series of six; a ludicrous romp throughout.

The Selig World Library No. 16 from the educational series issued weekly by the Selig Polyscope Company, containing pictures of travel and of animal life and other subjects of general interest.

New product now being signed up will provide every desirable shade of atmosphere in subjects to supplement those already represented.

"TURN OF A CARD" (Paralta).

J. Warren Kerrigan and his company are actively at work on the production of the second vehicle in which he will make his appearance under the auspices of Paralta Plays. The subject is a comedy-drama of the West and East called "Turn of a Card." It was written by Frederick Chapin and prepared for the screen by Tom J. Geraghty.

The new play concerns the adventures of Jimmy Montgomery Farrell, a college youth who goes West and there becomes involved in a series of exciting experiences and a romance with a pretty girl. The part is said to be decidedly to Kerrigan's liking, fitting his capabilities as snugly as did "A Man's Man," the Peter B. Kyne novel which will be his first release.

Kerrigan's leading woman is Lois Wilson, who plays "Cynthia Burdette." Miss Wilson is the beauty who appeared opposite Kerrigan in "A Man's Man." She is declared to be just as happily cast in the new subject.

The remainder of the supporting cast is headed by Eugene Pallette as Eddie Barrett; "Tiny" Morgan as Big Ed Murphy; David M. Hartford as Ace-High Burdette; Roy Laidlaw as Jarvis; Eleanor Crow as Millie Jarvis; Wallace Worsley as Mr. Carlton; Albert Cody as Slavin; Tom Bates at Finnegan, and Janice Vincent as Mrs. Phelps.

The production is being directed by Oscar Apfel and photographed by L. Guy Wilky.

"THE LESSON" TO BE RELEASED IMMEDIATELY.

There will be no pre-release showing of "The Lesson," the first of the Constance Talmadge Selznick-Pictures, as previously announced. It was intended to show this picture at the Broadway theater the week of August 5, but "The Lone Wolf" run has been so successful that it will be continued, and "The Lesson" will be released immediately.

The only public showing of the picture was at a Red Cross benefit at the Hotel Nassau, Long Beach, Sunday evening, July 29, where it was projected before a large audience of the most critical kind, being composed principally of professional folk. Nothing but the highest praise for the star, the story and the direction was heard.

MADGE EVANS AND LEW FIELDS IN WORLD PICTURES.

Little Madge Evans will be the co-star with Lew Fields in "The Corner Grocery," shortly to be published by World-Pictures Brady-Made. Many of Mr. Fields' most effective scenes are with the little orphan girl who finds a way into the affections of the gentle-hearted old store keeper of this comedy of the screen, with its remarkably skillful blending of broad humor and tender pathos.

Scene from "The Corner Grocery" (World).

It is said by those who have witnessed the early private showings of the picture that all the essential qualities of Adolph Phillip's speaking play have been preserved in the transition from stage to film.

In this case it is apparent that the photo version faces a long and happy career, inasmuch as "The Corner Grocery" in its original form ran for 1,007 performances in New York, establishing a record in serio-comic theatricals.

The appearance of little Madge as co-star with Mr. Fields is a reminder that the diminutive screen actress is a very much occupied young lady in these Summer days. Her first starring vehicle, "The Little Duchess," is the current offering of World Pictures, showing a child as the pivotal personage in a distinctly human drama people almost entirely by grown-ups.

The appearance with Mr. Fields will follow this publication after a brief interval, and not long afterward little Madge will play the entirely striking role of the child in "The Burglar."

Then will come the photoplay upon which the tiny Miss Evans is working at present, the tentative title of which is "When Carol Took The Subway." This may be changed. The picture is being directed by Harley Knoles, whose filming of "The Little Duchess" was uncommonly effective.

The most significant feature of the raising of Madge Evans to planetary magnitude in the motion picture firmament is that there is nothing juvenile about any of the plays excepting her own personality.

AMERICAN MAKES BIG FOREIGN CONTRACT.

What is said to be the biggest contract to supply serial and feature photoplays to Russia, Norway, Sweden and Denmark ever consummated, was signed this week in New York by R. R. Nehls, manager of the American Film Company, Inc., of Chicago, and representative of a large foreign distributing syndicate. The terms of the agreement call for an export of 60,000 feet of positive film per week, 3,000,000 a year, and involve the exchange of something over $200,000.

Coincidentally with the signing of the Russian and Scandinavian papers, Mr. Nehls arranged for the shipment of approximately 10,000 feet of serial and feature subjects weekly to China and Japan. This, together with recent contracts for Spain and Portugal, further clinches the American's strong position in the foreign motion picture field.

PATHE-COMBITONE OF THE PIKE'S PEAK COUNTRY.

"Near Pike's Peak, Colorado," the next Pathe-Combitone scenic, which was originally scheduled for release on August 19, has been postponed to a week later and is down for August 26. In its place on the program of August 19 is the split reel scenic "Along the Baltic, Sweden," and "Japan the Religious," the latter of which subject is in natural colors.

"Near Pike's Peak" is one of the very best of these excellent Pathe-Combitone subjects. It shows a section of marvellous beauty and at a time of the year when everyone's thoughts naturally turn to the mountains, with their snow-capped peaks and cool rushing streams.

"BABBLING TONGUES" (Ivan).

"Babbling Tongues," the big Ivan-Humphrey production, will be released August 13, at Loew's New York theater, Broadway and 45th street. It is booked for the entire Loew circuit.

Up to date the books of the Merit Film Corporation show 421 dates in the metropolitan district alone for this exceptional production. This, of course, includes the entire Loew circuit, the U. B. O. and the Exhibitors' Board of Trade, whose representatives have viewed the film and showed their approval of this Ivan super photoplay by booking it for runs of two days and more.

Scene from "Babbling Tongues" (Ivan).

Quite an auspicious audience of critics is going to be present on August 13, and, to use the words of William Humphrey, the director of this picture, "There is no fear of anything but praise for this subtle yet powerful drama."

Special advertising has been prepared. The 24-sheet especially is one of tremendous appeal. A special two-color postal card has been designed which ought to prove a business getter. Those watching any of the trade journals will be able to get an idea of the appearance of the card, for same will be the ad, reproduced to postal card size, printed in two colors, with but slight alteration.

"A RURAL CAESAR" (L-KO.)

In the L-Ko Comedy set for release through Universal exchanges, August 29, Phil Dunham figures as initiating his services to L-Ko as a director. He has in times past been one of the featured comedians in that series and, knowing the trick from both ends of the game, may be depended upon to give a good account of himself in his new venture. Lucille Hutton will be the featured player with Billy Bevan playing the name-role in "A Rural Caesar." This two-reeler will be followed September 5 by Myrtle Sterling in "From Ranch to Riches," directed by Vin Moore; Walter Stevens and Gladys Varden in "The Prop's Revenge," directed by Noel Smith, September 12, and "Vamping Reuben's Millions," with Katherine Young enacting the role of the comedy vampire. These subjects, as with all L-Ko's, were supervised in their production by General Director J. G. Blystone.

CHANGES IN BLUEBIRD DIRECTING STAFF.

Several changes are announced for Bluebird's staff of directors, carrying with them a transfer of stars and some shifts in the stock companies employed in producing attractions for the Bluebird program. Harry Solter, one of the pioneers in the industry, has taken the screen management of Ella Hall, succeeding Jack Conway, who finished his engagement with "The Charmer," set as the Bluebird for Aug. 27.

Joseph De Grasse, who brought Louise Lovely and Dorothy Phillips to Bluebirds, will hereafter direct Franklyn Farnum. Possibly the last Dorothy Phillips Bluebird Mr. De Grasse will produce is his screen version of Samuel Hopkins Adams' story, "Triumph," announced as Bluebird's Labor Day release. Ida May Park, who has been alternating with her husband, Mr. De Grasse, will continue as Miss Phillips' director.

Franklyn Farnum, who has been Bluebirding in conjunction with Brownie Vernon, will hereafter be a lone star under Mr. De Grasse's screen management. Miss Vernon will have Herbert Rawlinson as her co-star, with Elmer Clifton doing the directing. "It's Up to You" will be Mr. Farnum's first lone-star offering, while the Rawlinson-Vernon combination will present "Sky High."

Elsie Jane Wilson has become the second woman to create Bluebirds, and her first offering will be "Hidden Treasures," in which little Zoe Rae will be the star. Like Ida May Park, who assisted her husband in directing before assuming full command, Miss Wilson has worked with Rupert Julian, who is her husband, in preparing numerous Bluebirds of earlier vintage for the screen.

Mr. Julian will continue to co-star with Ruth Clifford, as well as directing his own features. This combination heads the "Bluebird Extraordinary" announcement for state right distribution, Labor Day, under the title of "Mother o' Mine," an attraction which will have Ruth La Fayette featured in the mother role. "The Face of Prentice Teller" will be their next programmed Bluebird.

WELL KNOWN ACTOR MAKES SCREEN DEBUT.

"Down to Earth," the Douglas Fairbanks play released by Artcraft August 12, has as a member of its cast Gustave Von Seyfertitz, one of the best-known actors of the American speaking stage, and noted also for his abilities as a stage director. Von Seyfertitz has always been distinguished by his excellent "character" impersonations, and it is a part of this sort which he has in "Down to Earth."

JACKIE SAUNDERS IN "BAB THE FIXER."

Jackie Saunders is a tomboy of an entirely new, but just as fascinating sort in "Bab the Fixer," a five-reel comedy drama produced by Horkheimer, and scheduled for release by the Mutual Film Corporation August 13. "Bab" is a harum-scarum daughter of quarreling parents and declines quite firmly to fall for her mother's social ambitions. There is a dash of Wall street and some of the wild west, with a touch of Fifth avenue finishing school in the production. Sherwood MacDonald, director of "Bab the Fixer," is a director of nation-wide fame, having handled several of the Saunders successes.

Scene from "Bab the Fixer" (Mutual).

Lee Arthur, the author, is a short story writer of some fame, having written several popular stories for Adventure and other magazines devoted to outdoor happenings. Mr. Arthur submitted his idea for "Bab the Fixer" to Miss Saunders several months ago, and later went into collaboration with her in preparation of the script.

Mack Drama Heads Universal Offerings

Releases for Week of August 13th Include Two Strong Dramas, Half a Dozen Comedies, and Novel News Features.

WILLARD MACK is the author of "A Wife's Suspicions," the Gold Seal drama which heads Universal's regular schedule of releases beginning August 14. This follows Jack Mulhall in "The Midnight Man," a Butterfly picture released Monday, August 13, under separate booking arrangements. The Mack play was adapted to the screen by Bess Meredyth and produced by George Sargent. Val Paul and Betty Schade are featured in the leading roles. The story has to do with the complications that arise when Mary Bradford surprises her husband in conversation with some ill-conditioned strangers who appear to be on familiar terms with him. There are many exciting moments in this lively drama, which reaches its climax with the kind of punch that Willard Mack has made famous.

"The Rushin' Dancers," a Nestor comedy, featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts, will be released on the same date. This is an uproarious burlesque of the classic dancing craze, and details the events that transpire when a dancing teacher opens a studio "for ladies only" in Cactus Flat. Much to the annoyance of the male members of the community, the studio monopolizes the attention of the wives, mothers and sweethearts to such an extent that an indignation meeting is held, and Bud Billings, impersonated by Eddie Lyons, and Bill Sellers, played by Lee Moran, are appointed to devise ways and means of breaking up the terpsichorean revels of the gentler sex. The method pursued is both novel and efficacious. Lyons and Moran quite outdo themselves in mirth-provoking antics. The comedy was written by C. G. Bryden and produced by L. V. Chaudet.

"Rough Stuff," a two-reel L-Ko Komedy featuring Dan Russell and Gladys Varden, will head the releases for Wednesday, August 15. Directed by Noel Smith under the supervision of J. B. Blystone, this carefree tale tells of the many laughable events that happened simultaneously with the opening of a fashion pageant in the hotel run by Mrs. Doehound and her flirtatious husband.

The 85th issue of the Universal Animated Weekly will also be released on the same date.

Harry Carey will be the star of the dramatic feature issued the following day, Thursday, August 16. The title of Carey's vehicle will be "Cheyenne's Pal." It is a colorful and swiftly-moving little drama of the horse and cattle country, written by Jack Ford and Charles J. Wilson, Jr., and produced by Jack Ford. Gertrude Aster and Jim Corey have leading parts, and Cactus Peter, Carey's sturdy cow-pony, plays a very effective part in the working out of the story.

"Out Again, In Again," a Joker comedy featuring William Franey, will appear on the same day. This unusual commentary on prison life was written by Tom Gibson and produced by William Beaudine. It tells of the misadventures that befell Prisoner No. 13, who is elected to be the guest of honor at his own execution. Harry Mann, Eileen Roberts and Milburn Moranti fill the other roles in support of Franey.

"The Brass Girl," a two-reel Victor comedy featuring Matt Moore and Jane Gail, is the offering for Friday, August 17. Burk Symon as author and Matt Moore as producer are responsible for this version of the many strange situations that make life in a big city apartment house so diverting. The 32nd number of the Universal Screen Magazine will be released August 17.

Universal Current Events, which has shown a remarkable increase in popularity of late, will appear in its 14th issue on Saturday, August 18, together with a Joker comedy featuring Gale Henry, entitled "Back to the Kitchen," Powers' Educational devoted to "Algeria Old and New," and a Powers' comic cartoon, "Doing His Bit."

During the week the 8th episode of "The Gray Ghost," Universal's big mystery serial, adapted from Arthur Somers Roche's novel, will be released outside Greater New York. This will be entitled "The Double Floor," and features Emory Johnson, Priscilla Dean, Harry Carter and Eddie Polo.

SANGER PICTURES PLAYS IN RECEIVER'S HANDS.

John B. Johnston, an attorney of 31 Nassau street, is in charge of the business of the Sanger Picture Plays Corporation, following his appointment as receiver of the film company's affairs by Judge Manton in the United States District Court.

Involuntary proceedings in bankruptcy were instituted against the corporation by David Welch, representing the following creditors: William H. Rolston, a creditor on note claims aggregating $7,500; L. H. Biglow, Inc., a creditor for $97, and F. J. Kloes, on a claim of $10. The petitioning creditors alleged that the corporation is insolvent and that the company has paid the claims of certain creditors with intent to prefer those creditors over others.

The liabilities of the corporation are said to be over $50,000, exclusive of a liability on a long term lease of the studio at Park avenue and 134th street amounting to $112,000, and the assets are considered of problematical value unless the business is reorganized and continued.

Receiver Johnston is making an effort to rehabilitate the affairs of the film company and place the business on a paying basis.

New Pathe Serial

PATHE will release on September 2 "The Seven Pearls," a serial of thrills featuring Mollie King, Creighton Hale and Leon Bary. Mollie King and Leon Bary have made money for the exhibitors and have won the love of motion picture audiences by their work in "The Mystery of the Double Cross," while Creighton Hale is well known for his admirable portrayal of "The Laughing Mask" in "The Iron Claw."

The story, "The Seven Pearls," is from the pen of Charles Goddard, who also is responsible for the scenarios, and revolves around what happens to Ilma, played by Mollie King, an American girl. She is the foster-daughter of Mustapha Bey, a high Turkish official, and seeks to regain seven priceless pearls which were stolen from her father by an American after the pearls had been given into Mustapha Bey's care by the Sultan, and Ilma is given the choice of seeing her father beheaded, of herself entering the Sultan's harem, or of recovering the pearls within six months. She chooses to go in quest of the pearls, but the Sultan in the meantime is in doubt whether he would rather have the seven inanimate pearls for his treasure chest or the one living pearl, for his harem. Her adventures furnish thrills in plenty.

Charles Goddard, the author, has written many screen successes. Mollie King, besides playing the lead in "Mystery of the Double Cross," also took the lead in the features, "The-On-the-Square Girl" and "Blind Man's Luck." Leon Bary, who took an important part in "The Shielding Shadow" and in "Mystery of the Double Cross," was well and favorably known on the legitimate as Sarah Bernhardt's leading man.

SELIG K-E-S-E PRODUCTIONS.

The Selig Polyscope Company staged a complete circus on the studio lot, Chicago, Ill., last week. The circus was essential for certain scenes in "The Barker," a Selig Red Seal play, written by Charles K. Harris and released August 13 in K-E-S-E.

Hundreds of spectators were present to see Amy Leah Dennis, the 16-year-old leading lady for Lew Fields, do a trapeze "stunt." Lew Fields, just to show that he had not forgotten how, turned a few cart-wheels which were the envy of the small boys assembled. Many of the spectators became the circus "audience," Director J. A. Richmond pressing them into service.

The circus was transplanted complete to the Selig lot. There was the "big top," the sawdust rings, the clowns, the red-lemonade and everything. At first it had been planned to join some traveling aggregation, but no tented attraction was near enough and time was short. Then it was that Director Richmond organized a circus of his own and a good one, complete even to the stake-puller.

"The Barker" is classed by Lew Fields as his one best effort. It is not a comedy, but a heart-stirring drama, giving Mr. Fields many opportunities for talented work.

"A Trip to Chinatown" will be the Selig-Hoyt comedy release in K-E-S-E on August 20. This is one of Hoyt's best plays, and the Selig company promises that full justice has been done the various comic situations. Amy Leah Dennis, Wm. Fables and James Harris star. J. A. Richmond is the director.

THREE BLUEBIRDS ARE ADDED TO SCHEDULE.

Features in which Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon, Dorothy Phillips and Ella Hall will star on the Bluebird program have been awaiting definite title pending release dates. Decision has now been made and the list is completed until September 10, with still another feature, "The Face of Prentice Teller," in which Rupert Julian and Ruth Clifford will star, ready for release, but still awaiting definite caption.

"The Charmer" will return Ella Hall to the program, August 27, supported by Frank McQuarrie, George Webb, Frank McCandlas, Martha Mattox and Belle Bennett. With this production Jack Conway's term as Ella Hall's director came to an end. He created the feature from J. Grubb Alexander's story and Fred Myton's scenario.

"Triumph" will be the Labor Day Bluebird with Dorothy Phillips the star, and Lon Chaney and William Stowell chief in her support, although Director Joseph De Grasse plays an important role. Mr. De Grasse is an actor of the old school who made his mark upon the stage before going into pictures, but until now he has never appeared in the cast of a Bluebird. William Dyer, Claire DuBrey, Ruth Elder and Clyde Benson will also appear in Miss Phillips' support.

"A Stormy Knight" is the title selected for Franklyn Farnum and Agnes Vernon's last joint starring appearance September 10. Elmer Clifton used Waldemar Young's scenario of Jack Cunningham's story in producing this mystery drama and the support engages Hayward Mack, Jean Hersholt and Frank McQuarrie in the more prominent roles.

KING BEE'S NINTH RELEASE.

King Bee Films Corporation has barely been operating one hundred days, yet it is working on its ninth release, and has sold all its territory in the United States and other parts of the world. The star, Billy West, in that short time has achieved a degree of popularity that is nothing less than remarkable in one so new to the glories of the screen.

Week's Work at Fox Studios

Most of It Done by the Namesmith Who Titles Several New Pictures.

TITLES have been selected for three forthcoming William Fox productions. Virginia Pearson's next release after "Wrath of Love," now scheduled for August 5, will have the title, "When False Tongues Speak." Carl Harbaugh was the director. The picture has just been finished. George Scarborough, the noted playwright, wrote the story.

It has been decided to call Gladys Brockwell's new screen drama "The Soul of Satan." This will probably be a late August release. Bertram Grassby and Charles Clary have the leading roles among the supporting players. It is being directed by Otis Turner.

The third photoplay to get its name in the last week is that which stars the effervescent George Walsh. This production is being made under the direction of Richard Stanton, who began work on it a short time since. "The Yankee Way" has been chosen for it, as the film is a breezy, star-spangled comedy of thrills. The script is the joint product of "Big Ed." Sedgwick and Ralph Spence. Sedgwick himself has an important acting part in the feature. Seena Owen will make her initial appearance as a William Fox player in "The Yankee Way."

Jane and Katherine Lee, the William Fox "Baby Grands," will begin another light comedy drama this week, in which they have the spotlight honors. This will be the first of a series of eight productions by the famous Lee children. Their releases will be under the Standard Pictures array.

What promises to be one of the best comedies Mr. Fox has had is now in the making on the West coast. The principals are four of the most talented funmakers in picturedom. They are Hank Mann, Charles Conklin, Jesse Weldon and Rena Rogers.

Marcia Harris, who played in George Broadhurst's "Rich Man, Poor Man," last season on Broadway, has joined the William Fox forces for "Every Girl's Dream,'" June Caprice's new subject. Miss Harris will appear this Fall in Mr. Broadhurst's revival of "What Happened to Jones." She is equally well known upon screen and stage, as she has been prominent in the supporting casts of the most notable stars before the public.

"TRIUMPH" (Bluebird).

Dorothy Phillips will make her regular monthly appearance on the Bluebird program, September 3, presenting Joseph De Grasse's screen version of Samuel Hopkins Adams' story of that title, originally appearing in Collier's. Director De Grasse, who has produced a score of Bluebirds, makes his first appearance as an actor in "Triumph," playing an important role in the supporting company which, as usual, is headed by William Stowell and Lon Chaney.

"Triumph" is a story of the stage, opening with an amateur performance of "As You Like It," in which the Rosalind makes such a hit with herself and her flattering friends that she believes destiny calls her to the profesional stage. Thereafter "Triumph" takes on the character of a play within a play in which Miss Phillips is given opportunity for the display of her emotional talents in the interpretation of heavy melodrama that ends in a "trick finish" to surprise spectators into a final shout of laughter.

Scene from "Triumph" (Bluebird).

Fred Myton made the scenario from the original story. William Dyer has a strong role in the theatrical manager; Claire Du Brey will be the vengeful leading lady and Helen Wright plays the woman who keeps the watchful eye over the country Rosalind.

At Empire All-Star Studio

Many Productions Completed and Others Well Under Way—Leading Stars Featured.

EASTERN studios at which Charles Frohman's stage stars are at work on the picturization of Frohman stage successes for release through the Mutual Film Corporation are the scenes of greatest activity. Productions starring Edna Goodrich, Ann Murdock, Julia Sanderson and Olive Tell are well under way or completed, and the entire industry is looking forward with interest to the announcement of the first release.

It was stated at the time that arrangements were completed between John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual, and Alf Hayman, representing the Frohman interests, that the productions of the Frohman stars would not be released until at least three productions had been completed. That time is rapidly approaching, for two of the stars have virtually completed their third production and are ready to start on their fourth. There is every evidence that the productions will be released to exhibitors for early fall presentation.

Ann Murdock has completed "Outcast" from the story by Henry Hubert Davies, scenarioized by Anthony Kelly. "The Impostor," by Michael Morton and Leonard Merrick, and "The Beautiful Adventure," by Robert DeFlers, C. A. DeCaillavert and Ettienne Ray. All three productions were under the direction of Del. Henderson.

She is now at work on "My Wife," from the pen of Paul Gavault and Robert Chamay, under the direction of Del. Henderson, while her next production, "The Richest Girl," written by Michael Morton and Paul Gavault, will be directed by Albert Capellani.

Edna Goodrich has completed "Reputation" and "Queen X," and will soon have finished the last scenes of "A Daughter of Maryland." These productions have been directed by John O'Brien, while "American Maid," selected for her fourth picture, will be directed by Albert Capellani. "American Maid" was written by Julius Rothschild.

Olive Tell's first picture will be "The Unforeseen," by Robert Marshall, scenarioized by Charles C. Whittaker and directed by John B. O'Brien. Julia Sanderson is at work, under Del. Henderson's direction, on "The Runaway," by Pierre Weber and Henry DeGorsee, adapted from the French by Michael Morton and scenarioized by Joseph F. Poland.

EVA TANGUAY HAS NOTABLE SUPPORT.

Eva Tanguay has decided upon "The Wild Girl" as the title of her Selznick-Picture upon which she has been working for several weeks, and which is now well on the way toward completion. This is her first picture appearance, and exhibitors are displaying great interest in the film debut of the noted vaudeville star.

While Miss Tanguay's name alone is sufficient to carry any production to success, in "The Wild Girl" she is supported by a cast, several members of which have themselves been starred in pictures and vaudeville.

Principal of these is Stuart Holmes, one of the best-liked bad men in the amusement world. He has been starred for several years, and was available for the Tanguay picture only through the fact that he recently severed his connection with his previous management.

Another popular player in the cast is Miss Valerie Bergere. Like Miss Tanguay, this will be her first appearance in photoplays, but she has been a vaudeville headliner in dramatic acts for a decade. Tom Moore, leading man in the Constance Talmadge Selznick Picture, "The Lesson," is still another favorite who will support Miss Tanguay in "The Wild Girl."

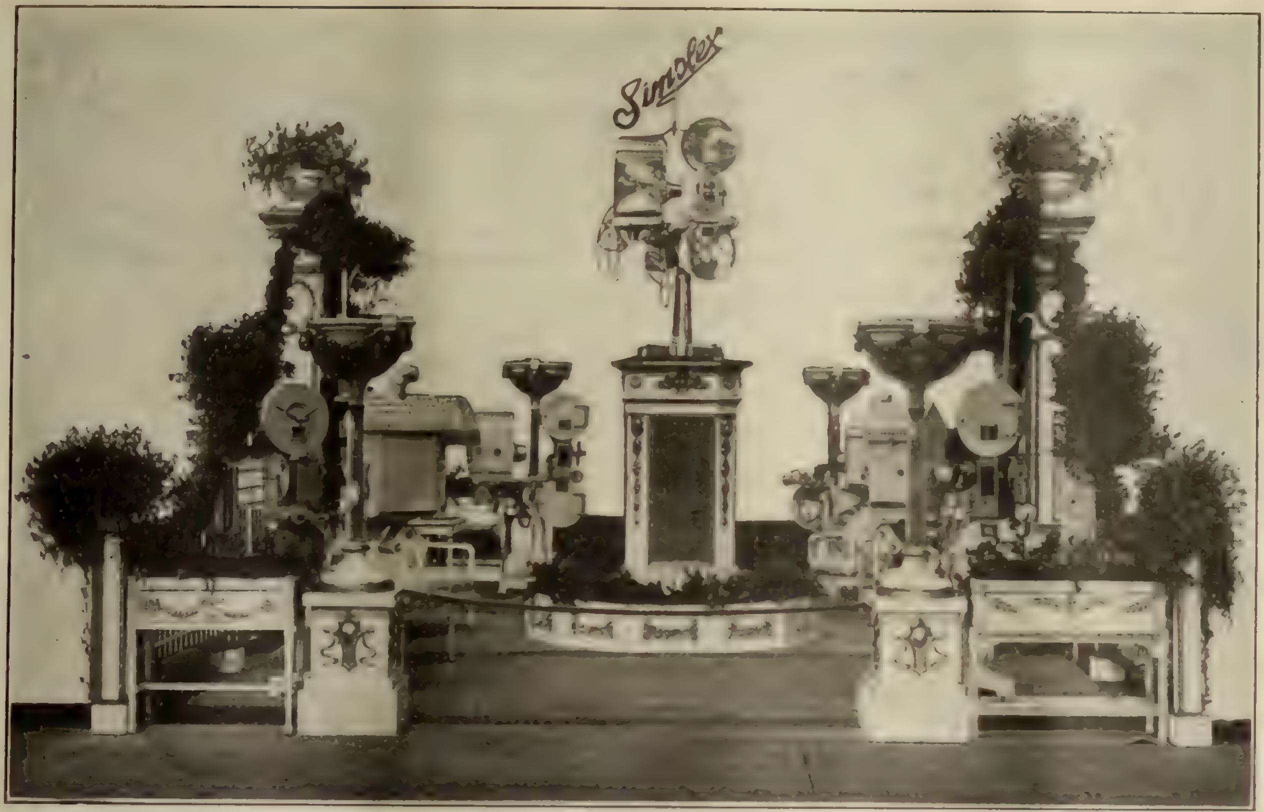
No date has been set as yet for the release of the picture, but it is expected that Director Howard Estabrook will "call it a day" by the second week in August, and begin assembling and titling his celluloid.

ANIMATED WEEKLY IS TIMELY.

Military subjects have been given prominence in the 83d issue of the Universal Animated Weekly, just released, but from the standpoint of timeliness, undoubtedly the pictures of the great swimming carnival recently held at Alameda, California, will arouse equal enthusiasm these sweltering days.

Norman Ross, known as the "human swan" for his gracefulness in the water, is shown winning the 220-yard dash in record time. Many other contestants are pictured disporting themselves in the briny in a way to arouse the envy of all indoor workers.

Other interesting events include Colonel Roosevelt's speech before the international convention of the Loyal Order of Moose at Pittsburgh; the big recruiting drive of the "Kilties," recently launched in the Middle West; the visit of a delegation of American Indians to the Battleship Recruit in Union Square, New York; intimate pictures of Captain Guyemer of the French Aviation Corps, the "Allies' greatest fighting hawk," and a series of hair-raising views of H. A. McLoughlin of Battery A, Field Artillery, formerly a circus acrobat, who now utilizes his talents by performing on the edge of fifteen-story buildings to gather crowds for recruiting orators.



THE Simplex display at the recent Chicago exposition was one worthy of the company and of the trade. To fitly represent one of the essential divisions of activity in the industry, the projection of moving pictures, the designer of the exhibit made movement the dominating note. The machine on the high pedestal in the center, with a cutout of the word "Simplex" over it, revolved continuously. Each of the bowls on the four other pedestals was an air fountain, in which a mass of yellow, red and purple ribbons were blown upward by a strong current of air, all of which was bathed in the beams of searchlights. The color scheme was baby blue and French ivory. The center machine was finished in burnished nickel. Greens and flowers were everywhere. Five machines, representing different types, were on exhibition; one of these was equipped with the new nitrogen electric lamp in place of an arc. Present representing the company were Edwin S. Porter, vice president, and his brother, E. M. Porter, general manager; Francis B. Cannock, secretary; L. W. Atwater, sales manager, and A. P. Lombard, representative.

French Pictures Showing Work of Airmen That Must Be Exhibited Without Charge—First Run Notes and Pictures That Are Expected Soon.

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford, Philadelphia, Pa.

French Aero Picture for Free Shows.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Official pictures of the French aerial service taken by the order of the French Government were shown for the first time in this country on City Hall Plaza last Wednesday and Thursday by the permission of Dr. Francis Holley, director of the Bureau of Commercial Economics, of Washington, D. C., and by arrangement with the Evening Telegraph-Press newspapers.

Chief McLoughlin and all of the public officials of the City of Philadelphia heartily approved the showing of the aviation pictures, with the idea of arousing an interest in the flying service.

Over 10,000 people were present to see the pictures of the aeroplanes in flight and in fighting action. Huge squads of machines were seen in the air at once going through the most dangerous of evolutions. Battle lines of the enemy positions were shown, and the loading of the camera onto a machine.

Owing to the ruling of the French high commission these films must be shown free to the public, thereby preventing them from being exhibited by the local theaters.

Ambassador Jusserand and Captain Amaury de la Grange, of France, were present during the first performance in company with high city officials and several of the most prominent newspaper men of this city.

First Runs Noticed in Philadelphia.

Philadelphia, Pa.—First run photoplays to be seen were introduced the week of July 30 at the Stanley, with Pathe's "Vicar of Wakefield," featuring Frederick Warde, who was amply praised by all the newspapers.

At the Arcadia, Charles Ray in "Sudden Jim" was presented for the entire week.

At the Palace, Valeska Surratt in "Wife Number Two" made a good impression.

At the Victoria "The Slacker," with Emily Stevens in the leading role, was praised, and did a big business.

At the Strand, Alice Brady in the "Self-Made Widow" shared honors with Mary Anderson and Antonio Moreno in the "Right of Possession."

Mary Pickford in her latest success, "The Little American," was shown for three days at the Leader and Coliseum, also at the West Philadelphia and the Germantown theaters.

"Baby Mine" Coming to the Stanley.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Madge Kennedy in "Baby Mine" was given a private showing last Friday night at the Palace theater. A large number of exhibitors attended the exhibition of this Goldwyn production, and were entirely pleased with the performance.

The first local presentation of "Baby Mine" will be made at the Stanley theater during the early part of September. It will then be boked over the Stanley Booking Corporations' circuit.

Immediately after the private show, which ended about one o'clock a. m., Abe Einstein joined Jeanne Felt, who made a bee line for the shore in his new Mercer Car.

Star Theater at Millinocket Sold.

MILLINOCKET, ME.—Messrs. Main & Raymond, proprietors of the opera house at Patten, have just acquired of George Ferland the Star theater at Millinocket, and are operating it. Mr. Raymond is managing the Millinocket house, while Mr. Main is in charge of the fortunes of the original theater at Patten. The Millinocket theater is opening with "New Stingaree" and "American Girl" features, and fillers, all from the Bangor office of the General Film Company.

G. B. Churchill Buys Home at Ft. Fairfield.

Fort Fairfield, Me.—George B. Churchill has bought from David A. Hone the Park theater of Fort Fairfield and has opened with fillers and three serials from the Bangor General Film office. The serials include "Grant, Police Reporter," "O. Henry" and "American Girl"; also the "New Stingaree."

Bangor, Me.—Manager Charles M. Stern of the Universal branch in Bangor, is calling on the trade in western Maine by the Twentieth Century method—in his touring car. It's the coolest way these hot days, and Charles finds that he can get around quicker, not having to wait for trains or spend the night in a town with slight hotel accommodations.

Bangor, Me.—"The Easiest Way," at the Park theater last week, starring Clara Kimball Young, whose beauty in films is no less than startling, held audiences through its eight reels. Pictures longer than five reels are generally not popular in Bangor, but when they are of superlative quality, the longer they are the better people like them. Clara Kimball Young's name generally means a good-sized house around the Queen City of the East.

Bangor, Me.—Bangor theaters, the Nickel, Park, Bijou and Graphic, are now using between them all the output of the Bangor office of the General Film Co.

Baltimore News Letter.

J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Ter., Baltimore, Md.

Auditorium Opens With "Redemption."

BALTIMORE, MD.—It is very interesting to note that one of the large theaters in Baltimore which runs the International circuit's attractions has started off its season, Monday, August 6, with the large photoplay, "Redemption," featuring Evelyn Nesbit and her son, Russel Thaw. Manager L. B. McLaughlin of this playhouse returned from his vacation on July 28, and seemed very enthusiastic over the coming season. The Auditorium has been completely renovated during the closed summer period and upon opening in the fall its patrons will be ushered into a beautiful house.

Trade Showing of "The Honor System."

Baltimore, Md.—On Sunday night, July 29, about four hundred people, including the exhibitors of Baltimore and their friends, assembled at the New theater, 210 West Lexington street, to witness the premiere view of the big ten-part Fox feature, "The Honor System." The affair was held at this playhouse through the courtesy of L. A. DeHoff, the manager, who, as usual, did all he could to make the affair a success and went so far as to have his full orchestra, under the direction of Professor E. V. Cupero, furnish beautiful music for the occasion. The arrangements for the affair were made by Carl F. Senning, Washington manager of Fox; A. C. Melvin, Baltimore Fox representative, and Sam Myers, of the Fox New York office. It could be very readily seen that this powerful drama made a direct impression on those present.

Strand Theater Will Improve.

Baltimore, Md.—It is now announced by Bernard Depkin, Jr., supervising manager of the Parkway interests, that the Strand theater, 404-6 North Howard street, will be closed down on Monday, August 13, due to extensive renovations and improvements which are to be made. This playhouse, when it is reopened to the public, probably on September 10, will be under the direct control of the Parkway Theater company, and a skillful manager will be placed in charge. Among the improvements are an enlargement of the organ, lobby rearrangement with the ticket office taken from the center and built into the side, heavy red velvet carpet will cover the floors, new plush old rose curtains will be hung, a brilliant new electric sign will augment the exquisite exterior, and big features will be shown.

H. A. Roubert Joins Goldwyn.

Baltimore, Md.—H. A. Roubert, who formerly was associated with the Mutual office in Washington, has now joined the Goldwyn forces and will cover the Baltimore territory. Recently Manager Bradley of the Washington Goldwyn office introduced Mr. Roubert to the Baltimore boys.

BISON CITY NEWS.

With the K-E-S-E Men.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Unafraid of sunstrokes, Louis Green, manager of the K-E-S-E, Buffalo, is campaigning in Syracuse and Binghamton. His new assistant is G. H. Montgomery, formerly connected with the company's executive offices in Chicago. L. A. Schaefer of the local exchange will tour between Binghamton and Watertown. Harry Scott, of the K-E-S-E, was a Buffalo visitor.

M. D. Weinberger Says State Rights Field Will Improve.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Mack D. Weinberger, manager of the Rosetwig Feature Films, Buffalo, is making a trip through New York State. He has been in the exchange business for years. He predicts that the state rights field will be better than ever this fall. The same prediction was made by others interviewed by the representative of the Moving Picture World.

Popular Exchange Invites the Exhibitor.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Mr. Exhibitor, if you find while making the rounds of the Buffalo exchanges, that you want to write a letter or do a little planning in regard to your booking you won't need to go to a hotel to accomplish this. Just step into the new "rest room" being opened by the Popular Cinema exchange at 43 West Swan street. You may use the company's writing material to your heart's content, and unless you want to talk to New York or intermediate points the telephone will be at your disposal. "No Smoking Allowed" signs will be absent from the walls, and you may light your cigarette as you dope out your plans for the rest of the day. You will find the place absolutely "dry," and poker and war talk will be tabooed. You may use the Popular's "rest room" as a clearing house, where, with other busy exhibitors like yourself, you will be privileged to discuss pictures from every angle. If you are inclined to argue, better keep your temper while in the room, because police headquarters is nearby. This "rest room" will be as welcome as any at the local department stores, but will be minus the maid service. The place will be like a den, with an electric fan in the summer and steam radiator in the winter, but there will be no steins to take your mind off your work. Picture men say these are passe since the passage of the Brown bill.

Film Trade Board Organized in Cleveland

Moving Picture Distributors Board of Cleveland Chamber of Commerce Is Formed —New Officers Chosen and What the Body Aims to Do.

From M. A. Malaney, 218 Columbia Bldg., Cleveland, O.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—The exchange men of Cleveland, most of them, have organized an association in connection with the Chamber of Commerce, which is known as the Moving Picture Distributors' Board of the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce.

At a meeting held last Thursday at noon the final details of organization were worked out and officers were elected as follows:

President, E. A. Eschmann, of the World Film corporation; vice-president, J. E. Flynn, of the General Film company; treasurer, J. R. Johnson, of the Greater Vitagraph company; secretary, Munson Havens, who also is secretary of the Chamber.

It is the purpose of the organization to work for the best interests of the industry, especially as it relates to the progress of moving pictures in a business way. One of the first matters to be treated is the poor express service. Any action taken by this board will have the full backing of the entire Chamber of Commerce, and the exchange men expect to see that better service is given them at once.

No Movie of Johnny Kilbane.

Cleveland, O.—Blasted are the hopes of certain film promoters of Cleveland, who were just getting ready to make a feature, starring Johnny Kilbane the champion featherweight fighter of the world.

The explosion occurred Wednesday night, July 25. A right hook to the chin, five counts from the referee, the gong and a towel in the ring. No movie play.

When Benny Leonard rapped Johnnny on the jaw in the third round of their battle in Philadelphia it may not have taken away Johnny's featherweight honors, but it put an end to a fine movie project. If Johnny had knocked the lightweight champion out and thereby became a double champion, the picture would have been made.

Robert McLaughlin, a playwright, had his typewriter and two fingers ready to pound out a scenario, while a well-known Cleveland man was fingering the greenbacks to pay the expenses of the picture. Then came the third round and the two went home to sleep and dream of a fortune gone glimmering.

Carl F. Miller, Manager of Strand.

Fremont, Ohio.—One of the most prominent exhibitors of the state of Ohio is Carl F. Miller. He has operated theaters here for many years and only recently took over the Strand, the city's finest house.

Carl F. Miller.

Mr. Miller formerly was a writer for amusement papers, his pen name being "Sour Guy," under which he wrote some very amusing "hick" showman's letters. He is now a success as manager of the Strand at Fremont and has a host of friends both among the film men and patrons who frequent his theater. He believes in finding what the people want and providing just that. He is laying the foundation of substantial success on this principle.

Cleveland Film Men in First Call.

Charles C. Hall, manager of the Atlas Film company, Standard theater building.

Frank Denol, operator at the Mall theater.

Although drafted, J. S. Jossey, exchange man, had previous to the draft applied for admittance to the officers' reserve corps and expects to pass the examination.

R. N. Morris Leaves Mutual for Famous Players.

Cleveland, O.—R. N. Morris, son of "Battleship" Morris, has resigned from the Cleveland Mutual exchange to take a position with the new Famous Players branch in that city. He was with the Mutual as booker for three years and will be booker for the Famous.

Plaza Theater Goes Back to Former Owner.

Cleveland, O.—J. H. Simpson, who recently took over the Plaza theater, has relinquished that house to the former owner, Mr. Dessauer, and now will devote all his time to his Ideal theater.

Famous Players Cleveland Office Much Alive.

Cleveland, O.—The Cleveland office of the Famous Players company is now operating in full blast. The publicity department, which was transferred from Pittsburgh to Cleveland, has arrived, and Publicity Director Moorhouse says his force will show some unusual and active advertising work in this district.

Mr. Moorhouse used to work in Cleveland on afternoon newspapers and is therefore acquainted with the editors and employees of these sheets.

Exhibitor M. C. Flahaven Weds.

Cleveland, O.—M. C. Flahaven, manager of the Crawford theater, was married last week to Miss Clara Bleicher. Mr. Flahaven is one of the best known exhibitors of Cleveland.

Hot Wave and Sand Flies Close Theaters

Several Western New York Theaters Have Closed Till Better Weather—Taking the Time to Paint and Restore Appearance of the Houses.

By Joseph McGuire, 157 North Elmwood St. Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Several theaters in Buffalo and western New York have closed their doors, and will reopen about September 1. The extreme "humility," as one humorist expressed it, is given as one of the causes. "Fish" or "sand" flies, said to be more numerous than the combined armies of Europe, also have descended onto this territory, and theater lobbies have not been immune from attack. These pests are so ubiquitous and have such a faculty of settling on the backs of film fans that they—the flies—and the soaring mercury have convinced more than one exhibitor that it is time to shut up shop. Patrons of pictures were extra loyal to their favorite houses during June and the greater part of July, but now many prefer to enjoy the rest and recreation and refreshing breezes of the nearby lake and river summer resorts, where the airdomes are in full swing. Buffalo's weather man denies that it is hot. He says the heat exists only in the people's imagination. He is a man of veracity, so the sweltering occupants of the moving picture booths, the ushers and even the managers meet his assertion with courteous silence.

A Time for Making Things Bright.

Several of the houses which have closed will be made spic and span before Labor Day. When the patrons return next month they will find that their appetites for pictures have been whetted by the four weeks past, and "business as usual" will be the rule. The larger theaters, which maintain a "year-round-open" policy, are in no way curtailing their expensive services. Several of the houses are successful in being kept really cool. It is also a fact that right in Buffalo there are thousands who would want to go to the picture shows even if Hades-like heat swept over the city. Therefore the theaters that do keep open this month are not losing money.

Buffalo, N. Y.—"The Slacker," a timely title, now that the exemption boards are getting into action, is drawing good business at the Strand, Buffalo.

Washington Exchanges at Tri-State Show

Many Local Distributors Engage Space at the Big Exposition at Ocean View, Aug. 30, 31 and Sept. 1—Need of a Get-to-Gether.

By Clarence L. Linz, 622 Riggs Bldg., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—A large majority of the exchange managers of Washington have signed up for space for exhibits at the coming convention of the motion picture exhibitors of North and South Carolina, Virginia, and the District of Columbia, at Ocean View, Va., August 30-31-September 1. This convention, or it may be called a conference of exhibitors, will be held independent of any organization now existing. It is planned that a tri-state organization shall be the outcome of this convention, and here again the organization will be entirely independent of the old or new national associations.

For some time past, according to the men who are backing this plan, there has been a very noticeable need of some sort of a body that would bring the men who are in business in this immediate locality into closer co-operation one with the other for the handling of questions that are more of "local" interest.

The convention will start on August 30 and run through Saturday, September 1. The meeting will be concluded with a ball that will be attended by some of the moving picture stars, Governor Stuart, of Virginia, and many notables from Old Point Comfort, Norfolk, and there will probably be plenty of gold buttons in view of the large number of officers and soldiers on duty nearby. The exhibits will be in the pavilion, and will consist of exchange displays and those of the accessory men.

The men backing this project include Jake Wells, Harry Bernstein, Harry Crandall, Guy Wonders, Percy Wells, and Harry B. Varner.

Capital City Vacation Notes.

Washington, D. C.—Joseph P. Morgan, manager of the Savoy theater, and associated with Harry M. Crandall in his various enterprises in this city, and Maurice Davis, of the M Street theater, are taking their first vacation. They have gone to Atlantic City for a short stay, and will then journey to Paterson, N. J., the former home of Mr. Morgan, and to New York City, the former home of Mr. Davis. It is the intention of Messrs. Morgan and Davis to go to other cities where they will visit the motion picture theaters with a view to getting an idea of that which is considered most up-to-date in theater management and construction.

Arthur Robb, manager of the Garden theater, is away on a two weeks' vacation which will take him to Chicago and other cities in the middle west, and will join Mrs. Robb, who is already there. During his absence George Schneider, who is looking after the Moore properties in this city, will look after Mr. Robb's work.

Tom Moore, who operates a string of theaters in this city, accompanied by Mrs. Moore, has returned from a three weeks' trip to the West coast.

Linz Now Has His Hands Up.

Washington, D. C.—If things keep on the way they have during the past week the city postmaster will have to put on a couple of extra mailmen, the Washington office of the Moving Picture World will have to install a telephone switchboard, and employ a half dozen or more good-looking girls, and a suite of offices will have to be rented as a temporary measure of relief of the tense situation that has resulted from the story unthoughtfully, perhaps, written by the Washington representative of this paper.

It came about like this. Four or five of the Washington exchanges and others from time to time have had some little difficulty in securing a sufficient number of men to properly handel their business in this territory. Individually and collectively they poured their troubles into the willing listening ear of our correspondent—result—one perfectly good story sent broadcast over the land, bringing applications for jobs from the North, the South, the East, and even the far West, and still they are coming.

To the stranger to the business it would look as if every film man in the country was out of a job. If every Washington exchange manager should suddenly lose all their men they could not begin to employ all the candidates whose applications reached the Washington office of the Moving Picture World the first two days after the story started to take effect. If the recipient of all these letters should answer them individually he would have to employ a force of stenographers that would rival any one of the Government departments, and the worst of it is the stenographers are scarce, but please, if you are a stenographer, don't send your application to the Washington office, because we are flooded already.

Seriously, the names of all of the men from whom applications were received have been placed before the film managers through their association, and will be kept on file for reference. It may be said that not only was the World's Washington office supplied with several mail sacks full of applications, but many of the exchanges also received anywhere from a dozen to two dozen applications in addition.

As a closing line, the writer, with his hands up, asks relief. If you are a film salesman and you want a job please wait until you see the notice appear again before writing; if you are an exchange manager in the market for help, please apply to your brother exchange managers in this or in any other territory, because if you do not, there will be no news in the Washington column in the succeeding issues.

North Carolina News Letter.

Paul V. Phillips Now Traveling For Vitagraph.

WILMINGTON, N. C.—Paul V. Phillips, formerly manager of the Paris and Strand theaters at Durham, North Carolina, and vice-president of the North Carolina Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, is now calling on the theaters in this territory for Greater Vitagraph, Mr. Phillips having accepted a position with the Washington Vitagraph exchange to cover the territory formerly handled by Alan J. Bachrach, who has been called to the colors as a member of a Washington recruited unit. Mr. Bachrach enjoyed the confidence and friendship of an undivided clientele throughout North Carolina, who were sadded to learn that he would come through no more, but in Mr. Phillips, Vitagraph has obtained another popular young man who will undoubtedly prove a worthy successor to Mr. Bachrach.

Great Atlantic Feature Film in New Offices.

Wilmington, N. C.—The Great Atlantic Feature Film Company, Marx S. Nathan, manager, last week moved into large and more convenient offices in the Southern building, at Front and Chestnut streets, and is now in a better position to handle its rapidly growing business throughout the Carolinas.

J. B. Craver to Manage the Piedmont and Elm.

Greensboro, N. C.—J. Bryan Craver, formerly manager of the Broadway theater at Lynchburg, last week became manager of the Piedmont and Elm theaters here, succeeding C. F. Daniels, who will shortly take a road position. Mr. Craver is succeeded at Lynchburg by Mr. T. W. Ritch, a well known film and theater man formerly representative of the International Film Service in this territory. These theaters are all operated by the R. D. Craver Enterprises, of Charlotte, N. C.

"Diamond Dick" Anderson Has Met the Difficulties.

Charlotte, N. C.—Manager "Diamond Dick" Anderson, of the local Pathe exchange, has been laboring under many handicaps recently. First, their shipping clerk joined the army; second, the stenographer got married; the old cashier was transferred to Atlanta office; their poster clerk resigned to go in business for himself; the correspondence stenographer resigned, and the booking clerk was laid up for an operation on his ear. However, by an exercise of his resourcefulness, Manager Anderson is able to announce that they have "Met the enemy and he is theirn," and that they are handling record breaking bookings on "The Fatal Ring."

MORE BUFFALO NOTES.

Manager Sitterly's New Headquarters.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The new headquarters of the Popular Cinema, Inc., will have all the other equipments of an up-to-date exchange. The place was formerly occupied by the Pathe. John M. Sitterly is the manager. Miss L. M. Miney and Leo. Hager, representing the Unicorn, and H. E. Hughes are at the same address. Mr. Hughes is western New York representative of the Super Film Attractions Co., of Syracuse.

If Harry Dixon Goes They'll Get a Good One.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Harry Dixon, manager of the Sun moving picture theater, Buffalo, has been drafted. If Mr. Dixon goes to the front he will prove a boon companion to his comrades in the trenches during a lull in the fighting. For some time he appeared in vaudeville as a "bird imitator." Upholding the American Eagle therefore ought to come natural to him. He will also be able to contribute some peppery stuff to the trench magazines, because the Sun Theater Weekly, which he issued for some time, was replete with humor. This paper was fully described in these columns. If he is taken a prisoner his talent ought to ensure his good treatment.

Bison City Film Jottings.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Harry Marsey, general manager, has closed the Family theater, Buffalo. The house will be redecorated throughout, and will re-open at the end of the month under the name of the Rialto. This moving picture theater is centrally located on Lafayette Square. Features will be the policy as heretofore. The prices will be ten and twenty cents.

Heny Carr, manager of Shea's theater, Buffalo, recently had a detachment of the Third Artillery at his house. The boys stimulated recruiting and appeared in a sketch, "The Call to Arms."

"Birth" was recently presented at the Glen theater, Williamsville.

Insurance Men Argue for Fire Sprinklers

Indianapolis Experts Differ on Need of Automatic Fire Sprinklers in Exchanges— Methods in Exchanges of Chicago and Cincinnati May Be Followed.

By Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—Fire insurance experts and owners of motion picture exchanges in this vicinity are on the verge of a deadlock as a result of differing opinions regarding some of the precautionary provisions in the proposed new ordinance, governing the storage, handling and manufacture of motion picture films, which has been hashed and rehashed before the Indianapolis city council for the last three or four weeks.

The fire insurance experts are demanding that the exchanges should be equipped with automatic sprinklers, and the owners of the exchanges declare that if such a provision is inserted in the ordinance they will be forced to pay out money unnecessarily for fire protection. And thereby hangs the deadlock.

Fire insurance men who have been interested in the passage of the ordinance, which was introduced in the council a few weeks ago, say they have no selfish interest in demanding that the ordinance provide for the compulsory use of automatic sprinklers. They say that the money question does not enter into their contention, but that, they are thinking only of the safety of the public.

The differences between the insurance men and the owners of motion picture exchanges and theaters were aired two weeks ago before one meeting of the council, and a majority of the members of the city welfare committee, to which the ordinance was referred, favored the elimination of the provision that demands the use of automatic sprinklers. The exchange men point out that inasmuch as the committee has favored the elimination of the sprinklers, the insurance men should abide by the committee's decision. The insurance men, however, say that if the automatic sprinklers are used the difference in the fire insurance rates will pay for the sprinkling devices in a few years.

Jacob H. Hilkene, commissioner of public buildings, who prepared the motion picture ordinance with the help of E. M. Sellers, manager of the Indiana Inspection Bureau, and H. H. Friedley, state fire marshal, will leave in a few days on a trip to Cincinnati and Chicago, at the expense of the motion picture men, to ascertain what is being done in those cities to protect life and property by legislation to control the handling of motion picture films. Ordinances regulating this phase of the industry have been passed recently in Cincinnati and Chicago, it is reported.

L. H. O'Donnell Takes Well-Earned Vacation.

Washington, Ind.—L. H. O'Donnell, manager of the Grand theater here, who was one of the seventeen delegates from the Indiana state organization at the national convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America held at Chicago recently, has gone to Michigan to spend a few weeks with Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Padgett and Mr. and Mrs. Ben Burris, of this city, who are camping on one of the lakes in that section. Mr. O'Donnell is one of the most active exhibitors in the Indiana League.

"Little American" Attracts Great Crowds.

Hammond, Ind.—Hundreds of Chicago people flocked to this city last week to see the great Art Craft feature film, "The Little American," which was shown at the De Luxe theater. The film was prohibited from being shown in Chicago by Major Funkhouser, deputy superintendent of police, who said it might hurt the "sensibility of German-American citizens and arouse a feeling against the Germans."

Nearly every night the picture was shown at the De Luxe, traffic on the streets surrounding the theater was blocked by long lines of people who were waiting to buy admission tickets. Manager Michaelstetter was so well pleased with the picture and the crowds that he has decided to book it for a return engagement in the near future. The picture has since been shown at a private exhibition to 100 Chicago people, representing the city's official, civic and social life, and they ridiculed Funkhouser for his action.

Charles H. Sweeton Back from Chicago.

Evansville, Ind.—Charles H. Sweeton, manager of the Majestic theater, has returned from Chicago, where he attended the convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and other cities in the North. Mr. Sweeton reports that despite the hot weather the motion picture business in Evansville is still satisfactory.

Raymond Moore Opens Cozy Theater.

Winchester, Ind.—The Cozy theater here has been sold to Raymond Moore, of Union City, who will assume charge immediately. J. T. Kelley, former owner, is contemplating opening another theater in the winter.

Frank Heller Says He Enjoyed Convention.

Anderson, Ind.—Frank Heller, genial manager of the Starland and Meridian theaters, has returned from Chicago, Ill., where he attended the annual meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. Mr. Heller, who was one of the seventeen delegates from the Indiana state organization, reports that the convention was the liveliest one he ever attended. He said he enjoyed himself every minute of his stay.

Evansville, Ind.—Managers of motion picture theaters of this city are contemplating giving their patrons a "fast" on shows. It is their intention to hold shows only two days each week—on Saturdays and Sundays—during the extremely hot weather. However, no definite agreement has yet been reached.

Schedule of First Runs in Detroit

Moving Picture World Representative Inquires About First Run Bookings and Makes Up a List of Houses and Their Offerings.

DETROIT, MICH.—So many exhibitors have asked the World correspondent what the first-run situation is in Detroit that we are giving it herewith as it exists today.

The Madison theater has signed for the first twenty-six Goldwyn pictures; in addition it will show Metro, taking its selection.

The Washington theater is an open booking house, playing all big attractions as long as they "are in the money." No first-run has been signed for the Washington.

The Majestic theater has signed for K-E-S-E service, the contract calling for 52 pictures, pay or play, starting the last week in August. This doesn't necessarily follow that the Majestic need play every picture; they can show other pictures any time they wish by simply laying the K-E-S-E on the shelf. "The K-E-S-E is coming better and their pictures are excellent," said M. W. McGee, manager of the Majestic.

The Liberty theater will show Metro pictures, taking second pick following the Madison.

The Broadway-Strand is a Paramount theater starting around the first of September. This theater has booked 52 Paramount and Artcraft subjects, which means there is no room for outside attractions.

Gus Greening Will Run Majestic Theater.

Ann Arbor, Mich.—Gus Greening, at one time with the Sullivan-Considine circuit, and more recently as manager of the Oakland theater in Pontiac, has been appointed manager of the Majestic theater in Ann Arbor, by W. S. Butterfield. Frank O'Donnell, former manager there, has gone to the Majestic in Kalamazoo.

Harlan Starr Resigns Theater to Travel for Pathe.

Detroit, Mich.—We were all quite surprised this week with the announcement by M. Harlan Starr that he had resigned the management of the Madison theater, Detroit, to become city salesman for Pathe. Mr. Starr assumed his new duties on Monday, August 6. He will cover nearly one-half of the Detroit theaters. The Madison is the newest and finest of the John H. Kusky theaters.

Mr. Starr has been in Detroit for six years, starting in as manager of the Empire theater for A. J. Gilligham. After three years he went with John H. Kunsky as manager of the Liberty; later the Washington theater, and to the new Madison when it opened some months ago.

The desire to spend more time with his family and because he sees big opportunities in the selling end of this industry, are the reasons given by Mr. Starr for the change.

William Elliott Takes Management of Washington Theater.

Detroit, Mich.—William Elliott, formerly with Paramount in Detroit, and for some months with the Barnett Film Attractions, Detroit, has resigned to become manager of the Washington theater for John H. Kunsky. Mr. Elliott has spent his life in the amusement business, for a number of years as manager of traveling road attractions for Cohan & Harris. He also owns "Neptune's Daughter" for Michigan.

Mr. Elliott's going to the Washington means that Thomas D. Moule, now manager of the Alhambra, goes to the new Madison, while R. G. McGaw will go to the new Adams, which opens in September. No manager has yet been selected by Mr. Kunsky for the Alhambra.

Foursquare Gets Two Live Wires.

Detroit, Mich.—D. Leo Dennison, formerly with Paramount, has gone to Cleveland as manager of the M. H. Hoffman Foursquare Pictures, for which George W. Weeks of Detroit is division manager.

Sidney Alexander, leading Detroit attorney, and for some weeks in charge of the Palace theater in Saginaw, for the creditors, has taken to the road for George W. Weeks. He will make the big cities in the territory, such as Columbus, Toledo, Louisville, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, etc., looking after the first-runs.

"I believe both of these men are going to get results for Hoffman Foursquare Pictures," said Mr. Weeks. "The treatment they have already received from exhibitors convinces me that Hoffman Productions are going to go over with a bang."

Geo. Montgomery Gets Back His "Pep."

Detroit, Mich.—George N. Montgomery, manager of the Metro exchange in Michigan, has regained his health and is now after business with his old-time pep—and he is getting it. He is getting ready for a big fall drive, and especially on the new Charlie Chaplin pictures, which will be handled by his exchange in Michigan. Metro is extremely popular in Michigan, the best theaters showing their productions week in and week out.

W. W. Drum in Charge of Bluebird Exchange.

Detroit, Mich.—W. W. Drum is now in charge of the Bluebird exchange at Detroit, having for three years been in charge of World Film affairs on the Pacific coast.

Michigan Boys Honored by First Call.

Detroit, Mich.—Quite a number of Michigan boys are included in the first selective war draft. Among them: Harry D. Goldberg, agent for Lewis J. Selznick; A. I. Shapiro, Goldwyn manager; Harry Zapp, Goldwyn representative; Charles Davie, manager Bijou theater, Detroit; Edward Geller, film exchange manager, and George Custer, booker at the General exchange.

Heard Here and There in Detroit.

Detroit, Mich.—The Wolverine Feature Film Co., of Detroit, has filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy. A creditors' meeting has been called for August 7.

George W. Weeks, division manager for M. H. Hoffman Foursquare pictures, has established Detroit offices at 908-912 Peter Smith building, Detroit, telephone Main 2864. Later when the new film building is completed, George will have larger offices there.

"The Slacker" had its premier showing in Michigan the week of July 29 at the Washington theater, where it did a very good business, weather conditions taken into consideration. It is booked for a solid week at the Regent theater; also at the Liberty, and the Orpheum in Grand Rapids.

Toronto Theaters Plan for Week of Big Fair

Coming Canadian National Exposition, August 27-September 8, Will Bring Crowds to City and Exhibitors at the Beginning of Theatrical Season.

W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard Street East, Toronto, Ont.

TORONTO, ONT.—Although the patronage at moving picture theaters of Toronto has been keeping up very well despite the extremely warm weather, a number of the exhibitors are already giving considerable thought to the fall and winter season of 1917-1918. During these dog days Toronto people have been finding out that a good way to spend an evening in comfort is to attend a performance at a picture theater where the manager has spent some attention to details. Many local people have been heard to remark this summer that the interior of many of the picture houses is cooler than the lakeshore.

It is only in a very few suburban houses that the atmospheric conditions this summer have been unbearable, or nearly so. Improvement in some of these is being planned for next summer, because the managers have wakened to the fact that attention to the comfort of the patrons pays considerably in the long run.

B. S. Courtney of Toronto has leased Massey Hall, the largest auditorium in Ontario, for the two weeks of the Canadian National Exhibition August 27 to Sept. 8, for the presentation of "Intolerance" twice daily. Charlie Stevens of Super Features Limited Toronto will have the Grand opera house for at least one of the two weeks for the presentation of the screen play, "On Trial," and special efforts are being made by the Allen interests to open the new Allen theater, Toronto, during Exhibition time. The managers of both the Regent and Strand have made special plans for the Exposition period, while Manager Harry Pomeroy of the Photodrome will present Evelyn Nesbit's "Redemption" during the two weeks. Pomeroy will have a very special lobby display and the attraction will be advertised also by an elaborate automobile float. Other downtown theaters will be brightened up for the occasion.

The fifteen exchanges in Toronto are preparing to entertain many out of town visitors during the two weeks of the fair. The presence of outside managers is another reason why the excranges make it a point to have their best features booked at a local house during the two weeks. When the outside exhibitor arrives at an exchange he is taken over to some theater to see the picture for himself and to see the crowd that it draws, etc.

Morris Kashin Gets Rousing Send-off.

Montreal, Que.—A representative and very enthusiastic assemblage of moving picture men met at the St. Regis last week to give Morris Kashin, late of the Midway theater, a good send-off on his taking up an important position with the Fox Film company in New York. The occasion was quite a surprise to Mr. Kashin.

George Nicholas, manager of the Strand theater, was chairman and spoke in warm terms of the appreciation in Montreal of Mr. Kashin's work in initiating advanced methods of lobby display work. Mr. Kashin was generally liked not only in business, but in private circles, and it would be hard to find another man who could fill his position.

Maurice West, manager for the Fox Film company, on behalf of the moving picture men, presented Mr. Kashin with a gold watch suitably inscribed and a valise, at the same time wished Mr Kashin the best of luck in his new sphere of operations.

Mr. Kashin said he would never forget the kindness of the movie men in Quebec. He was glad they had appreciated the little he had done to push forward the main salient points in lobby display work. When exhibitors had grasped the real box office value of attractive display, and had discovered what display really was, there would be found a source of revenue which had been allowed to lie fallow.

The rest of the evening was spent in a convivial manner.

Toronto Council Increases License Fees.

Toronto, Ont.—The city council of London, Ont., has decided to increase the municipal fees for moving picture theaters from $80 per year to from $100 to $300 per year, according to seating capacity. A special committee of aldermen had decided upon a new scale of from $100 to $500 per annum, but when the matter was brought up for final vote a few days ago the council decided to make a reduction in the scale.

J. H. Flock, a local lawyer, representing the Grand and Majestic theaters, appeared before council to oppose the measure. He declared that the proposed increase meant a maximum advance of 500 per cent. He pointed out that the Grand was already paying $430 a year in license fees and an increase in the municipal tax would bring a real hardship upon this and other houses.

Girl Operators Not Careful.

Toronto, Ont.—A number of Toronto exchanges have engaged experienced operators for the inspection and repair of films to replace girls because exhibitors were complaining about the condition of comparatively new film. When men became somewhat scarce on account of enlistments in the army and because of the lure of munition work, the exchanges placed women in charge of inspection benches. The female labor has not proved satisfactory, it is declared.

Globe Films Moves Office.

Toronto, Ont.—Globe Films, Limited, distributor of Ivan productions and state rights features, has moved its headquarters from 56 King street west to the Rialto theater building, Yonge and Shuter streets. One of the special features which the Globe has secured is Evelyn Nesbit's "Redemption."

Maurice Kaufman has contracted with the B. F. Goodrich company of Akron, Ohio, for a series of one-reel subjects for Canada.

Regal Films in New Quarters.

Toronto, Ont.—The headquarters of Regal Films, Limited, one of the youngest exchanges in Canada, have been removed from 37 Yonge street, Toronto, to 21 Adelaide street west, where the three floors of the building have been taken over by the company. The Ontario business of the company will be handled at these premises.

Regal Films, Limited, has established a publicity and advertising department for the use of all exhibitors, and W. R. Greene, formerly of the Strand theater, is in charge.

This company has met with great success in connection with arrangements for the distribution of Goldwyn productions throughout Canada. S. Taube is looking after Goldwyn interests in the Ontario territory, and he secured contracts with the Regent, College Playhouse, Park and Doric theaters in Toronto within a few days. Goldwyn pictures will also be seen at the Patricia theater, the large new theater in London, Ontario.

One of the best hot-weather sellers in Toronto has been the "Masque of Life," the Canadian rights for which are held by Regal. This picture is booked solid in and around Toronto until November Peritz and Yochen have recently completed the Fren theater, and it was opened on the night of Sunday, August 5, under the most auspicious circumstances. Stewart Now on Deck to Go to Dallas.

New Orleans, La.—The penalty for doing good work in the New Orleans exchange field is to be sent to Dallas, Texas, by the home office. At least that is what has happened to more than one of the local managers who have shown good form in the securing of contracts and the efficient organization of their offices. The latest manager to be transferred to the Texas metropolis is Dan Callahan, who for several months has been in charge of the Southern Triangle Pictures Corporation exchange here. The Triangle business has enjoyed a healthful and steady increase in the New Orleans territory, and the reputation of the men who have been responsible for the increase has naturally spread. Hence Callahan's selection for another field that promises response to expert handling.

"Jack" Stewart.

"Jack" Stewart, who has been a most efficient salesman on the Triangle force, has been appointed to succeed Callahan in the New Orleans office, and he already has his forces organized and ready for a vigorous campaign. No manager knows the territory better than does "Jack" Stewart, and there are few that are more energetic in the pursuit of business.

Pastime Theater Reopens.

Alexandria, La.—The old Pastime theater in this city has been remodeled and reopened as a first-class motion picture theater, and its destinies will be in the hands of Frank Wilson, an experienced exhibitor from Denver, Colorado. The opening of the cantonment by the Government at this place has given the amusement business a great impetus, and it is fully believed that the remodeled theater will enjoy a most liberal patronage. It has been re-named the Strand, and the management asserts that only the best productions will be shown. The former owner of the Pastime was C. F. Bode, who disposed of his entire interest to the new manager.

New Hattiesburg Theater Nearly Ready.

Hattiesburg, Miss. — The Tri-State Amusement Company, of Meridian, Miss., is about to open a new motion picture theater in this city, and the building is very near to completion. The selection of Hattiesburg as a location for one of the Government cantonments has given the motion picture business a boom here, and the two theaters under the operation of A. J. Xydias will have opposition. The new theater will be under the management of C. R. Hatcher, an experienced motion picture exhibitor.

The Trymore Closes for Refurnishing.

New Orleans, La.—The Trymore theater, one of the suburbans in the uptown section of the city, has been closed for the purpose of undergoing repairs. It is now one of the best equipped neighborhood theaters in the city, having been provided with a new projection booth, a new machine of latest pattern, and other accessories that will add much to the pleasure of the patrons.

Loew to Open Theater in Chattanooga

Proposed Extension of Big Circuit Through the South Will Bring a New Theater to Chattanooga—Agreement with Alexander Pantages Circuit.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN.—In line with his plans to include fifteen cities in his Southern chain of theater holdings, Marcus Loew is perfecting arrangements to open a high class vaudeville and moving picture theater in Chattanooga at an early date. Mr. Loew's contributions to the Southern theatrical field already embrace such cities as Memphis, Birmingham, Atlanta, etc., with a new house under construction at Louisville, and an enlarged building to supplement the house now operating at Atlanta. In addition to the hundred Loew theaters now operating over the United States the expansion plans call for theaters to be erected in numerous Southern cities, including New Orleans, Montgomery, Houston, San Antonio, Dallas, Little Rock, Oklahoma and Tulsa.

E. A. Schiller, manager of theaters in Memphis, Atlanta and Birmingham, was in Chattanooga a few days ago on business connected with the establishment of the new house, and after leaving this city paid a visit to Mr. Loew in Chicago to talk over the local situation. While in Chattanooga, Mr. Schiller made the statement that the Chattanooga house, as well as the majority of the others, will remain open fifty-two weeks in the year. One of the principal objects of opening so many theaters in the South is to break the long jumps for his vaudeville acts, and thus minimize expenses.

With regard to cut-throat competitive tactics in connection with the Chattanooga theater, Mr. Schiller said: "I do not anticipate that there will be any competitive trouble. Mr. Loew is not entering any Southern city with such an idea. He proposes to devote the entire energies and resources of his organization toward giving the public the best possible entertainment in the picture and vaudeville line for the money."

The Loew interests have formed a working agreement with the Alexander Pantages circuit, which latter chain of theaters operates west of the Mississippi River. Shows will be exchanged with one another, thereby forming one of the largest theatrical syndicates in the world.

Jackson Theaters Giving Money's Worth.

Jackson, Tenn.—The Lyric theater is gaining the reputation of being one of the most liberal moving picture houses in the South. Eight reels and a little vaudeville is occasionally run as the program, all for ten cents.

Nashville, Tenn. — Manager Carson Bradford, of the Strand, was one of the few managers in this section to attend the Chicago Convention this year. Arrangements have been made for the Birmingham News to handle all collections for this section of the South.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.
